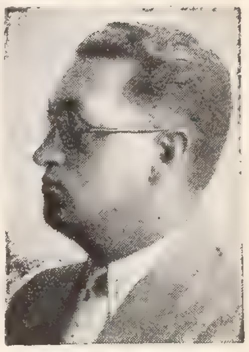
MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor



OHIO PERSONALITIES!

WE have made many pilgrimages into the field during the past four years but we doubt whether any of them can compare with the trip to Ohio last week and the many fine showmen we encountered on this trip.

Elsewhere in this week's issue we have expressed ourselves somewhat frankly on the subject of Nat Holt's RKO Ohio Division. Those who read it may think they had me in a smoke-screen. Well, if that's the thought, forget it. Everything we said was exactly how we felt after spending five of the most interesting days that one could ever hope to spend sizing up things at first hand.

Arriving in Cincinnati before noon we repaired to the divisional offices of RKO where we started off by getting acquainted with the home office crew. Clem Pope was our first surprise because this was another of those occasions where we had painted a mental picture that was just out of tune. Instead of a thin, middle aged man we found a robust (O.K., Clem?), good natured young chap (as years go) and a thoroughly capable showman who can bat for Nat Holt whenever business takes that individual into the territory or to the wild city of New York.

Having admired their ads for several years it was only natural that we should want to see who was responsible for them. E. V. Dinerman seems to be the head man and he is ably assisted by Ray Milholland in charge of the art department. Seems like we met this guy Milholland on our coast trip several years ago while visiting with Frank Whitbeck. Ray has some sweet newspaper advertising ideas that improve by the time they go to the engravers. Jimmy Gridley aids him in this work as does Lou Kozal; and, just in case you don't know it, Lou seems to be pretty good at creating more than good newspaper advertising, as witness that pair of swell looking twins. Send us the recipe, Lou. Thanks.

By the time the clock struck twelve-thirty everyone of the local RKO boys were in the office and we met them individually and collectively until we adjourned to the gorgeous Netherlands Hotel, and what a hotel. It would fit right on our own Waldorf Astoria site without anyone noticing the difference. Up to a private dining room where we gathered around an immense table to pack in the well-known food. (Poor Nat's expense account took it on the chin again.)

Looking back on this friendly and pleasant gathering we are prompted to compare it with a similar gathering not so long ago when we accepted another circuit's invitation to spend a day with their outfit. On this former occasion there was a noticeable lack of esprit de corps; the men questioned the writer concerning other divisions, apparently not too well satisfied with general conditions in their own.

However, this WAS different and we enjoyed every minute with the crowd which includes, besides Holt, Cliff Boyd of the Albee Theatre and as slick a showman as one would care to meet any time. Cliff was in rare good humor, probably due to the standee business the Albee was doing with Gene and Glenn of radio fame in the midwest. In these days anything resembling stand-out business is nothing short of a miracle.

Others at the lunch representing the Cincy theatres were: Bill Hastings of the Lyric, Many Shure of the Palace, Harry Schrieber of the Grand, Joe Alexander of the Family and Joe (Constable) Goetz of the Paramount out in Peebles Corners. From the office we also noticed these other hungry showmen; M. Whitman, assistant to "Diney" Dinerman and Buddy Winthrop, in charge of Cincinnati exploitation.

Altogether, the RKO men in this town were by far the most peppy crew we had met in some time, especially among the circuits. They were entirely free from that worried "circuit" look that seems to haunt most men working in larger outfits. To this I give credit to Nat Holt for the fine organization he has built up around him and the hard work the boys themselves are doing to justify Nat's faith in them.

Before taking leave of Cincinnati we must mention one of the most amusing characters we have met in a long, long, time. He is "Doc" Woody and he operates the UFA Theatre in that city. "Doc", it would seem, is suffering from an acute case of picture shortage but manages to keep his shootin' gallery running nevertheless. He did let us in on one of his gigantic stunts that, if worked according to description, ought to bring enough customers to the UFA to keep him in cigarette money for months to come.

He has booked the new Technocracy reel and made a tie-up with the Westinghouse people in St. Louis for the loan of Mr. Televox, that eighth wonder mechanical man who can do most anything that a human can do, perhaps a wee bit better than us humans, too. In addition to using Mr. Televox for ballyhoo purposes, it was his idea to bring the mechanical man out on the stage after each showing of the Technocracy reel and march him to the center of the stage. "Doc" informed us that the talking arrangement of the mechanical man is done by means of a "gramaphone" record. So, he was going to have a special record made and when Mr. Televox was before the audience he would have the attendant ask the mechanical man what he thought of the new Technocracy idea and said mechanical man would answer with a long and healthy raspberry. If your imagination won't stand you in good stead as to just how this will work we recommend you to "Doc" himself or even Nat Holt, who can give an excellent demonstration. Line forms on the right.

DAYTON!

In this swell looking city we had the pleasure of meeting Jim Weed, City Manager and one of the real old-timers in show-business. Jim can "tell you when" and, what's more, back it up with proof. Little has transpired in this crazy business of ours that Weed has not known about. He looks after the Keith's and Colonial Theatres with the latter house under the direct supervision of Round Tabler Millard Blaettner, a showman who will make his mark unless we miss our guess. Blaettner has some real money-making ideas and knows how to put them into effect. The way he tackled the rural trade suggestion advanced by Holt showed that he appreciated a good slant when he sensed it.

Eddie's Scrapbook!

Eddie Yarbrough looks after the publicity and advertising for this city and handed us one of the big surprises of the trip when we went through his scrapbook. At first we had him sized up as "just another guy," but we admit the error and apologize. He is a real space grabber and can prove it by the tremendous amount of linage he secures day in and day out for the two Dayton houses.

Eddie had some real pointers to offer regarding the Round Table Club and its possible improvement and we shall certainly give them plenty of serious consideration in the hopes of working out something that will please him as well as all other publicity men who would like to make our pages more helpful and interesting.

At this moment he is putting the finishing touches to a Spring Fashion Reel idea that will be described in more detail in our section within the next week or two. Sufficient to say at this time that it will be something well worth looking into and trying yourself. Thanks for the dope, Eddie, and don't forget your promise to keep in touch with us.

The Sign Shop!

The RKO Dayton Sing Shop is another indication of Holt's fine organization. Here is a small crew turning out unusually fine work and functioning like a big city shop in every detail. Especially interesting was the silk stencil idea for making up large quantities of the same style lettering. After the stencil has been made they can turn out signs at the rate of about three a minute in as many colors as the original layout called for. The idea may be old, but we must confess that it was brand new to us and we marveled at the efficiency of the men in this shop.

While on the subject of sign shops we go back for a moment to the Cincinnati situation where contrary to general circuit custom, Holt has a separate sign shop for each of the larger theatres. At first you may condemn this idea as being much too extravagant, but intimate association with the idea will soon reveal that it costs not one cent more than the usual central sign shop and has the more important advantage of being about to give all theatres sufficient individuality in their fronts to make it even more worth while.

Competitive Effort!

Instead of a chief sign man trying to think up six different fronts for six different houses, they have six individual men who are constantly striving to outdo the others and make "their" theatre front the best. You can well imagine the result of this idea and the unusually fine looking fronts that RKO is giving Cincinnati with every change of show. We heartily recommend the idea in place of the Central Sign shop. Inject some new and novel ideas into your theatre fronts and get away from that doggoned sameness which is generally associated with one shop functioning.

A midnight supper with all of the local boys completed our acquaintance with this city and after a much needed night's rest we were off early the next morning for the next stop on our visiting excursion.

FRANKLIN, TO STUART, TO HOLT. REAL TEAMWORK!

Engendering a feeling of perfect harmony and functioning in such a manner that they have practically eliminated every objectionable feature generally associated with circuit operation, the RKO executives from the home office right through to the house managers are giving in this particular division a demonstration of how a circuit can and should operate so as to gain the maximum in results.

Holt has often raved about the fine treatment and cooperation accorded him from his superiors, H. B. Franklin and Herschel Stuart, and, in turn, passes along the same treatment and cooperation to everyone of the boys in his territory. There is a complete absence of boss and underling here. Rather, a spirit of men getting together and pulling for a common good. How well they succeed can be judged from their being in the black.

Holt respects the judgment and ability of his men and they show their appreciation by working with him one hundred per cent. Which is as it should be. At any rate, the three days spent in Holt's company showed me that RKO had found a way to draw the teeth out of circuit operation and put their men on a footing with the executives of their company. For which RKO is to be congratulated and every man fortunate enough to be one of this remarkably fine organization. "CHICK"

COLUMBUS!

This was a mighty familiar city to your humble correspondent. We've been in and out of it so often that we can almost claim it for our home town. (We said, "almost.") At any rate, it's a swell town and one of these days it is going to return to its own as a gold-mine for theatres. Right now, as may be expected, it is going through the same pains and aches as all other spots. But the theatres are ace houses, even the independent Neth houses, and the residents of this city may well be proud of the many fine playhouses from which they may select their entertainment.

The RKO crew in this town is made up of Horton Kahn, city manager and directly supervising the big, beautiful Palace Theatre. Lou Hollet looks after the Majestic and certainly seems to be doing a fine job of it. Then, they have Arden Strang on the publicity and advertising and if it won't make him self-conscious we must admit that he's the type we like. Quiet, unassuming and giving one the feeling that he may not make an awful lot of noise about it, but will get his share of what he started after. From what we hear, this description suits him admirably. He is getting some fine newspaper breaks for the RKO houses in this city and giving them good representation all the time.

Coming Soon!

Kahn has started one of the most novel gags we have happened across in some time and we shall give it to you in full detail within the next few weeks. It is known as "Studio Preview Night" and struck us as being unusually effective. While it had only been worked twice up to the time of our visit, it shows definite signs of building up to real big money proportions. Watch for the dope on this one, boys; it will be worth your while.

The RKO houses in this city also are taking on that "Franklin" appearance which we commented upon so often in chronicling our reactions to theatres on the Pacific Coast two years ago. They are neat, smoothly serviced without overdoing it and function like any well run theatre should.

A Chat With Pete Wood!

Despite limited time we managed to run across the street and visit with Pete Wood, energetic business manager of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio. Pete, as always, is championing the cause of the independents and trying his best to lighten their burdens. As in many other spots, Ohio is none too sweet for the independent, but from all indications they are coming back into their own.

More about Pete and Ohio Persnalities in next week's issue, when we will cover Akron, Youngstown and Cleveland.

"Man Against Microbe"

¶ For uncounted centuries Death walked with Mystery. Health was a matter of magic and charms. Disease was the ill humor of spirits and devils, and pestilences were the wrath of the gods. The span of life was short and the average man died in his real youth.

¶ After the magicians, the soothsayers and the alchemists came the beginnings of science. Just three hundred years ago a clever Dutchman, a lens grinder, fashioned a crude microscope and began to look into things in an unseen world.

¶ The past had prayed for miracles, and now Science was started on the way toward realizing them. The greatest drama in the history of all mankind began. The story has been recorded for the screen in an absorbing one reel picture without advertising — and propaganda only for health.

Now available to motion picture theatres.

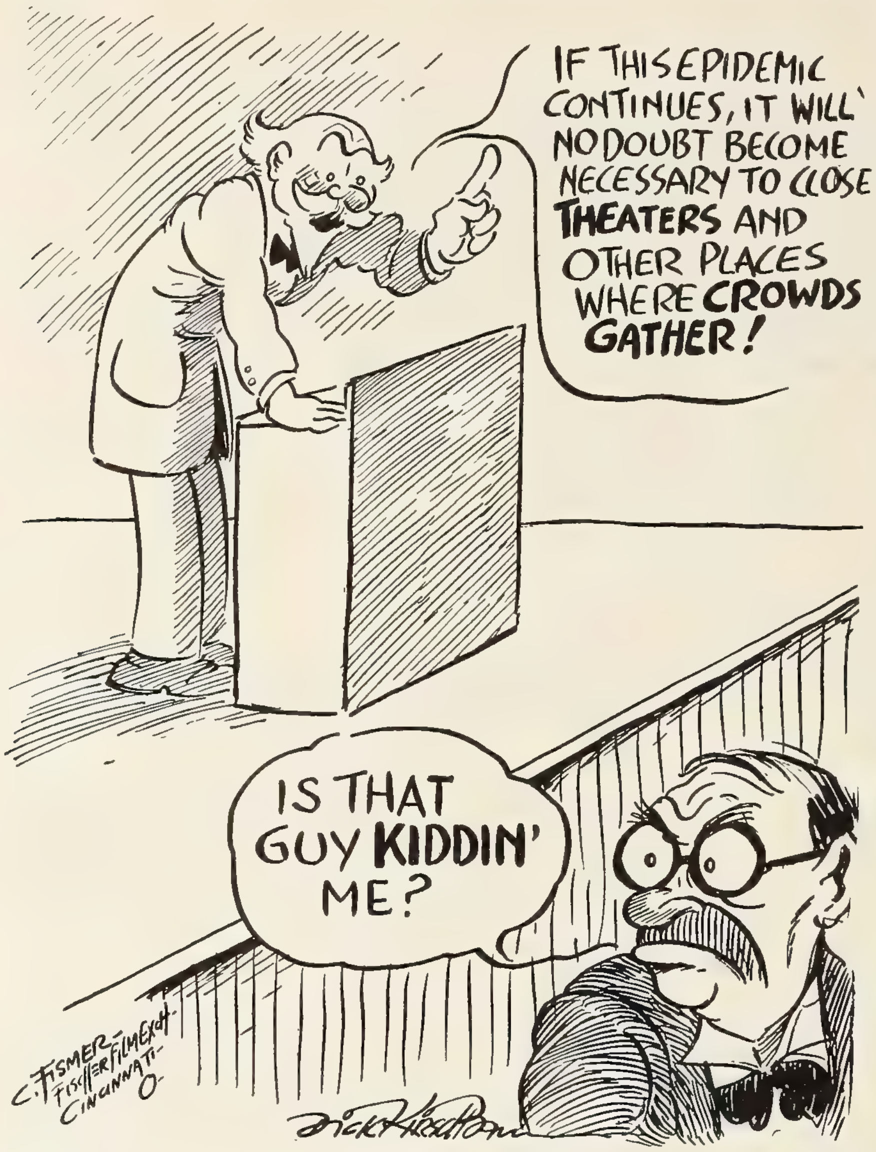
DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

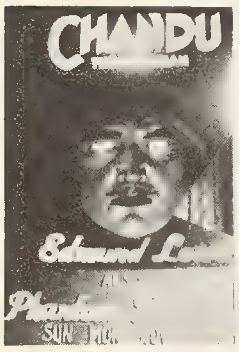


IF THIS EPIDEMIC CONTINUES, IT WILL NO DOUBT BECOME NECESSARY TO CLOSE THEATERS AND OTHER PLACES WHERE CROWDS GATHER!
IS THAT GUY KIDDIN' ME?
C. FISMER— FISCHER FILM EXCH. CINCINNATI O.

This season of the year ought to be a most appropriate time to publish the cheerful cartoon suggestion made by C. Fischer, of the Fischer Film Exchange, Cincinnati, which is expressed by our able cartoonist, Dick Kirschbaum.

HERMAN FURNISHES MORE EVIDENCE OF RANDFORCE ARTISTRY

More evidence of the excellent work done by members of the Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, N. Y., is at hand in the form of several snap-shots of displays recently used by Joe Herman, manager of the Glenwood Theatre.

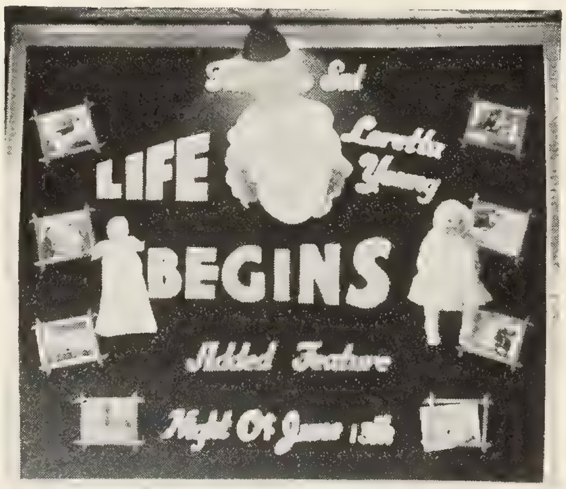


The smaller photo shows a display used on "Chandu," made out of a three-sheet and converted into a shadow-box. A flasher was installed inside to bring out effects of transparent eyes and letters.

The other photo, showing a display made for "Life Begins," was worked on a large velour board, with two life-size baby dolls on the sides. The blow-up and letters were made with a cutawl from compoboard.

Other snaps at hand too vague for reproduction show that a miniature apartment house of compoboard, with windows made by cutawl, backed by crepe paper silhouettes, was made for "Blessed Event." A corner lamp-post was made out of a coat-hanger, with three-sheet cutout on same. A display for "Big City Blues" consisted of cutout heads and letters of a three-sheet, decorated with cutout music notes on compo.

Thanks to Joe for letting his Club know what's going on in showbusiness out in this neck of the big borough. Since Monty MacLevy left the publicity and of Randforce, news of what the many managers of this circuit are doing has been scarce. Many of them are wizards at turning out displays at exceptionally low cost and we'll hope to get a further line on not only Herman's activities, but others. Let's hear from you Randforce men.



APPLE STUNT WAS A NATURAL FOR GEORGE SHEWELL ON PICTURE

When exploiting "Trouble in Paradise," George Shewell, manager of the Cort Theatre, Cambridge, Ohio, used an interesting and novel gag that proved particularly effective.

He bought a lot of real apples and then picked the busiest spot in town to distribute them. On each apple a tag carrying the following copy was placed: "This Is What Started the Trouble in Paradise"—One Apple. . . . One Adam. . . . Two Eves. . . . That Makes Two Hours of Love and Laughter." Names of featured players, title of short and playdates followed.

Okay, George, and we don't doubt for one moment that you had much difficulty disposing of your entire stock, which, of course, got you just what you aimed for in the matter of word-of-mouth publicity. Let's hear from you some more.

HIRSCHBLOND HELD BIG XMAS BENEFIT DESPITE BLIZZARD

Despite a blizzard which threatened to tie up all local traffic, nearly 800 admissions, of which 200 were adult, were made to the annual Xmas party held by I. M. Hirschblond, manager of the Traco Theatre Company, Toms River, N. J.

His program opened with the organ selection "Silent Night," played by Mark Andrews, followed by a Mickey Mouse, an Our Gang and a song cartoon of "School Days" led by Gus Edwards. The big event of the evening was a two-act stage revue by local kiddies from three to fifteen years of age, presented by Miss Rosalie H. Pendergast. James K. Allardice acted as M. C. With the gifts of paper hats, balloons, toys and boxes of candy to each child in the theatre, the affair took on the appearance of a real Yuletide carnival. Newspapers played up the event with a number of stories.

Hirschblond's annual Xmas parties down at Toms River are each year looked forward to with much delight on the part of both young and old. Considering adverse weather and trade conditions, this season's event compared favorably with those held in the past and our popular representative down along the Jersey coast is certainly in line for congratulations for the way he put over his show. Now, I. M., don't wait until next Xmas to let your Club know what else is going on in showbusiness down your way.

NEW TWIST ON HOME TALENT SHOW YIELDS PROFITS FOR COWAN

The old home talent show idea has been dressed in new clothes, given a new setting by M. E. Cowan, manager of Schine's Piqua Theatre, Piqua, Ohio, and developed into a profitable enterprise for all concerned.

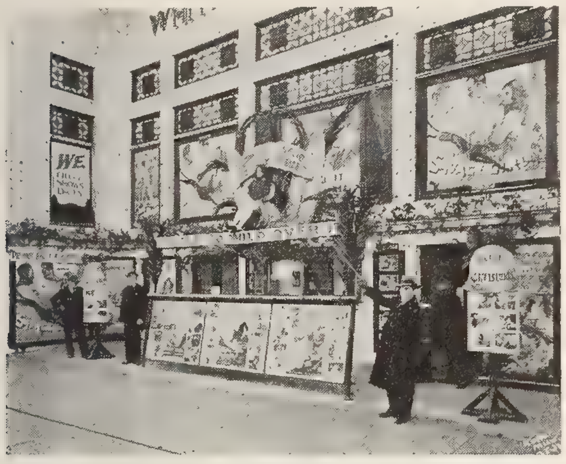
Cowan calls his stunt "Stage Audition" and the stage is set to represent a room in a broadcasting station. He has secured the services of a popular eight-piece band, which he's using two nights per week, and all aspirants to the honor of winning permission to try-out over a real radio station must register with the band leader and let him know in advance what song numbers have been selected. Free publicity was obtained in the local newspaper by selling the management the idea that the stunt would provide additional reader interest.

Any one desiring to vary the old amateur night idea by giving it a modern setting might do well to consider Cowan's plan, with its unlimited possibilities for creation of good will, free space in the newspapers and, consequently, increased grosses at the box office. His scheme appears particularly adaptable to the smaller cities and communities, where people get to know one another more easily than in the larger towns.

MEISTER CONTINUES TO THRILL PATRONS WITH UNIQUE FRONT

The last time we reported on the activities of Otto H. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., we referred to Otto as one of God's own gifts to the posterman, because of his practically limitless faith in the efficacy of the poster as a means both decorative to the front of his house and as a box office lure.

According to the accompanying photo the front of the Whitehouse is still uniquely interesting, thanks to Meister's sensational methods of dressing it with hundreds of electric lights, signs, posters and stills. This time, however, on the occasion of playing "Savage Girl," he varied the general scheme by placing a "Beautiful White Savage Girl—More Dangerous Than Wild Beasts"—in a sitting posture over the entrance. The gentleman at the right in the photo is pointing his cane at the lady. Over at the extreme left, unless we're very much mistaken, stands Otto himself, taking in with justifiable pride the scene he created. And why not? His previous Sunday gross, which was high, was more than doubled on this occasion.



CIRCUS ACT STAGED BALLY AND GEORGE SEED MADE PROFIT

From over in Port Jervis, N. Y., where George Seed manages the Royal Theatre, comes word that a traveling circus act (Gangler) went over bigger than anything he has used in a long time, playing to full houses at every show.

From a small snapshot, too dark for reproduction, we can see that the management of the act arranged a corking street bally of clowns and animals. We understand that this is general procedure when this act fills its engagement.

We also note from the snap-shot that snow is not unknown to the town of Port Jervis, which, George informs the Club, is considerably colder than over in his old stamping grounds in Brooklyn. We're glad to learn that business is in pretty good shape up his way and will hope to hear from him again in the near future.

All Dressed Up!

The latest wrinkle at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Tex., is a female conductor of the Palace Grande orchestra, all dressed up in a man's tuxedo. She is a well known radio artist and will conduct popular and semi-popular numbers only. Widespread newspaper publicity was obtained through the stunt.

LAMM TIED UP WITH NEIGHBORHOOD CLUB FOR A BENEFIT SHOW

Returns still arriving at Club headquarters on relief activities over the past Xmas season include a report of the highly satisfactory showing made by Julius Lamm, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, when he staged his Gala Benefit Show on Stage and Screen under the auspices of the East End Exchange Club. Other civic and merchants' clubs in this section of the city also cooperated.

The campaign included distribution of window cards by service clubs and theatre in all East Side stores; use of a trailer selling the entire show two weeks in advance of benefit; noon-day dinner meetings with service clubs to plug the event; distribution of 2,000 Benefit tickets, 1,500 to the clubs and 500 for theatre; donation of two awards for most tickets sold, one to house employees and the other to clubs; promotion of 15 acts of vaudeville and radio star talent for the occasion; generous publicity support from all local and neighborhood publications, stressing the fact that the Uptown was the only Cleveland theatre to stage a relief show for the neighborhood; distribution of 300 baskets of food to needy people, and special morning show to which children were admitted through bringing cans of food to increase the supply for baskets.

Aside from the fact that Lamm's Benefit was a financial success from every point of view, we'll predict that the Warner-Uptown accomplished a lot in the way of good will that money couldn't buy through doing its share of relief work for the needy. Congratulations to Julius for the fine job he made of it.

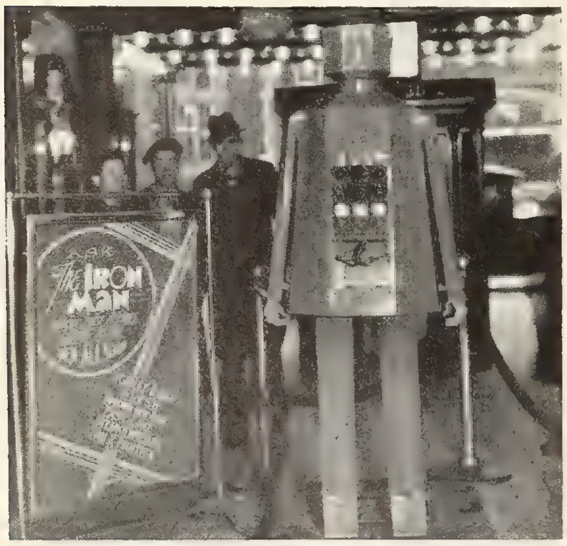
ANNA BELL WARD AND MORGAN ELLIOTT RIG UP ROBOT FOR LOBBY

We are showing here for the first and only time, ladies and gentlemen, the latest creation of science—the Iron Man, a marvelous, mysterious creature of metal, which, while not of flesh and blood, moves and makes wise-cracks like its more human counterparts. Step right up and take a good look at the robot recently displayed in the lobby of the Ben Ali Theatre, Lexington, Ky., by Miss Anna Bell Ward, vice-president and general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, and a showwoman par excellence.

Here It Is!



The contraption pictured here was made by Morgan W. Elliott, Miss Ward's able co-worker down in Lexington, and it created considerable of a sensation when it made its appearance at the Ben Ali. A local newspaper, not having on its staff any one sufficiently versed in robot art to handle the story, assigned the task (?) to Miss Ward, who, we are able to report, gave free rein to her fertile imagination when preparing copy for a long, boxed story.

Front and rear views of the robot show the metal worked-up in coat-shape form in front and a panel of electrical dials, rheostats and protruding ends of two wires in the rear. We take it there was nothing to prevent a "mike" hook-up to the manager's office, in order to provide answers to questions asked by people in the lobby, or, maybe, the gadget is a real, bona-fide robot with photo-electric eyes and everything that goes to make up such a machine. That will have to be answered by Miss Ward and Morgan Elliott; far be it for the writer, sadly lacking in pursuit of modern science, to question any point of construction.

At any rate, chalk up another attention-getting lobby stunt to the credit of Ward and Elliott for Phoenix, for they're always pulling off some new trick to intrigue patrons. Also, thanks to Frances Sargent, secretary to Miss Ward, for sending the Club this information. Should others wish to experiment with robots, we believe she will provide them with full details of the plan.

ED HART TALKS WITH ASSISTANT JOE ABOUT OXFORD'S SRO ROPES

Calling his assistant to his office a short time ago, Ed Hart, manager of the Oxford Theatre, Plainfield, N. J., remarked: "Joe, how long is it since you've used the 'standing-room' ropes at this theatre?"

Joe answered: "Well, about two years, boss."

"Better get 'em out," replied Hart, "for I've a hunch we're going to do business this Saturday."

And so the ropes were made ready and Ed Hart's hunch came true, for it was the first appearance of vaudeville at the Oxford in a long time and the public demonstrated its liking for the change of diet by turning out full force for the combination bill.

All of which, according to a newspaper story, is the cause of the broad smile being worn by Ed these days. We take it that the special Saturday shows will be continued, at least as long as the program continues to pack 'em in.

HILLYER PROMOTED 8-PAGE SECTION OF LOCAL ADVERTISING

That many Club members are cashing in on the opportunity offered by the film "Prosperity" for promotion of cooperative advertising, is further evidenced by the fine eight-page section recently put over by M. N. Hillyer, manager of the Iola Theatre Corp., Iola, Kan.

Hillyer obtained the front page as his share of the booty with a big display ad on the picture, flanked by large cuts of Dressler and Moran. A box instructed readers that each ad contained a misspelled word taken from "Everyone Wants to See Prosperity Come to Iola." A main award and guest tickets were given for correct answers. Out of 5,500 copies distributed about 150 correct returns came in. Aside from the small cost of the awards, all mail and house-to-house distribution expense and promotion work was taken care of by the publisher, who was very well pleased with results.

It may be significant that the publisher repeated this stunt a short time later (without theatre tie-up) and was unable to get even half the response from advertisers, though all expressed their approval of the "Prosperity" issue.

A nice deal for Hillyer to put over and more power to him for his ability both as showman and salesman. Thanks also to him for sending along the newspaper clipping and Lobby Laff. The Club wishes him continued success and good health for the New Year and many more to come.

BROWNLEE SENDS US SOME SAMPLES OF TOM DAVIDSON'S ART WORK

We are in receipt of a number of photographs from Ollie Brownlee, manager of the University and Sooner Theatres, Norman, Okla., showing some samples of the art work being turned out by Tom Davidson, staff artist for both houses. Unfortunately most of the films represented were played too far back to be of any direct aid at this time to their fellow Round Tablers, hence we're only reproducing a photo of frontal displays made for one of the more recent attractions.

CALL HER SAVAGE

We will be glad to receive further evidence of Davidson's work in the future and would also like to hear what Brownlee is doing in the managerial end.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ACTIVITY PRODUCING EXCELLENT RESULTS!

Here Is a Complete Plan For Ticket Sales That Should Prove Attractive To Both Merchants and Theatres!

Properly Handled, This Will Click For All Participating Parties; Especially Good For This Time of the Year!

by JACK JACKSON

We have had more requests for help in planning Chamber of Commerce campaigns than probably any other form of promotion; yet, we have been able to secure but few really useful and comprehensive articles setting forth the whys and wherefores of this type of showmanship.

We are indebted to Jack Jackson, formerly publicity director for the Publix-Comerford Circuit, for this clear and concise manual on how to put over one of these valuable aids to building business at the box office. Read it through carefully and you will be wanting to get busy on it right away. Properly handled, it can't miss.

FOLLOWING are complete details of suggested cooperative activity with the Chamber of Commerce in your town for the promotion of monthly sales day to take place once each month through the winter months. The day and date selected to be at the judgment of the Chamber of Commerce executives except in instances where such selections might affect Saturday or Holiday business.

How It Works!

To generalize: It is the usual practice of merchants participating in a drive for business on any special day to stock up on some special unit of merchandise to be known as a "leader." This "leader" is in most instances sold slightly below cost and demands that the merchant tie his money into a quantity purchase necessitating that any of the merchandise unsold remain on his shelves with the consequent tying up of invested capital. On these drives it is the usual custom for the Chamber of Commerce to place an assessment on each merchant participating, the sum depending on the amount of business the participant is expected to derive from this special drive. Funds secured in such a manner are used to advertise the event in newspapers and all merchants participating are prevailed upon to head their advertising with the Trade Day slogan selected as appropriate for the day. These are known as "Customers' Day," "Opportunity Day," "Trade Day," "Bargain Day" and many others.

Bargain Tickets!

We propose that you offer to the Chamber of Commerce the facilities of your theatre and a special bargain theatre ticket to be used as a "leader" by all merchants participating. We feel that the bargain theatre ticket will attract more patronage to any given store or location than any other known unit of merchandise. The reason of our sincere belief that the theatre ticket is an infallible magnet is because of its general appeal and the fact that entertainment as a factor of human existence receives approximately 10% of the day's thought of the average American citizen. This brief thought, amplified upon by such facts as are in the realm of your own experience and applicable to your own community, should enable you to convince any committee appointed by the Chamber of Commerce of the value of the theatre ticket as a business attractor. Briefly, our proposal to your Chamber of Commerce body and the merchants is:

To permit the merchants participating in the business drive to undersell the theatre box office on the selected day, the tickets sold to be good for the matinee performances only and not to be acceptable on night admission.

The reason for this restriction is that experience has shown that when the bargain rate is allowed to go into the night period the patrons make a last minute raid on the merchant's establishment and his clerks are precluded the possibility of offering any approach for further sales. Also that the brief time existing before the closing hour precludes the possibility of the patron examining merchandise on sale in the store.

We guarantee to the cooperating merchant that the theatre ticket as a "leader" will be supplied on a consignment basis through the agency of a selected member of the Chamber of Commerce or Business Bureau and extend to the cooperating merchant the privilege of returning any tickets not used, demanding only reimbursement for the used tickets distributed by his company.

Make Understanding Clear!

We further expect that the cooperating merchants will treat this theatre ticket "leader" in the same light he would any unit of merchandise he intended to use as a magnet to attract patronage or, in other words, that prominent space will be taken in his advertising mentioning the fact that the bargain theatre ticket is available at his store, mentioning the name of the theatre and the attraction playing. Do not allow this advertising to be inserted except on the evening before the sale and the actual day of the sale since any advance advertising of the bargain rate is certain to affect business on the preceding day and days.

The restriction mentioned above is not meant to curtail efforts to draw attention to the sale day, but it is suggested that any reference to the theatre cooperation other than such as may be published through editorial columns—and then no price concession mentioned—be withheld until the actual moment of sale. It is to the advantage of the Chamber of Commerce and cooperating merchants to draw as much attention to this particular day as possible and to run a line in their general advertising to the effect that bargain theatre tickets will be on sale, but they are to be denied the privilege of quoting the prices and the details of such concession.

Members or readers who have used any other form of Chamber of Commerce tie-up are requested to forward the details to the Club so that we may make such tie-ups available to other showmen who are in need of a little help in this direction. Practice that Club slogan: "All For One and One For All".

To the Chamber of Commerce Officials You Offer:

The possibility of individual solicitation to their members with the customary restriction of varying fees of participation removed. Each merchant will only be required to pay for the actual tickets dispersed. It is at the option of the Chamber of Commerce to assess $1 to $2 to each cooperating merchant to defray the cost of hand bills, placards and such newspaper advertising that they might want to engage in generally.

You further offer an opportunity to inveigle new merchants into the Chamber of Commerce by extending to them the privilege of soliciting non-member organizations and demonstrating through the success of this effort the value of Chamber of Cormerce cooperation.

It is to be pointed out that any gratitude that might be engendered in the person of the purchaser of a cut-rate theatre ticket would reflect to the merchant and the Chamber of Commerce rather than the theatre since on the surface the impression is left that the concession was secured at the instigation of the Chamber of Commerce and merchants.

You extend to all cooperating merchants the privilege of disposing of the tickets as premium with certain units of merchandise or for cash in the amount of the tickets' value, placing no restrictions on any business maneuvers the merchant might consider advisable.

Good Deal All Around!

You offer merchants an opportunity to command attention to certain departments of their establishment by placing the tickets on sale in the particular department to which attention is to be drawn.

It is unfair to the merchant cooperating not to insist on prominent mention in his advertising calling attention to the sale of bargain tickets since it is this ticket that is going to prove the magnet that is going to draw customers into his establishment.

Point out to your committee the fact that in allowing the merchants of your city to undersell your box office you are automatically diverting every patron at your theatre to a merchant's establishment before enjoying an afternoon's entertainment. You can do this by drawing attention to the fact that your box office price will remain the same and that the merchant will benefit from the usual run of patrons at your matinee performance. You will lend your assistance

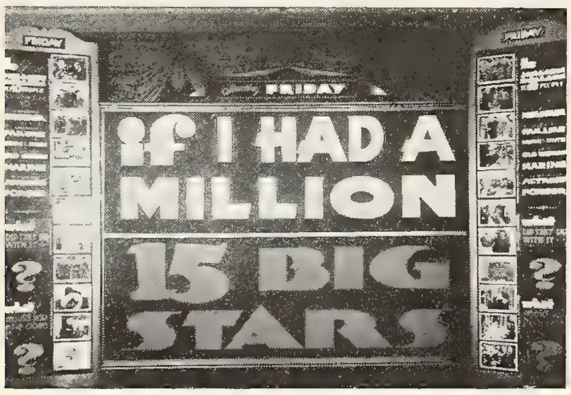
MANY GOOD SELLING SLANTS USED IN SIG SOLOMON'S CAMPAIGN

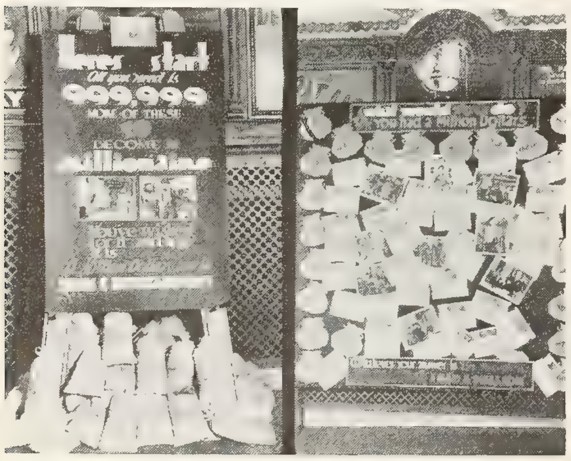
Several stunts, newspaper tie-ups, street ballyhoo and extensive outside billing and newspaper advertising, featured the campaign made on "If I Had a Million" by City Manager S. S. Solomon for the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio.

One of the stunts consisted of posting an attractive young lady in the foyer, with noiseless typewriter and appropriate sign inviting patrons to tell what they'd do if they fell heir to a million dollars. Through a tie-up with Postal the answers were typed on telegram blanks, along with names and addresses, and placed on a large lobby board which also carried stills and copy: "No Matter What You Say, You're Wrong Until You See 'If I,' etc." The board also was decorated with 24 painted money bags with question mark background, each bag carried words as "Clothes," "Paris," "Charity," "Travel," "Women," "Luxury."

Another lobby stunt featured the display of sixty bags of gravel, marked $5,000 and piled around a one-sheet bearing a framed one-dollar bill. Copy read: "Here's Your Start! 999,999 More of These to Become a Millionaire—You've Wished For It—And Here It Is—A Million Dollars' Worth of Entertainment." This was placed in the lobby in advance and moved to window during engagement. (See photos.)



Over three thousand readers of one newspaper responded to a tie-up made eleven days prior to opening in connection with interviews and essays on what local celebrities would do if they suddenly acquired a million dollars. Essays were limited to 300 words each and entrants became eligible to the national award of a millionaire's existence in New York City for a stated number of hours. Local awards were also offered for best efforts. Newspaper clippings at hand testify to the vast amount of free space received by the theatre on this stunt and the editor of the paper told Solomon it was the best gag of its kind he'd ever seen pulled.



Still another tie-up, made with a competitive paper (a noteworthy feat on the part of Solomon, considering the other stunt) was a drawing stunt in which entrants might sketch in pen, pencil, water color, crayon, etc., any of the star heads published in the paper. Readers will recall that fifteen well known stars appeared in the film. Awards of passes ranging from 10 down to 15 singles were made for best looking posters.

Additional effort included use of trailer 10 days prior to date; an 8 ft. by 8 ft. felt backed display in foyer, lighted with 500 watt spots; spelling stills, frames, catchlines, 22x28's, etc., in lobby; compo-board front; window tie-ups with prominent stores; street ballyhoo of "million dollar" character leading another lad who depicted the extreme of riches, and regular run of newspaper advertising, readers and other publicity.

Despite the fact that "Opposition" inaugurated a 40 per cent cut in admission at the offset of the above campaign, Solomon and his crew turned in a most satisfactory gross on the engagement, to say nothing of keeping within the limits of a curtailed Xmas season budget. His campaigns are always interesting to fellow Club members, we feel sure, and we'll be awaiting further evidence of what's going on in showbusiness out in Youngstown Publix units.

DUMOND'S DISPLAY!

Above is a reproduction of a photo taken of the Xmas display constructed by George Dumond, manager of Loew's Theatre, Jersey City, N. J. It consisted of a miniature stage with Biblical scene depicting the birth of Christ and attracted much attention from both grown-ups and kiddies.

DAN KRENDEL STAGED BIG RELIEF MATINEE DURING XMAS SEASON

Accounts of good deeds done by Round Tablers this past Xmas season continue to be reported to Club headquarters, in this instance a Canned Goods Show held by Dan Krendel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Windsor, Ontario, Canada, at which over 5,000 youngsters contributed 5,250 cans of food for a local relief organization. Facilities of the Capitol were taxed beyond capacity but the Palace and Tivoli handled the overflow of several hundreds of kiddies. A local film exchange donated the pictures and Bill O'Brien and Albert Garnier, projectionists, gave their services.

Just one more instance of the vast amount of relief work contributed by showmen the country over this past Thanksgiving and Xmas seasons. We're glad to be in touch with Dan Krendel again and will hope to hear a lot more concerning his activities.

MEDICINE MAN WAUGH STILL SHUFFLING THE SHELLS IN MEMPHIS

With gratification we note that the Old Colonel from Dixie, alias Old Doctor Penetro, Medicine Man of the Dixies, alias Howard Waugh, manager of Warners' Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., is still relentlessly pursuing coin of the realm for the cause of showbusiness.

With a title like "Silver Dollar" to exploit, it was only natural that the resourceful Howard should break out his medicine show outfit and hit the trail leading to his many friends on local newspapers and among the merchants. He not only conspired with one of the former to promote a full page co-op ad, which gave his show a smashing free display ad, but arranged with others for serialization of the story and an assortment of readers and art; all of which was pleasingly reflected when Howard and his cohorts tabulated cash returns at the close of the engagement. Another newspaper also helped out by sponsoring an essay contest, a stunt which occasioned much activity at the city library's files on early Denver history.

Grabbing Free Publicity!

Glancing through the amusement page of one of the Memphis papers we came across a paragraph devoted to bestowal of Xmas gifts by the Warner staff on the genial Colonel and his able assistant, A. B. Morrison. The boys gave Howard a handsome silver coffee outfit and an ornamental desk lamp to Morrison, with the thought in mind that plenty of coffee will keep the Old Doctor awake while making out his reports at 2 A. M. under the gleaming rays from Morrison's lamp.

That's about all the news we can give you from Memphis at this writing; however, Showman Waugh is forever on the job down in his town and we therefore think it safe to state that more will be along in the near future. At least, here's hoping.

JACKSON'S PLAN!

to the success of the campaign by allowing the exhibition of a one- or two-frame trailer on the screen calling attention to the day of the sale and the general bargains, but making no mention of the theatre's concession.

When the committee of the Chamber of Commerce and yourself have agreed upon the date of the event, you will immediately order special emergency tickets, being as careful as possible to anticipate the approximate number that will be sold. The concession of price is a feature to be taken up and decided upon. For example, the sale of 25c matinee tickets at 20c; 35c matinee tickets at 25c and 40c matinee tickets at 30c. In houses where children are charged 15c a concession can be made and emergency tickets secured for 10c admission. It is suggested that only one of the prices quoted above prevail, except where concerns children, and that you will select the admission curtailment applicable to your particular operation. Arrangements must be made in writing with the Chamber of Commerce officials calling for a complete settlement of all outstanding tickets in sufficient time to allow for the inclusion of the amounts in the current week's receipts.

S. MORRIS PROMOTED FULL PAGE CO-OP AD ON PROSPERITY FILM

From what we know about Carthage, N. Y., we supposed that Seymour L. Morris, manager of the Strand Theatre, there, would be snowed in at this time of the year, but such is not the case; no, Seymour has been getting around, even if he does have to strap on snowshoes now and then to keep from going over his head.

Proof of which is offered in the accompanying reproduction of a co-op ad he promoted in connection with his campaign on "Prosperity." A neat job, don't you think?

GOOD TIMES ARE HERE TO STAY!

Reader interest was assured by scattering the title letters through the several advertisements and offering guest tickets for proper assembling of same. The merchants also cooperated by displaying streamers and pennants in their store windows and by use of "Prosperity" stickers on all packages. School children also wore the stickers on backs of their leather jackets. Special "Prosperity" heralds were given wide circulation through adjacent territory, with copy tying in with the "Start the New Year Right With Prosperity" trailer.

This is the first time the Club has had a line on Morris' activities since he had charge of the Capitol Theatre in Auburn, N. Y., and we're mighty glad to put his name back on the active list again. It is likewise the first news from Carthage since Len Carkey penned us a few lines from that point. Now we'll have to round up Len and make the scheme perfect. Getting back to Seymour's campaign, it looks as though he did a mighty good job. He has plenty to work on up his way and we'll be expecting other effective show-selling slants from this Club member.

Over in Wisconsin

Bill Geehan, formerly manager of the Audubon Theatre, New York City, has been appointed manager of the Fox-Majestic Theatre in Beloit, succeeding Clayton Corum, who recently took over the management of a Fanchon & Marco unit in Los Angeles. Elmore Shepardson will act as his assistant. Other new men on the circuit include William Hendricks, at Janesville; E. R. Brennan, at Marinette, and Carl Niesse, formerly with Publix and Skouras in Indiana and at Fond du Lac.

MOLASSES WILL CATCH MORE FLIES, BELIEVES THEODORE SCHLOSSER

Like many other men engaged in showbusiness, Theodore Schlosser, head of Essanoe Amusement Co., Inc., Mt. Vernon, Ky., after fighting local non-theatrical competition with every weapon at his command over a considerable period, reached the logical conclusion that the one best way to remedy depressing effects made on the box office by Saturday night home talent shows, basketball games, church festivals, etc., was to work with instead of against the promoters of those activities.

Mt. Vernon, he advises the Club, was the first town he ever worked that was small enough to present evidence of box office ravages caused by Saturday night basketball games. The occasion actually became a most one-sided affair, regardless of his bids for business on many occasions by putting on special programs. This season he changed his tactics and results are surprising.

Seeking out the coach of the local team the two went into conference. Schlosser made some concessions and the coach agreed that no games would be played on Saturday nights. After attending several class meetings, Schlosser offered to let certain classes work on certain pictures, extending students the privilege of selling tickets on the outside and giving them a cut on receipts over an amount calculated as "regular business." In this way he gets far more trade than ordinarily accrues, and the students also get their share. The arrangement is satisfactory to them and now, instead of working on their programs, they work on Schlosser's. They even go so far as to give the theatre a free ad on their handbills when advertising games.

He heartily recommends this method of cooperation to others up against similar opposition and past observations on our part prompt us to agree with Schlosser that more flies can be caught with molasses than vinegar. Proof of the pudding in his case lies in the fact that cordial relations now exist between all factions. We will hope to hear more from this Club member concerning problems which confront the operator of theatres in the smaller cities.

Busy Mr. Goldman!

William Goldman, general manager of Warner theatres in the Philadelphia zone, was recently named one of a committee of six to handle Convention Hall. He also acts as chairman of the entertainment committee and is in charge of the city's foreign relations bureau. Mr. Goldman has been lauded by the newspapers as one of Philadelphia's "most distinguished citizens."

TODDY WAGED A BIG CAMPAIGN DOWN IN TUSKEGEE, ALABAMA

Tuskegee, Ala., was certainly made Columbia Picture-minded as the result of a "Columbia Jubilee Week" campaign planned and executed by Ted Toddy, exploiteer, and Manager Albert Fain, of the Rose Theatre. Endorsement by the Governor of the State, proclamation by the Mayor, parades, double truck co-ops and special section in the local newspaper, all testifies to the unqualified success of the move.

Lest you think we're spoofing about the Governor taking part in the ceremonies, take a glance at one of the accompanying illustrations, which presents evidence of this feature of the campaign. Left to right are: the Honorable R. H. Powell, President pro tem of the Senate; Albert Fain, manager of the Rose; Governor Miller, and the redoubtable Mr. Ted Toddy himself. Believe it or not, the State's Chief Executive is expressing his approval of the move to revive all manner of trade and spirit in Tuskegee, despite the price of raw cotton, etc.

Sixteen leading merchants were organized into a committee to cooperate with the newspaper for issue of two double trucks and a secial section on the Jubilee and they came through in great style. All ads carried reference to Jubilee Week and the large centre portions of the pages were devoted to theatre and announcement that eighteen handsome presents, donated by the merchants, would be given away in the usual manner.

On the day the Mayor proclaimed a "Civic Holiday" in honor of the Week, which was featured by a four-block long parade of members of the fire department, police force, and headed by a forty-piece band from Tuskegee Institute. Practically every youngster in town joined in.

We're glad to hear from Tedy Toddy again, after quite a long period of silence from this hustling exploiteer, and congratulations are certainly in order for both him and Fain for bringing their campaign to such a successful conclusion. Besides being a corking promotional move for any theatre to get behind, general business conditions make it a most worthy undertaking.

"ID LIKE TO BE A MANAGER"

Via Ike Rose and Eli Sugarman

"I'd like to be the manager of a film house, oh gee;
I'd like to wear that title," a youngster said to me.
Said I: "Let's ask the manager what a youngster has to do
Who wants to be the manager of a theatre and its crew."

So up we went to see him, with this question very vital:
"What is it managers have to do before they get that title?"

There was a sad look in his eye as unto us he wheezed:
"Well, first I went to college and won seventeen degrees,
Then they finally decided to take a chance on me
And I worked three years as usher till I had water on the knee.

"So then they made me manager of a cluck house in the sticks,
And soon I found they'd played me for another of those hicks.
For I was janitor—projectionist—cashier—publicity man—
And when they bounced my one-man staff, I acted as doorman.

"After seventeen years of this, my hair was turning gray,
So they decided to reward me with a two-weeks holiday.
And then at last success was mine—they sent me to the city
To manage a first-run de luxe and I was sitting pretty.

"But alas, the truth was filtered through my poor dumb ivory head,
They'd handed me a jinx house that was always in the red.
So after twenty years of work that rates a total loss,
I'm convinced that being a manager is a lotta applesauce."

Brand New Racket!

Report has it that an enterprising young man tried to work a brand new scalping gag at the Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore, but failed to get very far in his act.

As two autos pulled up to the curb in front of the theatre he engaged the passengers in conversation and informed them that while no more tickets were being sold at the box office he could obtain them from a friend inside for 75 cents each, or an increase of 20 cents over top. He got away with the racket the first time but Ted Rouston, manager, was tipped off in the meantime by the staff and curtained the act.

FRED JOHNSON DOING GOOD WORK WITH HIS REYNOLDSVILLE HOUSE

Cooperative ad pages and other newspaper publicity before us offer evidence that Fred Johnson, who took over management of the Adelphi Theatre, Reynoldsville, Pa., a short time ago, is getting into full stride in his new field of operation. Many readers will recall that this Round Tabler, before going into the game on his own, managed one of the leading theatres in Oil City, Pa.

Only in town a short while and a full page co-op is the result; which, we think, is getting along at a pretty rapid rate. Note in the accompanying illustration that the letters spelling the title, "Prosperity," were used in conjunction with a star identification gag. Each of the faces in the several letters represented some player who played with Marie Dressler in previous pictures. The idea was to send in the answers and participate in guest tickets offered by merchants and theatre. An attractice and different kind of co-op.

We also note on the local newspaper's front page that Fred's Xmas Party, sponsored by the local Elks for the city's younger element, was one of the big events of the season. A Santa was on hand to handle the kids and distribute to each one a bag of candy and fruit. Needless to state the theatre was filled to capacity.

As stated above, other pages in the paper show plenty of evidence that it hasn't taken our good friend Fred very long to find his way 'round town. Good luck to him with his enterprise and we'll be on watch for further news.

Stein With Warner, Chicago

Lawrence S. Stein, recently in charge of Warner's Parthenon Theatre, Hammond, Ind., and formerly Warner advertising man in northern Indiana, has been appointed director of advertising and publicity for all Warner theatres in the Chicago district. He succeeds A. W. Sobler, who has gone into the exhibition field.

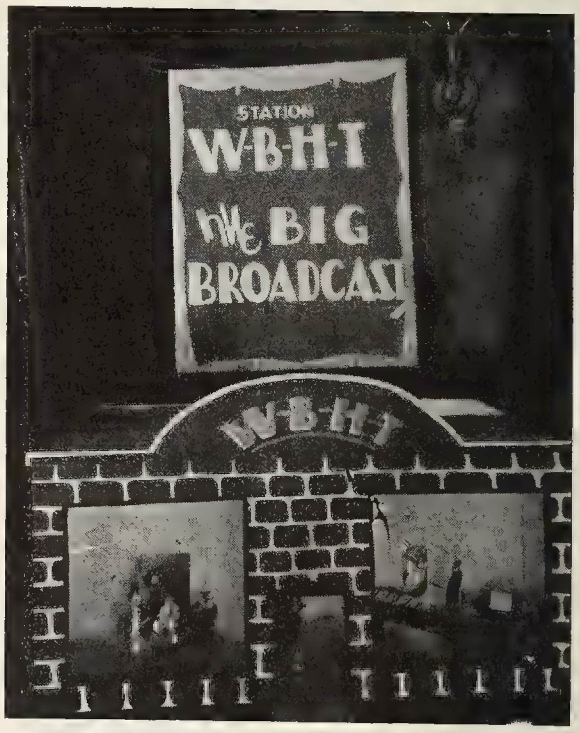
ATTRACTIVE FOYER DISPLAYS BUILT BY E. GRADY AND STAFF

Somewhat belated but interesting as usual is word from E. C. Grady and his staff at the Hoosier Theatre, Whiting, Ind.

The small photo shown here will give you all an idea of the miniature hotel display he and the gang engineered when exploiting "Grand Hotel," true in every detail, even to a sign (clipped off) atop the building and a little auto waiting in under the marquee.

The other photo shows the attractive foyer display made for "Big Broadcast," featuring a miniature broadcasting studio with aerials and stills in place of windows to represent action inside. The photo is too dark to show the aerials, but they're there, nevertheless.

It's been some little time since the Club has been in touch with Grady and his associates at the Hoosier and we're mighty glad to have him on the active list once again. Now that they've started off the New Year in this spirit, we'll hope the good work will continue.



JOIN THE ROUND TABLE ARMY NOW!

is another one of the Club's current crop of assistant managers, and we're glad to record his application for membership. Nick holds forth as runner-up at the Criterion Theatre, Durham, N. C., a post he has held for the past six months; a term of service, incidentally, which represents his entire experience so far in showbusiness. We predict Nick will click along at a fast clip. Prior to choosing the theatre for a career he was a student at Duke University, where he made good in athletics. He is also a former pro ball player and coached football for a year.

is in charge of the Highland Theatre in Chicago and he's still another manager in line for introduction to his fellow Round Tablers. We're glad to have your application, Ted, and sincerely hope that you, too, will do your share toward making this section of the Herald the livest of its kind in the trade. What was that last stunt you used to make the cash register play a merry tune? Shoot along an account of it so we can pass the information on to your brother showmen. They'll be waiting to hear what you will do for the "cause."

alias "Prosperity" Cabrera is another assistant manager to become a member of this organization and he has the job of helping Jean Armand with management of the Fox-Nogales Theatre, Nogales, Ariz. Jean tells us Ignacio has been dubbed "Prosperity" because he-no-speaka very good English, and that Prosperity is his favorite word. And why not, say we! At any rate, Ignacio came up from the usher ranks and, according to his boss, has the makings of a first class showman. He replaces Carl Chick, who was promoted to the Fox Theatre at Phoenix, Ariz.

hails from out in Ellis, Kansas, where he manages the Crystal Theatre for owner, L. E. Snyder. He's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to all the other showmen in this organization and he wants them to know that he will do his best to contribute his share of show-selling information to this department. Okay, Dick, and we'll be awaiting with interest your next communication to Club headquarters. Shoot along an account of the last stunt you used to make the box office click.

has the job of assisting Manager Hiser with management of the State Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., and we're happy to list his name among the many assistant managers already enrolled in this organization. His next step up the ladder is a manager's job and just as soon as he gets his feet on that rung the big event will be recorded on this page. In the meantime, we'll depend upon both Jones and Hiser to keep this department informed on what's going on in showbusiness out their way.

manages the Oriental Theatre out in Chicago and we're mighty glad to add his name to this week's crop of new Round Tablers. Ben is also thoroughly in accord with what this organization is doing for showmen the world over and promises to do his best to keep up the good work. Okay, Ben, put your shoulder to the wheel, too, and let the rest of the fellows know about some of the tricks you're using to boost box office trade. We'll be looking for your next letter.

MARK R. CHARTRAND

hails from down South in Miami, Fla., where he was recently assigned the management of the Biltmore Theatre, a house formerly managed and still supervised by Round Tabler Sonny Shepherd. We're glad, indeed, to record Mark's application for membership in this organization and hope he will be as good a contributor to this department as Sonny. So there you are, Chartrand; help keep the ball rolling along in the same, good old way. We'll be watching your step. Tell Sonny hello for us and that we can also use a good yarn from him.

has charge of Shea's and the Grand Theatres, M. A. Shea Theatrical Enterprise houses down in Bradford, Pa., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. Hynes advises us that he has been following activities of Round Tablers ever since the Club was organized and received many valuable show-selling suggestions from this department. Welcome to the gang, Jack, and we're mighty glad to know that you, too, will put your shoulder to the wheel. Help the good work along by sending in some of your own box office tips. Thanks for the enclosure; we'll use it at the first opportunity.

is the assistant skipper of the Neptune Palace Theatre out in Alameda, Calif., and we're also glad to add the name of this new recruit to the many squads of assistant managers enrolled in the Round Table army. This week's crop of new members also includes the name of George Wilson, advertising manager of the Neptune Palace, so between the two of these representatives the Club ought to be kept posted on what's going on in showbusiness out their way. We'll be looking for further word.

HERE'S THE BLANK

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

Name ....

Position ....

Theatre ....

Address ....

City ....

State ....

THOS. Y. McCONNELL

is the manager of the Riviera Theatre down in Knoxville, Tenn., and prior to taking this post was in charge of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. Tommy received his tutelage in showbusiness from Hoxey Farley, well known theatre executive in the Southland. Well, Tom, we know Hoxey; we know the Strand; we know Montgomery from Boguehomme to the West End; therefore, we feel well qualified to state that your training certainly bodes good fortune to forthcoming Club pages. Keep in touch with this department regularly.

is the advertising manager of the Neptune Palace Theatre, Alameda, Calif., and we're glad to record that he has become a member of the Round Table Club. George has plenty to keep him busily engaged with showbusiness out in his town and we feel sure he will have some good, live tips to pass along to his brother showmen in this organization. We will await with interest his next communication and hope he will find time to become a regular contributor to this department.

recently succeeded Michael Chakeres as assistant manager of the State Theatre, a Regent-State Corporation house in Springfield, Ohio, when the latter was assigned manager of the State last November. So we're chalking Woodrow's name up among the many assistants in the Club's line-up and if he has the same good luck as his chief, it won't be long before we'll be sending him one of the framed certificates of membership in the fastest growing showmen's organization in the whole world. Best regards to Mike, Owens, and ask him to keep his Club posted.

is another one of the many assistant managers to join the ranks of the Round Table army and his membership is sponsored by his boss, Mauray L. Ashman, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mauray advises the Club that Allan began his theatre career as one of the ushers and by virtue of applying himself closely to the many phases of theatre management, became eligible to the post of assistant. He's 6 feet, 3 inches tall and how the New York Paramount missed him for a doorman, while he was climbing the ladder, is beyond our understanding. Keep up the good work, Allan, and ask your boss to keep in touch with headquarters.

has the job of helping Paul Binstock manage the Republic Theatre over in Brooklyn, N. Y., and with his application at hand the Club now has two representatives in their section of the big borough. If George turns out to be as good a contributor as his boss, we're here to let you all know that this department will be the richer through Stoves' membership. With Binstock's able coaching, we'll also predict that it won't be long before we'll be able to list this new member among the full-fledged Round Tablers. Tell Paul hello, George, and ask him to shoot along some information on recent activities.

is the advertising director of the Army "Y" Theatre at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. With this acknowledgment of his application for membership in the Club, he becomes a soldier in two armies—somewhat different in scope, to be sure—but both devoted to the cause of serving mankind. Let the rest of the gang know what you and your associates are doing to entertain the gang out at Leavenworth, Bill.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

WHO CAN GAUGE ITS TOTAL VALUE?

EASTMAN Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative has helped the motion picture industry to attain improved working conditions...lower lighting costs...finer photography...better prints...higher screen quality.

Who can gauge the total value of this film's contribution? Without the qualities which it offered, the industry would have missed some of the most important stimuli it has ever received.

Further improved since its introduction, Eastman Super-sensitive is rendering its greatest service in the gray-backed form in which it is now available. Eastman Kodak Company (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood).

A CONSOLIDATION OF EXHIBITORS HERALD-WORLD AND MOTION PICTURE NEWS

PUBLICATION VS. PRINTING

Printing is merely the process of putting copy into type and taking impressions of it on paper. Anyone can do it. A great many do do it.

A publication is only partly a product of the art of printing. It involves editorship, contributors, news gathering facilities. Equally importantly it requires reader acceptance, distribution, prestige. Who says it is just as important as what is said.

Motion Picture Herald is a publication, the greatest publication produced out of a quarter of a century of working for, in and with the motion picture. The whole world knows it.

REAL ESTATE RECEIVERSHIPS

THE current receiverships in Paramount and RKO are not nearly so much film affairs as the attentions of the public press and most of the trade gossip would indicate. They are, it apparently needs to be pointed out, actually receiverships of the holding and theatre operating companies, only indirectly affecting and influencing the picture producing and distributing corporations. Thus far the exhibitor does not need to view these receiverships with alarm as invasions of the supply of pictures or film contracts.

In substance the receiverships can be said to be results of and concerned with, principally, the real estate mishaps of the theatre expansion era.

There is a bit of irony in the reflection that some years ago the financial powers then interested in or becoming interested in, the motion picture were inclined to urge that the industry should have a greater showing of big physical assets, piles of brick and steel and acres of real estate. Just now it appears that the real values of the industry of amusement repose and survive in much more intangible stuff. Entertainment has no dimensions and cannot be scaled up by the cubic foot or long ton. The greatest assets of the industry are in values that no auditor can find.

LITTLE old Pathe Exchange, Inc., which you may remember as quite a film company once, now has the quaint distinction of having more actual money, which it does not owe anyone, than any other corporation in the industry—about $2,000,000 in fact, also in the bank.

YES, MR. FROHMAN

IN the course of an outgiving at the fifty-first annual benefit of the Actors' Fund of America, the venerable Mr. Daniel Frohman said: "The drama will never be disposed of. It's been going now for 3,000 years. Even Shakespeare had his troubles—if you think that the movies are a menace—what with beer gardens and all. And we've had our own troubles, with bicycles first, then radio."

And Uncle Dan Frohman is telling us about bicycling!

QUICKER, SIR, QUICKER!

THAT you may be advised that evangelism is right back to pre-war strength, we quote from a report in the Boston Traveler on the utterances of the Reverend Mr. J. W. Kramer before an audience of 6,000 in Tremont Temple, in which he said: "I will endorse dancing when they separate the sexes. . . . Cards have always been the credentials of the crook. . . . You could run a soda fountain in hell as quick as you could reform the movie industry." That last, we submit, would be a business.

SELLING CAVALCADE

ANY customer who wants to know what "Cavalcade" is about has to buy a seat and look at it. The most interesting aspect of the showmanship with which it is presented in New York is the careful avoidance of anything in advertising or lobby display which is calculated to permit the potential consumer to make up his mind in advance. This is all very well, for assuredly there is not one still, not one line or other summarization which could adequately present a notion of what the picture has to offer. Superlatives are no good and specific facts are inadequate. Its triumph is in the manner of the telling and the manner can be conveyed only by itself. Which brings us to the generalization that pictures which have little seem to depend, somewhat fallaciously, on promising much, whereas the picture which has much prospers by no promises. And that seems to boil down to the strange and old-fashioned notion that merit will of itself prevail. That idea has enough of rarity and novelty to be showmanship—especially on Broadway.

The daily press is agog over an amnesia victim who does not know "where he has been or what he has been doing for the last twenty years." That suggests that like as not he has been a supervisor in Hollywood.

JUST when we were beginning to think we had the editorial policy of Motion Picture Herald all tuned up and under control, comes a column of copy from our rambler, Mr. J. C. Jenkins, yearning for the spring and seriously advocating the "Shannon spinner" for bass. Now the policy of this paper, once and for all, demands a bucktail fly with a "pork rind minnow" except where recourse must be taken to live frogs. This is positively final.

Here's a Suggestion Which Perhaps You've Never Thought of . . .

WHY NOT TREAT SOME PERSON LESS FORTUNATE THAN YOURSELF TO A MOVIE TONITE!

Just think for a moment . . . reflect a bit . . . isn't there someone in your immediate family or circle of friends . . . or maybe some neighbor of yours . . . who, thru circumstances beyond control, has not been able to afford a movie in many months? Someone out of work . . . someone who in good times was an ardent movie fan . . . who has not thrilled to a movie or had an honest-to-goodness laugh for a long, long time.

Wouldn't you get a big kick out of treating someone like that? Of course you would! It might be just a small thing to you but it would mean a great deal to someone who hasn't had much to cheer about. Make some sad heart happy! Treat someone to a movie tonite! You'll enjoy the show twice as much yourself, knowing that you have put a ray of sunshine in some other person's life!

We Don't Care What Movie You Take Them to . . . But We Do Suggest the Adelphi Because You Can Treat Someone on the Difference You Save at Our Lower Admission Prices!

And here's another suggestion! Adopt a "MOVIE KIDDIE"! Some tot whose dad has been out of work . . . a movie-loving kid who can't attend the show unless some Good Samaritan treats him. Such a youngster in such circumstances would have a warm spot in his heart for you forevermore if you sent him along to a movie! Especially to the Adelphi's special Kiddies' Matinees on Saturday afternoons when we have extra thrills for tiny folk! It's only 10c for kiddies up to 12 years. What better use could you make of a dime?

Don't forget, movies are a tonic to the soul. Think a while . . . just how would YOU feel if YOU couldn't afford a movie? Call up some tot or grown-up right now. Arrange to take them to the Adelphi tonite—or any other time. We sincerely believe that, once you try it, you will derive so much satisfaction you will want to repeat that pleasure again and again ! ! !

AN IDEA of both promotional and institutional value for many neighborhood theatres has been successfully put to work by Mr. Ludwig Sussman of the Adelphi Theatre in the Rogers Park section of Chicago. A portion of Mr. Sussman's advertising in The Howard News, a suburban paper, reproduced here, sets forth his interesting appeal.

Mr. Sussman personally has applied his theories regarding the theatre as an institution to the immediate problems of his neighbors. Not the least of the results was the substantial check turned over to the local unemployment relief organization a month or so ago as a direct outcome of his cooperation.

Incidentally, the Adelphi was one of the first theatres to win the Award of Merit, presented by the Herald several years ago for noteworthy sound reproduction.

Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles Are Appointed Temporary Co-Receivers in Equity for Paramount Publix Corporation, Irving Trust Company for Publix Enterprises, RKO and Orpheum Circuit

The Paramount Publix Corporation and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, holding companies, and their theatre subsidiaries have gone into receiverships. These are the culminal consequences of a chain of events and causations that are now old stories of the tedious depression era. They have been foreseen, forecast and discounted amply. As has been pointed out in the pages of Motion Picture Herald through this period, these movements crystallizing in the legal formalities of the week, constitute merely the record and the booking. The events all happened long before. The detailed accounts, herewith, will make it apparent that the receiverships in question are more the concern of investors and creditors than of exhibitors in quest of product. The real estate is, as we have long known, in trouble. The moving part of the motion picture industry is still in motion.

—TERRY RAMSAYE

PARAMOUNT PUBLIX

Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation, and Charles D. Hilles, national Republican committee member, were appointed last Thursday temporary co-receivers in equity for the Paramount Publix Corporation. At the same time, Federal Judge William Bondy, of United States district court in New York, appointed Irving Trust Company receiver for Publix Enterprises, Inc., which filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition, listing assets at $23,864,076 and liabilities at $41,214,407. This corporation, a subsidiary of Paramount, is the holding company for a nationwide circuit of theatres.

George Topliff was designated Wednesday by Irving Trust Company as its representative in charge of the Publix receivership, directing future operations of the corporation.

The Board of directors of Paramount authorized the following statement:

"At a meeting held today (January 26) it was decided that, in view of the corporation's inability to meet obligations presently outstanding and others shortly to mature, the interests of the creditors and security holders would best be served by the appointment of a receiver in equity. Messrs. Charles D. Hilles and Adolph Zukor have accordingly been appointed receivers by Judge Bondy, United States district judge in the federal court of the southern district of New York. The corporation is not insolvent and intends to contest the involuntary petition in bankruptcy which has been filed against it.

"As a result of the unprecedented length and severity of the depression, both the domestic and foreign receipts of the corporation and its subsidiaries have been continually and increasingly diminishing. In the case of foreign receipts, the corporation has also been faced with heavy and unavoidable losses due to the depreciation of foreign currencies.

"Since the decline in gross receipts first manifested itself, the board of directors and management of the corporation has instituted a policy of drastic retrenchment and curtailment in controllable expenditures and has effected substantial economies of operation. The production cost of pictures has been lowered, salaries have been materially reduced and the personnel has been considerably decreased.

"The corporation has earnestly striven to obtain voluntary adjustments of rentals and other fixed charges and has taken advantage of every available means in attempting to maintain a ratio between fixed charges and receipts approximating that which existed in recent and more prosperous years of the company's history. Constructive and helpful though these efforts have been, they have been precluded from attaining their ultimate end by the prolongation and acuteness of the depression.

"In addition to the appointment of receivers of Paramount Publix Corporation, Irving Trust Company has been appointed receiver of Publix Enterprises, Inc., one of the corporation's theatre-holding subsidiaries.

"Neither of these receiverships in any wise affects the subsidiaries—Paramount Productions, Inc., Para-

RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation last week consented to the appointment of a receiver in equity. Judge William Bondy, of United States district court in New York, appointed the Irving Trust Company, which was also named receiver in bankruptcy for the Orpheum Circuit, an RKO subsidiary.

Following an executive session in Judge Bondy's chambers in the Woolworth Building, Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president of RKO, made the following statement:

"The company is unable to obtain cash necessary to provide for its presently maturing obligations and for other necessary requirements during the year, and the directors have reluctantly reached the conclusion that a continuation of operations without a substantial overhauling of the burdensome rental and fixed charge requirements of certain of the company's theatre-owning subsidiaries and extension of presently maturing debts of the company could serve no useful purpose, but would serve merely to diminish further the company's assets without benefit to any one interested in the company. There was accordingly no alternative but to consent to the appointment of receivers so that the property can be administered under the jurisdiction of the court for the benefit of all interested parties until conditions improve sufficiently to permit a satisfactory reorganization.

"Negotiations are under way with landlords and mortgagees for readjustment of rentals and fixed charge requirements to a basis consistent with present business levels, and I anticipate that through such readjustments the business can ultimately be placed on a sound and profitable basis."

Charges Default of Bonds

The receivership for RKO, which listed assets of $104,000,000, was based on a petition filed on January 23 by Alfred West, holder of $5,000 of the corporation's six per cent gold notes. The complainant asserted that the corporation defaulted on $731,500 in bonds due January 1, 1933, and, while solvent, lacked liquid assets with which to meet future obligations.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum, in which Rockefeller interests are important stockholders, is controlled by Radio Corporation of America, which holds about 59 per cent of the common stock. RCA also operates National Broadcasting, RCA Victor, RCA Photophone and RCA Communications.

Subsidiaries of RKO are the B. F. Keith Corporation, Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corporation, the former B. F. Keith-Albee Exchange, Orpheum Circuit, Inc., F. F. Proctor Theatres, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., RKO Studios, Inc., RKO Distributing Corpo-

ADMISSION TAXES AND BOX-OFFICE

Exhibitors Should Be Prepared to Present a Logical Argument Against Local Levies on Tickets

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

ANTI-TAX ACTION URGED IMMEDIATELY

Admission taxation has an important economic relation to motion picture theatre operation. Legislators, generally, and not a few exhibitors, too, labor under misapprehensions concerning the true meaning of ticket taxes.

Forty-two of the forty-eight state legislative governments are currently meeting. Unbalanced budgets make increased taxes the subject of new legislation. Some 15,000 theatre owners and managers throughout the nation are nearing the zero hour of a vigorous campaign to defend their properties against tax discrimination and its subsequent effects.

The presentation of a true picture of the theatre's economic structure and modus operandi is believed to be an important means of accomplishing the end in the forthcoming tax battle. Concerted action is more necessary than ever before.

In all but a handful of the largest cities in the United States today there is no drama regularly available to the people except through the motion picture theatres. Extensive travel is not possible for most people, except through the motion picture. Current literature, new styles, new inventions, modern ideas in improved homes and furnishings are brought into every community graphically and continuously by the motion picture industry. It is the only inexpensive, wholesome group entertainment, relaxation and recreation continuously available to a large part of the population of this country. Particularly during the current unrest and distress it is important that these people have some place within their means where they can occasionally procure a little happiness and relief from their personal troubles.

An erroneous impression of the industry and of motion picture theatre operation is often arrived at by merely attending a large deluxe theatre in a metropolitan center at the main evening performance. The large audience, luxurious appointments, smooth performance, inconspicuous, well trained house staff, leave an impression of magnificence and wealth likely to cover the whole industry. The patron little realizes the huge obligations and risks assumed by the owners in building such a palace, the large operating expenses of such a place, which frequently are not covered by the fluctuating receipts, the very few cities of sufficiently large population to make such show places possible, the very large share of the production cost of pictures that must be assumed by these few big theatres, and that the average theatre of the 19,311 theatre accounts throughout the country is of an entirely different type.

75% of Business in One Hour

Nor is it generally appreciated that instead of doing a steady business all day long, 75 per cent of the business of the average motion picture theatre is done in one hour out of twenty-four, usually from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m. The theatre-going public desires to attend the show at this time and must be accommodated, though the same show at cheaper admissions is usually given at other hours. But the operating expense goes on for the whole twenty-four hours, nor can the theatre be converted to other uses the rest of the time.

Let us examine this average motion picture theatre a little closely to get a true and clear picture of the industry as a whole. On the 19,311 motion picture theatre accounts in the United States, from the smallest seating about 100 to the largest seating 6,000, the average seating capacity is 572. The average admission charge, while subject to constant changes due to competition for business and market conditions for motion picture entertainment, is about 20 cents. All of the money and income to support this far-flung and intricate industry is derived from theatre admissions. There are few if any by-products; the sole source of revenue is the box-office at the theatre.

How does the average theatre spend your dime after you exchange it for a ticket at the box office? Realizing the wide variation in this between the different types of theatres, between successful and unsuccessful theatres, between competent and incompetent management, costs on a wide variety of theatres were examined and averaged to show who gets the box office dime of the average theatre. Every dime that comes in at the box office of this average theatre is now distributed as follows:

Rent and taxes on real estate	1 1/2c
Payroll	2 2/5c
Film rental	2 1/2c
Advertising	4/5c
Depreciation and maintenance	1/2c
Electricity and heating	1/2c
Taxes	3/10c
Insurance	1/5c
Other expenses (Misc.)	4/5c
Interest and profit	1/2c
Total	10c

It is interesting to note the relatively large share of the gross receipts which the motion picture theatre as a retail establishment must spend in the same community or town in which it is located. Other retail stores and shops almost invariably turn over two or three times as great a share of their retail sale price to the wholesaler for the merchandise which they vend. The motion picture theatre, selling largely a service to the community, benefits greatly the business life of the community because of this fact.

The share of the box-office receipts that goes for film rental provides the entertainment for which the patron pays admission. A complete two-hour show arrives at the theatre in a two-foot case of film. To deliver this at a certain time to the theatre for use on the advertised dates requires weeks and months of planning and intense activities on the part of the producers (manufacturers) and the distributors (wholesalers), a smooth working and extensive organization to arrange bookings and deliveries in an orderly sequence, great studios (factories) and a combing of the whole world for materials (stories, stars, actors, artists, talent, etc.) from which modern motion pictures can be fabricated. Deliveries of the finished product are made with such regularity and precision that little thought is given to the unseen efforts and organizations that provide this steady stream of the best in dramatic entertainment to the community theatre in even the smallest and most remote country town, as well as the largest city.

Each motion picture is an original and unique dramatic composition and is copyrighted as such, just as plays, music and literature are covered by copyright. This creates a lawful monopoly in the completed picture by the owner and producer; public performances cannot be given without a license or express permission. The sale of such licenses is the only possible way the producer can get back his production cost. With each license granted, the distributor loans a positive print of film for use by the theatre in projecting the picture on the screen; hence the license fee is commonly known as film rental.

No one theatre can possibly pay more than a very small fraction of the production cost of a modern motion picture. The producer must sell a large number of limited licenses for exhibition under his copyright to various theatres. Theatres in direct competition for the same patronage will rarely exhibit the same picture on or near the same dates; the limited license to exhibit purchased by the theatre owner is almost invariably exclusive for a definite period of time.

Unlike the former "legitimate" theatre, the motion picture theatres cannot operate as distinctive, separate units. It is not possible for them to employ talent, build scenery and produce their own screen entertainment. To produce the modern type of feature picture requires a manufacturing plant (studio) of considerable magnitude, a large staff of experienced people and the risking of a very large sum of money, which the theatre owner cannot and will not assume or undertake. Nor is it possible to provide production facilities for a limited area (town, city or state); to meet production costs the wholesale market must be national or international.

Must Operate Continuously

Also, unlike the legitimate theatre, with its higher admission charges, the motion picture theatre, to provide low priced quality entertainment, must operate continuously. The average theatre owner will not and can not open his theatre only when a show comes along that he likes and can get or that he is certain will be profitable. He insists on operating every day in the week, or at least regularly on certain days of the week. To make such an operating policy possible, he must be assured of a continuous stream of suitable screen attractions, which he arranges for some time in advance by license agreements for future delivery with the distributor (wholesaler). If there is a rival theatre in competition for the

Allied Expected To Approve Pact

Formal announcement of the results of the action taken by Allied States Association directors in New York last week will be made soon by Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board, from Allied headquarters in Washington.

With a majority of the directors known to be in favor of the new standard contract, it is understood certain that Allied will recommend its acceptance in preference to individual company contracts.

It is also understood, however, that they will not approve the national appeals board in its proposed form, and that Allied will continue to pursue its program for federal legislation. Passage of the Brookhart Bill would mean advantages for exhibitors in the matter of block booking and cancellations not offered by the new uniform contract, Allied claims. Allied recommends to its members that they accept the new pact as an improvement while they continue to work for the passage of the Brookhart Bill and other legislative matters.

Herman Blum of Baltimore was reelected treasurer, following an earlier refusal to accept the office.

Bankruptcy Bill Passed by House

The House of Representatives in Washington this week passed, by a vote of 201 to 43, a bill offering bankruptcy relief to individuals and corporations. The measure will now go to the Senate for consideration. The legislation, designed to relieve debtors who may be able eventually to "pay out" and avoid the waste of liquidation through bankruptcy proceedings, bore two major amendments when the House passed it.

One amendment extends the provisions of the measure to bankruptcy cases pending at the time it takes effect, while another provides that in the instance of the United States being a party to the case, the secretary of the treasury may approve a reorganization plan.

The measure primarily permits of an extension of personal indebtedness and the reorganization of corporations. Though intended fundamentally for the relief of railroads, it may also be of benefit to motion picture companies.

Mortgage Moratorium Seen as Film Aid

Exhibitors in the United States and Canada farm territories are expected to benefit by the action of Prudential Insurance and Mutual Benefit Life, both of which this week followed the lead of New York Life Insurance Company in announcing a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures.

Industry representatives are reported as regarding the move as one which will improve the general situation in that a freer circulation of money in the affected areas will result, with a consequent benefit to theatre attendance.

INDUSTRY RECONSTRUCTION

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

Court actions, which have affected important interests in the motion picture industry, are susceptible to only one correct interpretation; namely, that ambitious commitments of various kinds entered into during the inflation brought about conditions which necessitated radical treatment. The treatment has been applied.

It has long been a matter of common knowledge that various units in the industry have been facing a trying situation. The prolongation of the depresison has, of course, intensified the difficulties, but it is now clear that nothing short of indefinite continuance of the boom days would have rendered safe and secure various of the structures that were set up.

It should be a matter of much satisfaction to the industry at large that these court actions have been entered into because they insure from this point on an early return to stable and constructive operation.

Out of these developments there again looms the shadow of the havoc which was brought to the motion picture industry through frenzied expansions in the theatre field. It is an interesting fact, attesting to the profitableness of the business of motion pictures, that had the film companies avoided penetration into the theatre field the industry today would be standing before the commercial world as virtually a depression-proof business. Flexibility of production and distribution are such that distress might easily have been avoided. In the theatre field, instead of having a few units carrying a great number of losing theatre properties these responsibilities would have been divided among a large number of individual operators who would have found it relatively easy to have obtained adequate financial support to carry them through the emergency. The indisputable advantages of individual owner operation would have been a salvation.

Recent experiences have been such that if their lessons are correctly learned the business of motion pictures will be returned to a plane of profitable operation that will soon re-establish it in all of its departments.

Exhibitors need not be, and should not be, either alarmed or distressed over recent developments. The industry is by no means tottering; actually it continues rooted deep in the firm ground of public interest and approval. There will be no suspension or curtailment in the normal processes of production and distribution. Product—and better product—will continue to issue from the studios and will be supplied regularly to the screens of the world.

The industry is now soberly retracing its steps from the mad days of the inflationary period. The developments of this week are long strides back to its old enviable position in which the eyes of the world were turned upon it as a business of almost limitless possibilities.

There is need only of courage and character.

A gallant figure passes—

LEWIS J. SELZNICK

by TERRY RAMSAYE

In the two swift panoramic years since I came out of the maelstrom of picture making to sit looking upon this romantic caravanserai of the screen in the editorship of Motion Picture Herald, I have had to put pen to the recording of the passing of a notable succession of the great beginners and adventurers of the motion picture—Edison, Eastman, Kleine, Kennedy—vital figures, all of them, makers and founders of film tradition—all of them friends, friends so close that it has been an effort to hold them and their memories off at the arms length of the writer and commentator so as to deal with them in terms of fact rather than feeling. And now again, there is a choke in the throat as I turn again to my desk to write down another name in the roster of those who are gone—Lewis J. Selznick, a friend, too, and a gallant figure for screen history.

Like the rapid overlapping of a succession of screen dissolves recollections come from contacts and adventures with "L.J.", the most adventuresome, the most blithely abandoned of them all. I can remember him well the day that, after his first flurry of fame with the World Film Corporation, when he set out without a dollar and only a promise from Clara Kimball Young in his pocket, James R. Quirk, "Jimmy" to us, guaranteed "L.J.'s" account at the Claridge bar so that he would have a base of promotional activity. . . We spent the afternoon, the trio of us, in the taproom getting the account a good start.

AND THERE were times in happy sequel thereafter when "L.J." had his credit in terms of millions, with an ornate establishment in Park Avenue. And again, I sat between him and a Ku Klux Klan disaster on a curious expedition to Florida in the days of the big, big boom. But probably the best times of all were the quiet days in New York when he wanted to escape the pressures of his success and the sycophants of Broadway and we took refuge downtown where cloak and suits overlap the zones of silk and fur in a certain very kosher restaurant famed for its herring marinete, its soup with matzoth balls and its paprika chicken. It was at long afternoon sessions over the hot tea from the samovar, served in Russian fashion in tall glasses, that "L.J." ceased to be the trader, the militant Broadway entrepreneur, and became for the hour the genially ironic philosopher. We were, he often said, a pair of damnfools, I because I would not make money and he because he would not keep it. "But," said "L.J.", "we get a million dollars worth of laughs they'll never take away from us."

It is only those who know the bitter who know how to laugh. Selznick did. He was born back in the cruel year of 1870 in Kiev, Russia, land of persecution and oppression. America's opportunities and the mad fantasies of the motion picture's hectic growth had a meaning to him. When he died last week in Hollywood he had only the relics of his screen-made fortunes left, but he had, too, the realization of the full taste of success and a glamoured pride that in Hollywood, the picture capital, his sons had come into attention and successes of their own—in the name of Selznick. The life of Lewis J. Selznick is a great unwritten American novel.

Sprightly old Daniel Frohman was soliloquizing one day this week and remarked: "You go out the door to walk down Broadway. On the doorstep you stub your toe and change your mind and go down Sixth avenue. Then maybe the whole course of your life is changed."

Of just such casual threads of destiny the motion picture career of Lewis J. Selznick was woven.

One day more than twenty years ago, it must have been about 1912, tall, precise and military Mark M. Dintenfass, president of Champion brand pictures, a component of the growing Universal program, set forth on a trip to Chicago, taking the Broadway Limited out of New York. Somewhere along the way he observed that the young woman who occupied the seat across the aisle was pleasant to look upon. He managed to be of assistance about the window shade or some such matter and managed to make conversation. She was, it appeared, going to Pittsburgh.

"I used to visit Pittsburgh, myself," observed Dintenfass, "when I was a salesman—before I got into business for myself, that was. I had a great friend there—he was with the Keystone Jewelry Company, in Diamond Alley—Louie, Louie J. Selznick, was his name."

"Why, why," the young woman stammered with excitement, "he's my brother-in-law—I've just been visiting at his house in Brooklyn."

And so they were all at once friends, while Dintenfass chattered on, remembering the while how so many years before he had come upon this same Selznick, making merry with the girls behind the counter in that Pittsburgh delicatessen where they had the very good pickled herring. Dintenfass and Selznick alike had a fondness for that herring. On the herring a warm friendship was founded, renewed at every Pittsburgh call of the young salesman. But years had gone by—Dintenfass was a salesman no more. He had become a picture magnate, 1911 model, albeit a bit of a worried magnate, what with Carl Laemmle on the one side and P. A. Powers on the other, in that Universal company. Still he was doing well—and merrily on his way to Chicago in the swift elegance of the Broadway Limited.

"So, how is Louie doing now in Brooklyn?"

Louie, it was related, was in truth not doing so well. He had after a manner of speaking failed in the jewelry business in Sixth avenue over in New York and was just now in ill health, but trying to see what he might do in real estate in Brooklyn.

When the young woman left the train at Pittsburgh she had the card of Mark M. Dintenfass of Champion brand pictures in her hand and an injunction to write to Selznick to get in touch with his old friend in New York.

IN DUE SEASON there was a meeting between the old friends and much remembering of the Pittsburgh days, and many confidences. One of the confidences was the fact that Selznick's ill health was a touch of the then much more mysterious malady known as diabetes.

This disclosure struck Dintenfass with the force of inspiration. Up at 1600 Broadway where the Universal offices were, an acquaintance of Dintenfass was seeking to dispose of an agency for a line of diabetic bread and cereal products. That was obviously the very spot for Selznick. Dintenfass became for the moment an investor in diabetic foods and installed Selznick in charge. When some ten days later Dintenfass could spare the time from the high pressure concerns of Champion brand pictures he dropped into the office up in the Mecca building to see how Selznick was progressing. The place was entirely full of progress, which is to say painters, decorators and gilders. Dintenfass was alarmed. Costs were in sight.

"Louie," he counseled, "maybe I can get you into the picture business—maybe it would be a better business than diabetes—what?"

With that Dintenfass went down to confer with Carl Laemmle of Universal.

"That fellow Selznick—I set him up in the diabetes business and he's about to break me on gold leaf—I can't fire him, but you give him a job and then you can let him go."

No matter what that conference amounted to, Selznick from his point of vantage in the Mecca building already had started to put the motion picture business under observation. He almost immediately appeared ready for action. He had discovered, among other interesting facts, that there was a war, slightly submerged but a war, for control, or at least the perquisites of control, between Carl Laemmle and P. A. Powers, and that meanwhile Dintenfass stock held the balance of power. He set out to negotiate a sale to Powers. The meeting between Selznick and Powers was more exciting than immediately productive.

However, while Selznick could not get Powers outwardly excited about buying the Dintenfass stock, he did manage to sell him a few diamonds from a paper of gems, left over from his wind-up in the jewelry business a few months before.

Selznick's next call was on Laemmle. Selznick sold some more gems—and himself.

He appears to have made a considerable impression of ability on Laemmle. Arrangements were made to give Selznick desk room, in return for which he would counsel Laemmle about business affairs.

Almost immediately the motion picture industry and its suppliers received a mimeographed letter announcing Lewis J. Selznick as general manager of the Universal concern. This letter was based on nothing whatever but Mr. Selznick's confidence in Mr. Selznick and his plans. Universal knew nothing about it. However, affairs being as they were in that office at the time, with few of the principal parties at interest speaking to each other, there was none to contradict Selznick's appointment of himself.

"I knew I could get away with it," "L. J." related years after, "because none of those fellows ever read their mail. Anyway if they'd have seen my letter they would have thought the other officers put it over."

FOR SOME weeks Selznick functioned a great deal like a general manager would if there had been a general manager. Meanwhile Laemmle was becoming increasingly aware. One afternoon, at 2:45 o'clock, Laemmle's secretary approached Selznick's desk with a sealed envelope. Selznick put it in his pocket without opening it, as he glanced at his watch to verify the time. It was the hour of departure for the Twentieth Century, Limited, which that day was carrying Mr. Laemmle west.

"What the hell," Selznick observed pleasantly. "I know I'm fired, but I hope he didn't think I was going to dynamite the office."

Selznick reached for his hat and stepped off into Broadway. It was to be his street now. He had learned about the motion picture business enough to know that.

LEWIS J. SELZNICK

A few blocks on his way he turned into the World Special Film Corporation, where a new motion picture acquaintance sat in charge.

"Tell me, Mr. Mandelbaum—how much will you take for the World?"

Emanuel Mandelbaum thought quickly, multiplied by two and shot back the answer—"Forty thousand dollars."

"I'll give you a hundred thousand," responded Selznick, "but not in cash."

Somewhere among the film warrens of Forty-sixth street Selznick acquired an arrangement to buy a foreign film drama by the prophetic title of "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." He wanted backing and capital. He knew there was some in Wall street. Downtown he went calling on the most probable of the investment bankers with a curious story. He would be happy to introduce them to the new bonanzaland of the motion picture and for that purpose he would permit just a hundred persons to buy one share each in "Whom the Gods Would Destroy" for the groundfloor price of $42.50 a share. Some of the bankers bought, whether out of impatience or curiosity is immaterial. From this adventure came the World Film Corporation with a banking affiliation with the house Ladenberg, Thalman & Company. THE WORLD FILM concern became briefly effulgent and the most effulgent thing about it was the large type used in its trade press advertisements which, while casually mentioning pictures, chiefly sold the fact that L. J. Selznick was vice president and general manager.

There was a conference one day and a directors' meeting. After which Selznick was picking himself up in Broadway, fancy free again. He and Mrs. Selznick took a trip to Florida. Then Clara Kimball Young, principal star for the World Film Corporation, took a trip to Florida.

So in time came a star series, based on the great box office power of Clara Kimball Young and merchandised by L. J. Selznick, into the market. Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law" set the exhibition world afire. Selznick sold franchises and collected advance deposits, making the business finance itself as it went. Along came Norma and then Constance Talmadge. Success blossomed. The Selznick exploitation technique reached flamboyant floration on Broadway. For Selznick pictures, the first great electric bulletins devoted to the films were built. He evolved the technique of the fete-preview with parties at the Ritz Carlton.

Now all this interloping success was an invasion of the more orderly procedure of Adolph Zukor and the Famous Players-Lasky Company. Famous Players-Lasky had corralled something close to eighty per cent of the top grade of box office talent and this Selznick excitement was cutting into selling plans, playing time and grosses.

There were conferences and negotiations. Selznick fell ill and took to bed at the Hotel Astor. Adolph Zukor went to call.

"He offered me $5,000 a week if I would go to China and stay there," Selznick afterward remarked. Which led me to the observation that China might then have had a Russian emperor and some real imperial management.

MEANWHILE, all the while in the background, Marcus Loew was a silent, sometimes grinning supporter of the exciting Selznick. There were many reasons, ancient differences with Adolph Zukor, and the very current fact that Loew as an exhibitor was feeling the pressure of the Zukor merchandising policies. Selznick's rampant invasion of the Famous Players-Lasky position was not unpleasant to Loew.

Pursuant to the wisdom of the old adage "If you can't lick 'em, join 'em," Zukor arrived at a Trojan horse arrangement whereby he became a partner in the Selznick picture enterprise. Then like the darkening shadow of an eclipse traveling across the face of the earth, the new Select Pictures wiped the proud name of Selznick off the electric light signs, the billboards and the maintitles. Select prospered mightily, but Selznick sitting in the darkness

ANALYSIS OF BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS SHOWS UNSOPHISTICATED FILMS PAY

More Than 80 Per Cent of "Champions" of Last Year Also Endorsed in National Previewing Groups' Selections

Performances of "Box-office Champions" and their relation to endorsed lists of the national previewing groups have dispelled the antiquated idea that "unsophisticated pictures don't pay."

What makes a good box-office picture? A story in which sex is predominant? No, says the exhibitor. Pollyanna pictures? No, he repeats. What, then? One point registered in the study is that it takes both fan and "highbrow" audiences to make a bull's-eye at the ticket window; unsophisticated box-office pictures, endorsed by various previewing groups, are numbered to a very large extent among MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S lists of "box-office champions."

Out of 87 pictures selected last year as champions, 71, or a little better than 82 per cent, have been endorsed by these groups, which include the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, National Council of Jewish Women, National Society of Daughters of the American Revolution, the Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Society of New England Women, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Women's University Club of Los Angeles, United Church Brotherhood of California, Boy Scouts of America, and the Young Men's Christian Association.

Of the 71 endorsed pictures for 1932, 41 per cent were recommended for children, and an even higher percentage for the 1930-31 season. During the last six months of the 1930-31 season there were 35 "champions," of which 29 were endorsed, 18 being recommended for children, making the total percentage of endorsed box-office champions for that period 80 per cent, and the pictures recommended for children were 60 per cent as against 41 per cent for the past year.

A tabulation of pictures endorsed in the 1930-31 season through December of 1932 follows. With the exception of 1930, the figures are arranged in three-month sections. All of these figures represent box-office champions, approved or not so approved by 10 nationally known previewing groups. The letter "F" designates the number "endorsed for family"; "A," for adults, and "no," disapproved for all ages:

	F	A	Approv'd	No.
1930-31 season to October, 1931	9	4	13	2
October to December, 1931	9	7	16	4
January to April, 1932	11	8	19	0
April to July	7	9	16	8
July to October	7	9	16	4
October to December	7	14	21	4
	50	51	101	22

"These figures and what they stand for, have been contrary not only to the opinion of the average exhibitor but to public opinion," said Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. "For some unknown reason, both the public and the exhibitor have felt that any films which had been recommended by women's clubs or other organizations could not possibly be box-office draws, but these figures are conclusive proof that previous sentiments are not justified.

"Leading exhibitors in the industry are beginning to realize this condition, and in a great many instances are in complete sympathy with the purpose behind these endorsed lists. Why shouldn't they be when it has been so definitely established that almost 85 per cent of the 'Box-Office Champions' are endorsed by representative organizations? Nevertheless, there is still a very large percentage of exhibitors and so-called 'fan' audiences who believe that endorsed films must be moralistic in their attitude, and that nothing which has been endorsed can possibly have anything in the way of excitement or thrills. This class of person is laboring under a misapprehension. What film could possibly have more universal appeal than 'The Champ,' or 'Trader Horn,' 'Animal Crackers,' 'Palmy Days,' or 'Lady With a Past,' which, in spite of its suggestive title, was recommended for all?

"The whole situation simply boils itself down to this," said Mr. Milliken; "the fan audience comprised of only 'fans' is finished for the reason that the so-called fan no longer has as much money to spend on entertainment. These lists, in addition to stopping sweeping cricism of films, are building audiences of people who never went to pictures before because of a lack of interest."

New Audiences Building

Mr. Milliken said that the lists of the 10 organizations are sent out each month to at least 20,000 individuals and clubs. About 50,000 more, he said, get partial lists of some sort from their local clubs through printed lists, radio broadcasts, newspapers, library bookmarks, and club news. He also pointed out that this number is mounting steadily and that within a comparatively short time it might be doubled.

"It is easy to see what the result will be," he said. "It's all a matter of getting the exhibitor to cooperate with the civic groups to battle their way out of this depression and put the motion picture on the high level where it belongs, and, what is more important, through the medium of these lists to build the largest potential audience in history, the juvenile. Parents are now able to let their children go to shows unaccompanied, because they know beforehand whether the film is suitable. This permits children to become film-minded where such a thing was not possible before."

The motion picture committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in its latest report reiterates that the committee believes in a policy of cooperation rather than one of negative criticism and force, and that its selection and endorsement of films is prompted only in the interest of those groups whom it represents, with no thought given to any type of extraneous influence in regard to decisions concerning pictures or the general method of operation. This adequately represents the attitude of all previewing groups. The committee in the report, for the summer of 1932, reported an upward trend in the quality of featuring pictures, and said that one of its greatest problems was not so much in the quality of the film itself, but in misleading and offensive advertising connected with it. That such methods still exist, is unquestioned, the report says, but that there has been evident improvement must be recognized.

Shows New Audiences Are Being Built, Says Milliken, and Pictures Endorsed by Clubs Can Be Best Money Makers

Cooperation and Faith

"Suggestive and salacious advertising results naturally in continued unfortunate criticisms and a regrettable lowering of the tone of motion pictures. All of these things are taken into consideration when the committee is judging a picture," says the report. "It is not enough to say that a picture is good if the title is poor or the advertising misrepresentative. Inappropriate titles have killed a great many films at the box-office."

"What makes a good box-office picture? The answer might be good stories, which are obviously necessary," said Mr. Milliken, "or it might be good acting, good photography, and truthful advertising. It is, in reality, a combination of all these, but more particularly, it is a question of cooperation and a firmer faith in the judgment of those organizations which have taken it upon themselves, for no personal gain, to decide the difference between good and bad.

"When exhibitors wake up to the fact that practically four out of five 'box-office champions' are endorsed films, and make use of their knowledge of that fact, the slump in the industry will be a thing of the past."

Fox, Educational Salesmen Meeting in Key Situations

The first meetings between managers, salesmen and bookers of Fox and Educational-World Wide took place this week in key cities throughout the country.

It was announced last week that the status of various Educational home office officials had not been definitely decided upon, but that the advertising and sales departments would not be disturbed. E. W. Hammons, president, said that Jack Skirball and Joe Goldberg, sales executives, would continue in their posts. This week, however, it was reported that Mr. Goldberg would withdraw from his position, and that Jack Skirball would move to Fox to follow Educational sales. Mr. Skirball confirmed in part the report that he was moving to Fox by saying, "I shall spend some of my time over there and some of it here. It all depends which is easiest." Mr. Goldberg could not be reached for a statement.

KBS, of which Educational owns all preferred stock and 51 per cent of the common, will deliver five more pictures scheduled, according to William Saal. The remaining 49 per cent of the common is owned by Mr. Saal, Burt Kelly and Sam Bischoff.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THERE'S a note of defiance in Radio's new "King Kong" picture of prehistoric monsters in battle. A fifty-foot ape will be seen hurling automobiles at the New York Stock Exchange. He tears up a whole section of the Sixth Avenue Elevated structure, which rumbles noisily past Radio City's two theatres. The monster's last stand is atop Al Smith's pet Empire State building, from which he fights a squadron of Army airplanes. In a final despairing gesture the old brute seizes a plane from the air with one hand and dashes it to the street below.

The Roxy influence evidently had something to do with the creation of Kong, who measures: height, 50 feet; face, seven feet from hairline to tip of chin; nose, two feet (thereby ending Mr. Durante's claim to distinction); lips, six feet from corner to corner; brows, four feet, three inches; mouth, six feet when stretched in a smile (a la Chevalier); eyes, each ten inches long; ears, a foot long; eyeteeth, ten inches high, seven inches at base; molars, fourteen inches round, four inches high; chest, 60 feet in repose; legs, 15 feet; arms, 23 feet; reach 75 feet. What a man!

Kong is captured by one of those inquisitive motion picture expeditions and is brought to New York for exhibition, but escapes. In pursuit of a girl with whom he becomes infatuated, he runs amuck in the crowded street, tearing down structures, doing damage such as only RKO's ape could accomplish. It has been two years in production.

Victor Meyers, manager of RKO's Orpheum at New Orleans, mistaking notoriety for publicity, attracted attention to his feature showing by parading a young couple decorated with a sign, "They Just Had to Get Married." Bringing up the rear was an old gent with a double-barreled shotgun.

And in Baltimore, Leon H. Zellers caught himself a bit of criticism in connection with "Guilty as Hell" at the Roxy. Mr. Zellers caused to be issued a piece of literature which was folded so that the words "Go to Hell Sunday and We Mean It" were displayed with no little prominence. When unfolded, the whole announcement read, "GO TO see 'Guilty as HELL' SUNDAY and Monday only AND WE MEAN IT!"

Now that our Colvin W. This move puts Mr. Brown geographically between Martin Quigley's Island Hearth, jutting into the waters of Greenwich Cove, and Terry Ramsaye's Tinker's Green, in the Silvermine edge of Wilton. Incidentally, a private lake project now under development may change the name of the estate to Tinker's Dam.

One characteristic of Lewis J. Selznick will always be remembered—his frankness. Back in 1917, he told the Wheeler motion picture investigating committee that "less brains are necessary in the picture business than in any other," and as evidence said that he started a film company, coming fresh from the jewelry business, with $1,000 and cleared $105,000 in ten weeks.

Sidney Franklin, the bull-fighting Brooklynite who went to Latin Countries of America and Europe and made himself a reputation as a matador, attended the AMPA luncheon at Sardi's last Thursday as the special guest of the president, Hal Horne. Mr. Horne is advertising director of United Artists, distributor of the Cantor-Franklin picture, "Kid from Spain." After listening patiently for an hour to the quips of film row gagsters, actors, press agents and whatnot, Mr. Franklin was asked to say a little piece, which he did quite well. But first he apologized for not possessing some of the "brilliance" which permeated the gathering. "After all," he said, "I only KILL the bull." (At $7,000 per kill.)

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer soberly decided the other day to crystallize into celluloid a question of momentous importance to which the nation's thirsty impatiently await an answer. It will take the form of a feature titled "What! No Beer?" Filibusters will not be tolerated on the Metro lot.

Paramount's Hollywood studio was without a senior corporate executive on the eve of the receivership announcement. Emanuel Cohen, vice president in charge of production, was riding westward from conferences in New York. Home office executives flashed word to Kansas City ordering him to alight from the Chief and to take to the air. He had missed the regular passenger plane and proceeded aboard the train to Albuquerque in New Mexico, where he picked up a chartered airplane, arriving in Hollywood just in time to take command.

The real reason why Prince Henry Gergusson Romanoff quit the Broadway Palace so suddenly in midweek was because prosecuting officials of the Federal government offered him more time than RKO.

Evidently, Robert F. Sisk, advertising impresario of RKO, has been studying the economic relation of theatre advertising expenditures to the weighty problem of international debts. Money wasted by theatres on exploitation and on newspaper ads in the past ten years, said Mr. Sisk, would pay off the national debts of Esthonia, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Albania, Bosnia, and the Galapagos Islands. . . . "to say nothing of coming in handy today."

Monsieur Pierre Autré, Parisian correspondent for MOTION PICTURE HERALD, posts from Rue de la Cour-des-Noues an interview with Jeanette MacDonald, former Paramount player, who arrived on the Continent to shop. The young lady indicated that she would make a picture abroad if she finds a suitable story. "Actually, there are too many stories about bed, or home, or theatre," she said, "I want something new."

REPORTS from the field, where Pola Negri is winding up a tour of RKO theatres, indicate she gave house staffs the jitters trying to keep her humored. A week's temperamental storming in Kansas City was climaxed at the Union Station, where she went to dine before departing for Omaha. Approaching the dining room, a crowd of faithful fans gathered to pay their respects. With her Slavic temper flaming, Pola retreated to the Travelers' Aid desk, demanding help of the secretary.

"I'm seek of the public," stormed the young lady. "I'm hungry and must dine alone. What are you going to do about it?"

The Travelers' Aid official sought out the lunchroom manager, who agreed to open the adjoining restaurant. Lights were turned on and a corps of waitresses assigned. But Pola still pouted. There were too many lights; curious, common people might look through the door.

The manager obliged by turning out the lights. So, in solitary grandeur in the large dining room, with but one little light to illuminate her table, the ex-princess dined at ease—and stowed away a seven-course dinner—at midnight.

The month just passed witnessed a new high in transcontinental traveling by picture people. Dozens of executives came out of the west on the run. Others traveled the other way only to turn right around and come hurrying back to the center of things financial in New York. At one time or another during the four weeks speeding pullmans or fast planes carried to or from the Coast, Sidney R. Kent, Jack Warner, Winfield Sheehan, Bill Saal, Spyros Skouras, E. W. Hammons, Harold B. Franklin, A. J. Michel, George Bagnall, Nicholas M. Schenck, Emanuel Cohen, Howard Dietz, Ned Depinet, Will H. Hays, J. Robert Rubin, among others. Magnetic Wall Street had something to do with the heavy transportation. The railroads benefited accordingly.

Four unchecked Metro feature engagements which played on a guarantee against percentage arrangement returned one $12 overage—an average overage of $3 per picture. Five checked performances in the same theatre yielded total overages of $96, or an average for the five days of $19.20 each. There appears to be quite an advantage of checked performances over unchecked. However, checking costs on the five engagements totaled $79.28, which reduced the net overage to $16.72, or an average of $3.37. The advantage, therefore, was 37 cents per picture, not even enough for a good jigsaw puzzle.

Two pictures showing currently—"Bitter Tea of General Yen" and "Son-Daughter" both depict Chinese life. "Son-Daughter" shows Helen Hayes posing for her portrait, which her father, Lewis Stone, is painting. Producers should be more careful. Such a situation might lead to a tong war.

Parents Scored, Action Trend Seen In Milliken Talks

Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, scored the parents of the country for their lack of effort in guiding the interests of their children to those films which have constructive as well as entertainment value, in an address this week before the Children's Theatre Conference of the Junior Leagues of America, Inc., at Cleveland.

Earlier in the week Mr. Milliken, addressing the Woman's Press Club of New York City, indicated that current trends in motion picture production emphasize action rather than dialogue. Two factors were noted by the speaker as responsible for the trend: first, the studio realization that despite superficial similarity the screen is an entirely different medium from the stage, appealing to larger audiences, and second, technical improvement has progressed to the point where absolute silence is possible between portions of dialogue. "Unsolicited scenarios are never used," Mr. Milliken said, pointing out that "last year more than 78,000 pieces of literature were sifted to find material for 550 feature films."

At the Cleveland meeting, Mr. Milliken outlined the preview methods now employed by which socially minded organizations are enabled to recommend films especially suitable for children, and expressed the opinion that definite approaches have been made to a "cinema of, by and for the child. . . . Although child attendance constitutes less than 10 per cent of general patronage, that 10 per cent is vastly important because it represents the entertainment taste of the potential audience of tomorrow."

Cinema Patents Wins on Appeal

The circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit in San Francisco has reversed the decree of the trial court in the action of Cinema Patents Company, Inc., against Columbia Pictures and William Horsley Laboratories, holding the Gaumont & Thompson patents on film developing method and apparatus valid and infringed by the defendant. The suit involved legal construction of a lease and license agreement, under which Columbia claimed the right to alter and change a positive developing machine for developing negative film.

Cinema Patents contended in its action that the agreement provided only for the use of the machine in its original condition for developing positive film. By the decree of the higher court, the defendant will be enjoined from using the altered machine for developing negative film, and the plaintiff will be awarded an accounting of damages and profits to be recovered.

Cinema Patents also plans to continue its pending patent infringement action against Meyer-Rieger Laboratories, Inc., according to Harold Menken, representing Cinema Patents. Trial is expected to begin shortly in federal court, New York.

THEATRE AND TAXATION

same patronage, he tries to license the more desirable and profitable attractions before his rival obtains them. This usually involves long-term agreements with the wholesaler.

In contrast with other retail establishments, theatres cannot carry unsold goods in stock until sold. Every change in program means an entirely new line of merchandise to sell, with none of the previous day's goods carried over. Customers who want the picture that was on exhibition the previous week cannot be accommodated; they must seek another theatre which has not yet exhibited that picture or accept an entirely different article. This unavoidable feature of the business requires entirely different methods of operation than other retailers pursue.

Every one knows that few wealthy people are motion picture patrons. It is obvious that the picture theatres are not patronized by those suffering extreme poverty, nor the wholly uneducated, the illiterate and those who do not understand the language. Probably not over half of the population are regular patrons, though most people are at least occasional patrons. The regular patrons of motion picture theatres today are mostly working people, salaried workers and wage earners, people who earn their living by their own efforts, and the families of these workers—the class of people that are the most distressed by the depression, salary and wage cuts, widespread unemployment, decline in farm prices, and increases in other forms of taxation.

Cannot Pass It On

Now it is being proposed that these people should be singled out and asked to stand an additional tax burden, not because it is considered a fair tax, but on the theory that it is to be collected through a third party who will act as a shield for the Government in its role of nuisance tax collector. This raises the question of who will pay the tax after it is levied.

Eventually, of course, the ultimate consumer pays any tax that is levied either in higher prices or lowered quality. Admission tax proposals are invariably based on the false theory that they can be added to the price of each ticket and passed on to the patron, the theatre standing only the cost of collecting the pennies, accounting for and remitting the amounts at regular intervals under heavy penalties for delays or errors. But the laws of economics are not so easily changed.

Motion picture theatre admission prices, in the final analysis, are dictated by the public and by competitive conditions; they cannot be raised or lowered arbitrarily without disastrous results. Admission prices are fixed by "market conditions" in the immediate community where the theatre is located. By market is meant the consumer-demand for the type of motion picture entertainment usually on sale at the theatre. There is a definite economic level of admission charges at each theatre, varying from time to time with local conditions and competition for patronage, that will produce the greatest total receipts. This price level is arrived at by the theatre management, sometimes unconsciously, through trial and error. If the admission charges are either raised or lowered from this level, the total receipts are reduced. When admission prices are raised the attendance falls off to more than compensate the increased price per ticket, and if reduced the increase in attendance is not sufficient to equalize the difference in price on each ticket.

Faced with a 10 per cent admission tax, the theatre owner can either add a few pennies to the price of each ticket and suffer a certain decrease in attendance of 10 per cent or more, or turn over a flat 10 per cent of his gross sales every day to the Government in satisfaction of their special tax demands. Either may well mean a forced closing or bankruptcy. Every item of expense at the average theatre today has been pared to the bone; further reductions clearly will impair the quality of service of the quality of the show, with additional loss of patronage inevitable. If one cent for an additional tax is forcibly taken out of the box office dime, less than half of it can come from profit in even the most successful theatres.

Theatre owners are certainly justified in feeling that special taxes levied solely on motion pictures are unfair and unjustified. None of these special taxes is used to aid or improve their business; the money is raised for wholly unrelated purposes. Theatres have always cheerfully paid all general forms of taxation levied on all businesses alike, but feel it is most unfair to be singled out for a special and drastic tax burden not generally imposed on other lines of business activity. Theatres are now paying millions of dollars in real and personal property taxes on both closed and open theatres. The appraised valuation of motion picture theatre property for tax purposes in this country is well over $2,000,000,000. They now pay income taxes, corporation taxes, franchise fees and all other general taxes as levied. They also pay many special state and city taxes not levied on other businesses, such as license or privilege taxes, inspection fees, seat taxes, sign taxes, etc.

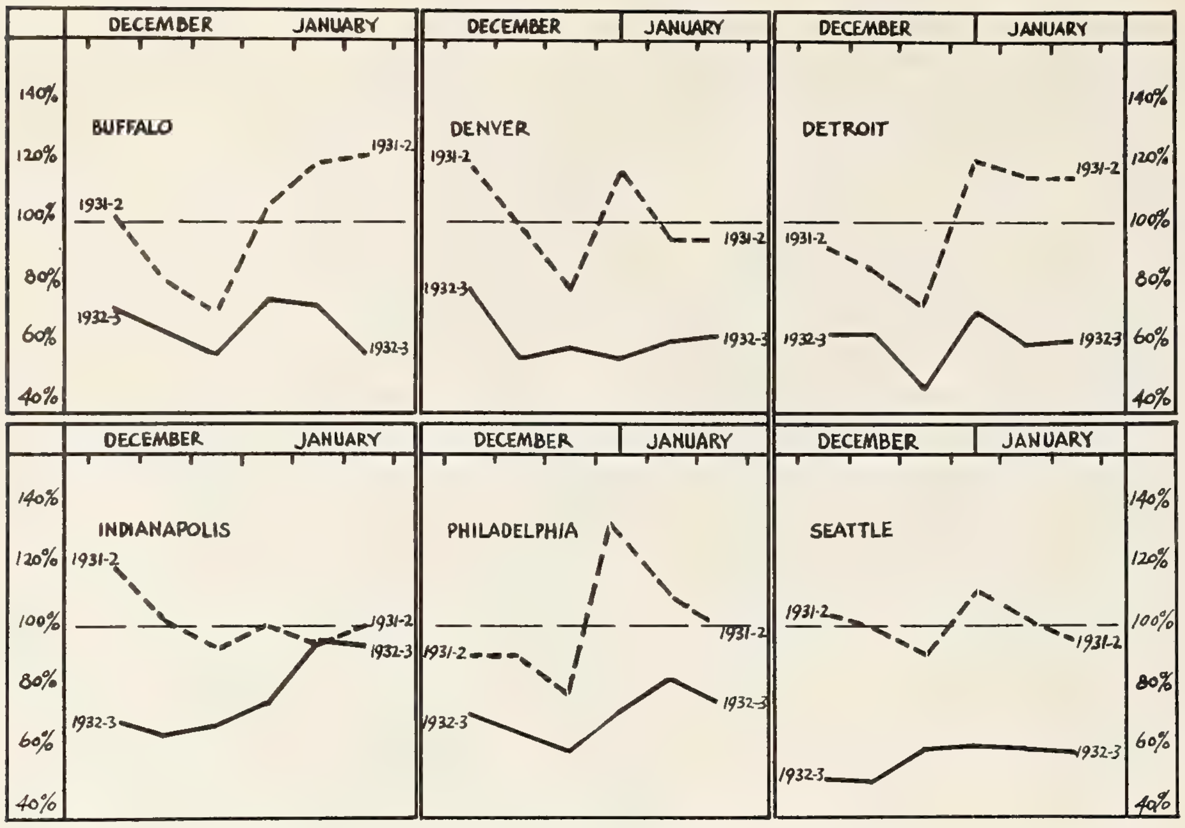
It is evident that the motion picture business has suffered a steady decline since 1929, due primarily to circumstances over which it had no control. More than 25 per cent of all of the motion picture theatres in the United States are now dark—closed because they cannot take in enough at their box office to meet their payroll, rent, film cost, taxes and essential operating expenses. A recent comprehensive survey shows 5,895 of the 19,311 theatre accounts in the country have already closed; many others are in operation but one or two nights a week. No theatre remains closed if it can possibly operate and meet expenses; the fixed charges have to be met by the owner even on a closed theatre. A heavy special tax burden cannot fail to increase the mortality rate.

In the face of trying conditions, courageous and sustained efforts are continuously being made to keep theatres open, even where the receipts do not equal the minimum operating expense, to provide maximum employment, and to serve every community possible with essential low priced entertainment. The very nature of the local theatre's business contributes every day in an essential and important way to the welfare, morale and contentment of a large part of the population, so badly needed in these trying times.

Sheehan in East On Production

Winfield Sheehan, in charge of Fox production, arrived in New York this week to resume conferences with Sidney R. Kent, president, on next season's production schedule. It is understood that it will also schedule. It is understood that discussions also will touch upon any production policy changes arising from the deal with Educational.



The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's listings of box-office grosses, compares the business done in six cities during December and the first two weeks in January this season and last. The 100% line represents the average weekly gross during the six weeks period of 1931-32.

FLEXIBLES MAY BRING NEW RELEASE SYSTEM

Exhibitor Leaders Protest Price Cutting, and Attack Exclusive Runs; Few Independent Distributors to Use Flexibles

Although distribution executives refuse to commit themselves officially on sales policies for the new season, several companies are understood to have decided definitely that flexible admissions to conform with fluctuating quality of pictures are the logical successor to exclusive runs. Results of a nationwide investigation of exclusive showings and details of the flexible plan, presented in part last week in Motion Picture Herald, are concluded herewith with comment of many readers.

New York sales executives predict that, if flexible admissions are successful, distributors in another year or two will cease premature listing of specifications of pictures to be released in the flexible group and will, instead, designate without titles or other details a certain number at the beginning of each season for showing under the flexible plan. Then, as the season progresses and certain ace possibilities are forthcoming, test showings will be conducted.

"Exclusive runs," according to Charles R. Metzger, of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, "appear to be still in the balance, with many indications pointing to their abandonment for the reason that, in the long run, they appear to be economically unsound for both the distribution and exhibition branches."

During an informal discussion last week of the admission cutting movement, New York executives estimated that the widespread price slashes have lost millions to the industry during the past 12 months.

"The days of selling a 16-cylinder Packard and a Ford car for the same price will end with adoption of flexible admissions," said an MPPDA representative.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox, is the author of the flexible admission plan, which would establish a 25-cent minimum for a group of between 50 and 60 so-called "ace" pictures released yearly. Under Mr. Kent's plan, the so-called "ace" picture would get an extra day's booking, playing Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at a 25-cent minimum and probably a 35-cent top. The increase, therefore, would be from 5 to 15 cents above the average 20-cent scale. Weak product would be spotted in on Mondays and Tuesdays, at 15 cents. Average features would be played Sundays at 20 cents. This would enable the exhibitor to play the usual number of features of an average or below average caliber.

Many, particularly exhibitors in the field, have voiced the opinion that theatre owners should participate in the selection of the ace group, but distributors hold that there is no more reason why exhibitors should have a direct voice in this than in designating which pictures are to be released as specials, or in determining rentals charged, under the present system of distribution. However, leaders do not expect any serious differences on this.

Arthur Lucas, well known Southern exhibitor, said: "Admission price slashes should be shunned because the increase brought about by such stimulant is too brief and ultimately will result in less gross box-office receipts."

According to Col. H. A. Cole, president of the Allied States in Texas, "exclusive runs have proven to be a fantastic dream, and are on the way out." He said: "It is better for this industry to play to the large clientele as represented by 75 to 80 per cent of our population, at a dime, than to cater to the other 20 to 25 per cent who can afford 50 cents, but who, under present conditions, will seldom spend that 50 cents."

George P. Aarons, secretary of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, wrote this week that "exclusives are now a thing of the past."

Sidney Lust, operating 10 theatres out of Washington, D. C., said this week that "exclusive runs are a menace and they should not be tolerated."

Mr. Lightman, speaking for the MPTOA, wired: "The quicker every one in the industry realizes the necessity of reform by means of flexible admissions, the sooner a sense of security will return to us all."

Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois, was one of the fiercest antagonists of exclusive runs. The policy "seeks to reverse the accepted methods of business to secure as wide a distribution of product as possible," he said. "The public has the inherent right to select the theatre which it desires to patronize. We dare not attempt to classify the public."

Sales executives in New York are practically uniformly favorable in their views of the flexible admission plan, but maintain that the only serious difficulty might come from exhibitors in competitive situations who refuse to subscribe to it. They referred to possibili-

All distributors were canvassed for an explanation of their plans on flexibles. Few independents, if any, will use the idea in selling.

Jack Cohn, of Columbia, which vigorously denounced exclusive runs at the beginning of the season, said: "We believe that a flexible admissions policy, as it is rather vaguely suggested at the moment, has merit. However, we are not in favor of anything that might be unfair to the small theatre owner who charges less than 25 cents admission. As a matter of fact, the 15-cent house is doing more business today than the dollar house."

John Clark, in charge of distribution at Fox, said the company is conducting tests in the South and "Cavalcade" and "State Fair" will be made available for flexible admission showing. Mr. Clark said that no pictures were being sold this year to 10-cent houses.

Some distributors estimate that, when in practice nationally, $15,000,000 additional admissions will accrue from flexibles.

Paramount will use flexibles next season, although George Schaefer, sales manager, said the company had not yet formulated any definite policy on next season's sales. The first Paramount experiment with flexibles, and the first in New York, was launched last week at the Rialto. Paramount tried a few exclusive showings during the summer and then abandoned the plan as being unsound. Tests with flexibles are also being conducted at Memphis.

Ned Depinet, sales head of RKO, said: "It is too early for a decision which will involve our sales policy for next season. I only know that we must increase grosses or lower negative costs. Having more people attend motion picture theatres at lower admission charges will not solve the problem. We must make some arrangement with exhibitors on minimum admissions—possibly reserving the right to designate a certain number of a group of pictures as quality pictures and playing them at higher prices. It would probably be necessary to use the first-run period of one or two weeks as a trial."

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, declared emphatically against the use of exclusives. George Schaefer, sales manager, said: "If conditions don't get better there will be more 10-cent houses. Every one is looking out for himself. Universal is not so much concerned in the matter of flexible admissions. It is too early to tell about next season's policy."

Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Brothers, said the company has not decided on policy yet.

Industry leaders expect a system of selective runs—"flexibles"—to emerge from the present exclusive practice, said Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA.

SELZNICK A GREAT PERSONALITY

Came the evening when a new electric bulletin atop 729 Seventh avenue, above the Select offices, announced to the world that Olive Thomas was to star under the presentation of young master Myron Selznick.

Mr. Selznick and Mr. Zukor just could not agree after that. The Zukor interest in Select was sold back to Selznick. Realart Pictures were organized as a Zukor subsidiary project to provide competition for Select and Selznick. The battle was on again.

In terms of profit, Selznick probably made a vast mistake in this break with Zukor. But pride of name and fame, pride of fatherhood and the love of conflict, the joy of a joke—all these were rewards for Selznick, too.

"Select" went off the signs and "Selznick" came back. He coined the slogan "Selznick Pictures Make Happy Hours," then invited Al Lichtman, salesmanager for Mr. Zukor's product, to luncheon and managed to give him credit for the line. Presently Lichtman received a present of a costly watch engraved and diamond bestudded, bearing the message that L. J. Selznick was thanking him for "Selznick Pictures Make Happy Hours." Lichtman showed the handsome watch and "L. J." privately observed that he had "put a twenty-four sheet in the opposition's vest pocket."

SELZNICK was still rollicking along, making merry as he went. Before a congressional committee he declared that the motion picture business required less brains than any other industry, and cited some figures from his own ledgers in support of his testimony.

When the Czar of Russia was deposed, Selznick sent off a cable which, when translated from the original Russian, read approximately thus:

NICHOLAS ROMANOFF
PETROGRAD, RUSSIA
WHEN I WAS POOR BOY IN KIEV SOME OF YOUR POLICEMEN WERE KIND TO ME AND MY PEOPLE STOP I CAME TO AMERICA AND PROSPERED STOP NOW HEAR WITH REGRET YOU ARE OUT OF JOB OVER THERE STOP FEEL NO ILL WILL WHAT YOUR POLICEMEN DID SO IF YOU WILL COME NEW YORK CAN GIVE YOU FINE POSITION ACTING IN PICTURES STOP SALARY NO OBJECT STOP REPLY MY EXPENSE STOP REGARDS YOU AND FAMILY

SELZNICK
NEW YORK

After the story of the tragedy of Ekaterinburg became known, "L. J." remarked with feeling on the mistake the Czar had made in not accepting the offer.

The war with Zukor ran on and on. Selznick's banking strength waned and faded. His chronic illness was telling on him. He pushed his young sons, his very young sons, very far forward in his business.

ADMISSION PRICES AND FIXED CHARGES

Wall Street's interest in the current price-cutting movement and its relation to the general economic structure of the motion picture industry was reflected the other day in the Wall Street Journal, which said:

"Recently announced cuts in admission prices at Broadway theatres and around the country call attention to the real estate problems of the amusement companies which remain unsolved in spite of operating economies that have been made.

"In former years it was not considered safe for theatre fixed charges to amount to more than 20% of gross income, but since 1930 this ratio has been increasing, due to declines in gross, so that in 1932 Paramount's fixed charges amounted to about 40% of gross.

"So far, the decline in gross has been more rapid than the reduction in operating expenses. Income reached its lowest level last summer, and since then has shown some improvement, although December was disappointing. January results have been encouraging, due to better film releases."

THE MOST conspicuous surviving impress of the works of Selznick on the motion picture industry is the result of an incidental contact of his busy days—Will H. Hays. It chanced that through the era when the motion picture industry as centered in New York was becoming aware that there was work aplenty for a trade association to do, and a special job for a powerful special pleader, against the agitations and woes that beset the screen at the beginning of the last decade, there was in the Selznick organization an aggressive and industrious young lawyer from Indiana, Charles C. Pettijohn. This Mr. Pettijohn was, and is, not only a lawyer and a film man, but also an ambidextrous Democrat. Mr. Pettijohn had an Indiana acquaintance with Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican National Committee, and so Pettijohn found many a little thing to do in behalf of the campaign of Warren Gamaliel Harding.

Meanwhile the Selznick war with Zukor was losing, losing, losing. Pettijohn could observe that in the not far distant future there would be an end of the Selznick concern. He saw to it that Mr. Hays and Mr. Selznick got very well acquainted. The rest was simple. When the Harding landslide crowned Mr. Hays with glory and he went off to be postmaster general, he was a made man.

So it came that when the motion picture chieftains gathered to form the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Selznick put Hays in nomination, against the names of Herbert Hoover and Hiram Johnson. Selznick salesmanship triumphed as usual.

But the screen fortunes of Selznick continued to decline, on down into receivership and liquidation.

While that process was in progress, in 1925, the last considerable Selznick gesture was made. On a bankroll speculatively subscribed by a group of old friends, including incidentally P. A. Powers and Arthur Friend, once of Lasky connection, Selznick set out for Florida to see what might be done in motion picture guise anent the great real estate boom. His expedition arrived on that palm fringed coast just as the mania was passing its crest and nothing happened but some pieces in the Miami papers. It was a little too late in Florida and mayhap in the years of Selznick.

Not long after the Selznicks went to Hollywood, where "L. J." sat as advisor to his sons, Myron engaged in an agency for talent, David in production. The old, time tried friendships in the Loew organization, the relations built up with Joseph Schenck with the spectacular success of the Talmadge pictures, now stood in good stead. "L. J.'s" heirs and successors entered into the inner institution of the motion picture. His last years were comfortably unexciting, glinted by some merry memories and punctuated by occasional visits to the Broadway which had once blazed with his name.

L. J. Selznick has gone into history—one of the motion picture's great personalities—and in total a success.

Local No. 306 Receivers Are Removed by Court

The three receivers recently appointed for Operators Local 306, New York, by Judge Salvatore A. Cotillo of the Supreme Court, were removed this week by the Appellate division. The receivers were former Supreme Court Justice Samuel I. Rosenman, Philip J. Dunn, George W. Alger.

The decision was unanimous and granted IATSE, the parent body, the right to supervise the affairs of Local 306 on condition that it posts a bond of $500,000, which it agreed to do. This supervision will probably continue until other officers are elected for the local, which will be done providing Sam Kaplan, deposed president, loses his action for reinstatement.

ration, Pathe News, Inc., and the two theatres in Radio City.

Mr. Aylesworth made it clear that the receivership action does not include the production, distribution, studio or newsreel units, nor does it involve the Radio City properties. These will continue operation under their present management, he said.

Statement by Sarnoff

The relation of the receivership action to the Radio Corporation was explained in a statement by David Sarnoff, RCA president, who said:

> "So far as the interests of the Radio Corporation of America is concerned, it has made a substantial investment in the debentures and stock of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation because of its interest in the development of talking motion pictures, in which it was one of the pioneers, and because of its interests in radio broadcasting and the manufacture and sale of sound recording and reproducing equipment.
> "The motion picture and theatre industry, like other industries, must courageously face the fact that the general business depression has drastically reduced its gross income.
> "If this situation is faced frankly and without hesitation, entirely new conditions can be brought about in the entertainment industry, which requires rebuilding in order to serve the best interests of the public and of investors. To that end we shall work."

The voluntary petition by Orpheum was not filed with the United States district court clerk, but was taken directly to Judge Bondy, who did not reveal what the Orpheum Circuit had listed as assets and liabilities. The hearing which preceded the court's decision was in the nature of a conference. Kaufman and Weitzner represented the Orpheum Circuit, and William Mallard, general counsel for RKO, appeared for the parent corporation.

In the petition upon which the RKO motion was granted, Mr. West, through counsel, Robert H. Neilson, declared that while the corporation was solvent, it lacked liquid assets with which to meet future obligations. The petition charged that operations of RKO and its subsidiaries were profitable through 1930, but that in 1931 the net result was a loss of $5,660,770, and that during the first nine months of 1932, the corporation lost $4,964,331.

The Orpheum Circuit, Inc., a $23,000,000 operating company controlled by Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, has theatres in 27 cities in California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Oregon, Tennessee, Wisconsin, Washington, and in Alberta and Manitoba, Canada.

Urges Rental Revisions

"In spite of substantial economies which have been effected, profitable operation of these theatres under present business conditions has proved impossible because of the burdens of excessive rents and fixed charges," said Mr. Aylesworth, as chairman of the board of Orpheum. "A number of these theatres could be profitably run if necessary revisions of rentals and other fixed charges could be effected," he continued. "We hope that a reorganization of such theatres can work out such reductions."

The Orpheum Circuit is understood to have been operating at losses approximating $30,000 weekly. Harold B. Franklin is in charge of all theatres for the parent corporation.

In reporting details of Mr. West's petition in MOTION PICTURE HERALD last week, it was said that he is associated with the Bancamerica-Blair Corporation as manager of the aviation division. In view of the Bancamerica's interest in the RKO financial situation it was generally indicated that the move was a friendly action on the part of the various RKO banking interests. Chase Securities, Jeremiah Milbank and Bancamerica-Blair entered the RKO situation in 1931 by purchase of the six per cent gold notes issued by RKO to fund indebtedness incurred by the corporation's acquisition of Pathe assets. Under an extension of the loan from January 1, 1932, to January 1, 1933, the notes were secured under an indenture dated December, 1931, between RKO and Chemical Bank and Trust, as trustee. The gold notes were purchased by the Chase, Milbank, Bancamerica groups in $5,000 and $10,000 lots.

Mr. Aylesworth is a director of Irving Trust, the receiver, and reputedly he and the interests of the bank are on cordial terms.

Other Petitions

Coincident with the Orpheum petition last Friday, similar petitions were filed in the federal court in Delaware on behalf of RKO Western Corporation and RKO Southern Corporation, theatre units of the parent company. These petitions, signed by Harold B. Franklin, who likewise signed the Orpheum bill, stated the corporations owe debts but are unable to pay them in full. Judge John P. Nields, in United States district court at Wilmington, signed orders adjudicating both subsidiaries bankrupt and referred the case to United States Referee Charles W. Cullen of Georgetown, Del. Schedules are to be filed early next week. Richards, Layton and Finger, Wilmington attorneys, are solicitors for both circuit divisions.

The Southern Corporation was formed by RKO to operate theatres acquired from Karl Hoblitzelle in Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth and San Antonio. The Western Corporation operates Pacific Coast houses taken from Alexander Pantages.

Although Nat Holt, RKO's division manager in the Midwest, declared that properties supervised by him were all solvent and will continue to function and to meet obligations, Judge Robert Nezin, in United States district court in Ohio, on Monday appointed Isaac Libson, Cincinnati, and Elmer Rauh, Dayton, auxiliary co-receivers for RKO Midwest Corporation, which operates in Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton.

Judge Silverman of New York filed the petition against Midwest, as a bondholder, claiming default of interest on a $1,000 bond maturing in 1941. Counsel for the co-receivers, appointed by the Ohio court, are United States District Attorney Harry Abrams, Cincinnati; Sidney Kusworm, Dayton, and C. M. Gibson of Columbus.

Other Actions Filed

The various receiverships of RKO theatre subsidiaries involve approximately 65 houses, about one-half of the nationwide circuit.

Following the petition of Mr. West, other complainants filed actions in Newark and Baltimore. There was to be a hearing on the New Jersey action on Tuesday, but this was postponed to February 14. In this suit, Vice-chancellor Alfred A. Stein appointed Abe J. David, prosecutor of Union County, and Arthur Walsh, vice president of Thomas A. Edison Industries, Inc., as temporary receivers to take over all properties and interests of RKO in the state of New Jersey.

The complainant in this petition is Doris L. Charing of Newark, who stated she holds a note for $2,000 against the corporation.

In commenting upon the New Jersey situation, Mr. Aylesworth said:

"The action of the New Jersey state court in appointing temporary receivers for RKO was taken without any notice to the corporation or its officers. RKO is not incorporated in New Jersey and owns no property in that state.

"It is assumed that the court action was taken under a misapprehension as to these facts, and that the proceedings will be promptly dismissed."

The Jersey theatre properties referred to in the action probably are 17 houses in 10 towns, four of which are now dark, and which are operated under lease to subsidiary companies of the parent corporation, against which the action was filed.

Merritt Lane, a Newark attorney, is consel for the receivers in this case.

Baltimore Action

In the Baltimore action, the plaintiffs, Joseph H. Basker and Edward Goldman of Boston, who said they held 625 shares of RKO common stock, alleged "gross mismanagement" of RKO for the benefit of RCA, and claim that transfer of 5000,000 shares of class B stock to RCA was illegal. Circuit Court Judge H. Arthur Stump allowed the corporation until February 7 to show cause why the receivership should not be granted.

A further suit, filed in Baltimore circuit court, No. 2, by Edward J. Hickey, holding 175 shares of class A stock, asks that the refinancing plan of RKO be stopped, alleging that the plan aims at putting RCA in control.

Immediately following announcement of RKO's equity receivership, various minority groups began the formation of stockholders' protective committees, a customary procedure.

Joab H. Banton, former New York district attorney, with headquarters at 285 Madison avenue, formed an "Independent RKO Stockholders' Protective Committee." "A carefully formulated program covering the scope of this committee's activities has been completed and will be announced within a few days," Mr. Banton said. The committee seeks deposit of RKO securities. While refusing to make known the names of committee members, he said that no one who is in any wise identified with the management, directorate or banking interests of the corporation is included.

An investigation, "impartial but thorough," which will be conducted by the Banton group, will include "in its compass, the 1931 reorganization of the company, its purchase of Pathe, its transactions with regard to Trans Lux and its acquisition of divers chains of theatres."

During the weekend, another committee set out to perfect organization. This one is a joint Paramount and RKO stockholders' committee. Daniel W. Blumenthal, New York attorney, with headquarters at 474 Fifth avenue, is counsel. Maurice B. Blumenthal, attorney, and F. S. Kaufman, said to be a Paramount stockholder, are associated in the move.

Daniel Blumenthal, in announcing formation of the committee, which seeks deposits both of Paramount and RKO securities, said: "Through the aid of certified public accountants, the members of our committee, who will be only those who own or control a substantial amount of stock in the companies, will make a drastic investigation, and intend to dig deeply into the manner of operation and functioning of the companies during the past five years."

The book value of total assets of RKO are $104,000,000. In its answer to the West complaint, the corporation said that this is "more than $20,000,000 in excess of the liabilities" of parent company and subsidiaries, and includes as liabilities reserves of $10,400,000 and outstanding preferred stock of subsidiaries amounting to $9,600,000.

The aggregate assets of RKO have a book value of $80,500,000 and the company's indebtedness is $19,500,000, according to the answer. The aggregate assets include an investment of $75,000,000 in subsidiaries.

Assets include land, buildings, leaseholds and equipment with a book value of $75,000,000, "after write-downs during 1932 of about $16,000,000." Other assets of pictures, either in work, or already released, total $7,500,000,

"after deduction of substantial amortization on released pictures."

Total current assets, as of November 30, 1932, were: $26,534,774, including cash in bank, $122,106; subscriptions to debentures and stock, $3,240,165; notes due from affiliated companies, $23,157,960, and investments (securities, notes of and advances to associated and other companies), $52,032,941.

Liabilities on November 30 were $4,749,833, and funded debt and other liabilities amounted to $14,722,549. Total reserves were $26,598,914, and total capital stock and surplus, $34,500,884.

National gross receipts of RKO theatres on Monday were off 22.25 per cent, with operating expenses 29.70 per cent lower. Admission prices were down 11.95 per cent, and attendance was off 13.22. These figures are for the first three weeks of 1933, compared with the same period in 1932.

The parent corporation is currently grossing about $17,000,000 a year, at which figure the books are reputed to balance.

Representing Irving Trust Company is A. H. McCausland, who will supervise administration of both the RKO and the Orpheum receiverships. Mr. McCausland established headquarters Wednesday at Radio City. Col. William Donovan was appointed attorney for Irving Trust. Mr. Donovan, of the law firm of Donovan and Raichle, of 90 Broadway, represents the Broadway Twentieth Corporation, which has a receivership petition pending against Paramount.

In the Orpheum petition, Harold Franklin said that RKO "is willing to surrender all Orpheum properties for the benefit of its creditors." Preceding the receivership action, RKO officials, headed by Martin Beck, had been conferring with Speyer and Company and with J. and W. Seligman and Company, with a view to determining what action might be taken in splitting up the RKO holdings in the Orpheum group. This plan is being held in abeyance pending action of the receivers.

Westinghouse to Distribute Half Its RCA Stock Holding

The Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company on February 20 will distribute to its preferred and common stockholders approximately half of the 2,842,950 shares of Radio Corporation of America common stock held by it, conforming to the terms of the consent decree issued by the United States district court at Wilmington, Del., on November 22.

The distribution will be in the ratio of one-half share of Radio for each one share of Westinghouse preferred or common recorded on January 23. Decision of the stock dividend was decided at a special meeting of the board of directors held at Pittsburgh last week. Preferred stockholders have the option of receiving $3.50 in cash in exchange for the half share of Radio common.

Milwaukee Film Board Elects

Charles W. Trampe, Mid West Film Co., has been re-elected president of the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade. Arthur N. Schmitz, RKO, has been renamed vice-president; Sam Shurman, MGM, secretary-treasurer, and Alfred Davis, Fox, sergeant-at-arms. Ben Koenig has been renamed executive secretary and counsel.

Count "State Fair" among the big ones of the season. It has everything, including the two most potent names on the Fox payroll, Janet Gaynor and Will Rogers. Figuring "Cavalcade" as the roast beef of the Fox program, "State Fair" is the mashed potatoes. No company has put out a pair of prettier ones this past production season.

For once Will is an actor playing a role, not a personality playing himself. That doesn't mean he is not ideally cast, because the role might very well have been written exclusively for him. As an expert hog breeder, with nothing on his mind so much as winning the Hampshire championship, Will has a part right down his alley. He eats it up.

The same may be said for Janet Gaynor in the role of his daughter, who goes to the State Fair and finds romance. Simple, girlish, wholesome—Janet fits into the picture like a new glove. So you might call it a perfect Will Rogers picture and a perfect Janet Gaynor picture combined into one, which it is.

But it is more than that: it is the expert telling of a story that is bigger than either of these outstanding personalities, a human, lovable story about real people, about their little trials and triumphs, about their intimate thoughts and doings. Possibly you cannot imagine an incident of a farm woman's winning the State Fair prize for the best mincemeat and pickles being gripping drama and hilarious comedy, but it is just that in this picture. And Louise Dresser enacts magnificently what is by far the best characterization that has fallen to her lot in many moons.

An All-Star Affair

Just to make this an all-star affair, Fox has tossed in Sally Eilers, Lew Ayres, Norman Foster and Frank Craven, which certainly gives the show one of the biggest name casts of the year, or any year.

Incidentally, a big Hampshire boar named "Blue Boy" does one of the screen's classic animal performances. You've never seen anything funnier than the way the old boy comes out of his laziness when a prize-winning sow is brought into the pen next to him. It is a riot.

Henry King's direction, and the work of the entire production staff, is splendid.

Fox also previewed "Dangerously Yours" during the week. It presents Warner Baxter in a "Raffles" role, and as usual he performs with distinction. Good support, too, from Miriam Jordan, Herbert Mundin, Florence Roberts and several others. The story is not as good as it might be, getting somewhat wobbly in spots, but there are moments of strong drama and some sequences with effective comedy. The photography is unusually beautiful in the moonlight seascapes.

"Blondie Johnson" will wow Joan Blondell's fans, and no doubt will make her a lot of new ones. By stirring up a lot of smart witticisms, injecting clever and unusual situations, Warners has succeeded in proving that gangster themes still can be entertaining. Here you have Blondell in a role of a feminine Al Capone, torn between being in love with a gangster pal, played by Chester Morris, and the business of plying her unique rackets for plenty of cash. The story is so developed, and initially planted, that you sympathize a lot with Joan even when she is relieving her victims of their money. It is a typical fast-moving Zanuck-type picture, snappily directed by Ray Enright.

Ten of the world's foremost authors are supposed to have concocted the plot of Paramount's "The Woman Accused," taken from a story currently serialized in Liberty magazine. The list includes Rupert Hughes, Vicki Baum, Zane Grey, Vina Delmar, Irvin Cobb, Gertrude Atherton, J. P. McEvoy, Ursula Parrott, Polen Banks, Sophie Kerr. This no doubt gives the production the greatest all-star writing cast ever presented, particularly when you add that of Bayard Veillier renowned playwright, as author of the screen play.

Well, it is quite an idea, but it never will rank among the best works of any of the authors mentioned. It is just a fair murder melodrama, with some pretty improbable doings that might have been more interesting had some of the actors involved put a little more conviction into their performances. Nancy Carroll goes on a three-day cruise to nowhere with her lover, Cary Grant, immediately after killing an old flame, Louis Calhern, because he tried to force her to resume extra-marital relations with him after a lapse of six months. A friend of Calhern, John Halliday, follows her on board the ship, stages a mock trial in an effort to make her confess to the killing. The new boy friend, also a lawyer, defends her. For novelty, this trial scene is staged around a ship's swimming pool, with the judge in a bathing suit.

Big Horsewhipping Scene

Biggest scene in the picture is the horsewhipping of a gangster, Jack La Rue, by Cary Grant, to make him tell the truth. It evoked two big bursts of applause from the preview audience. We await with pleasurable anticipation the day when someone will hand this lad La Rue a real big part.

Yes, Irving Pichel plays his one hundred and steenth district attorney. Just for variation, we'd like to see some one like Jack Oakie do a district attorney, or Jimmy Durante.

J. G. Bachman's latest for RKO release is currently titled "A Successful Blunder." Good performances by Junior Durkin, who is featured, Arthur Vinton and Richard Carle, succeed under Irving Cumming's careful direction in overcoming the blunders of the story as well as could be expected. But the yarn is only mildly interesting. However, there is a lot in it that may please the youngsters and some of the family trade. Mrs. Wallace Reid, whom we have not seen for some time, also appears.

mount Pictures Distributing Corporation and Paramount International Corporation—which conduct the business of producing and distributing Paramount pictures. The business of these producing and distributing subsidiaries is profitable and they will continue to manufacture and distribute quality motion pictures under the same management and personnel as heretofore."

Paramount Has $166,000,000 in Assets

Paramount consented to a petition of the Broadway and Twentieth Corporation, a California creditor to the extent of $30,000. The complaint was taken directly to Judge Bondy, who named the receivers after a conference in his chambers in the towers of the Woolworth Building. Under the law a federal judge is empowered to receive such petition.

Action was precipitated by Colonel William J. Donovan's law firm of Donovan and Raichle, New York. The corporation, through attorneys Rosenberg, Goldmark and Colin, New York, admitted that it lacked liquid assets with which to meet current obligations, but asserted that it had assets of $166,000,000.

The first joint court hearing on the situation will be held Thursday, in New York, when Judge Bondy will preside in the old Post Office Building, at City Hall. The hearing was scheduled for Monday, but was postponed by consent of counsel for bondholders and the corporation.

Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hilles are expected to attend, with counsel, Root, Clark and Buckner, of 31 Nassau Street, appointed by the court Monday. Counsel for the corporation will be on hand, headed by Austin Keough, and also various representatives, legal and otherwise, of stock and bond holders' committees.

The Broadway and Twentieth petitioner, a San Francisco theatre company, cited rental obligations of Paramount, including that of the Paramount Building, 1501 Broadway, where Paramount's corporation have headquarters, and for which the company pays $807,000 yearly rental. Annual rent for the Brooklyn Paramount Building, amounting to $590,000 was mentioned as another obligation. Both were acknowledged by the corporation, which in its consent to the complaint agreed that Publix has an interest in 1,340 theatres, 1,100 of which are in the United States, and 240 in Canada and abroad.

Production and distribution are not affected by the proceedings, according to the corporation, which several weeks ago established separate corporate entities to carry on the activities of each branch. A statement to the trade last Friday said: "These companies are subsidiaries of Paramount Publix Corporation, and are NOT in receivership. They will continue to produce and distribute quality motion pictures under the same management and personnel as heretofore."

Subsidiaries mentioned were Paramount Productions, Inc., Emanuel Cohen, vice-president, producer of Paramount product; Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation, George J. Schaefer, vice-president, distributing unit, and Paramount International Corporation, Emil E. Shauer, vice-president, through which foreign activities are handled. Adolph Zukor is president and Ralph Kohn is treasurer of each company. A fourth unit, created with the others, was Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Distribution Will Not Be Interrupted

Nineteen pictures will be released in the next three months, according to Mr. Cohen, who is presiding over production at Hollywood.

Mr. Schaefer called a cabinet meeting of the sales organization immediately after the receivership announcement. He told department heads to flash word to branch managers in the field that the distributing division was in no wise involved.

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, who arrived promptly from Hollywood last week, was in communication with Judge Bondy over the weekend, during which Mr. Hays voiced a vote of confidence in the court's decision naming Adolph Zukor as co-receiver with Charles D. Hilles. No one is better qualified to act as receiver for Paramount than Mr. Zukor, Mr. Hays told the court.

Thursday's conference before Judge Bondy, scheduled to start at 10:30 a. m., may have a bearing on the continuance of the co-receivers, who were named temporarily. Judge Bondy indicated on Monday that objections had been voiced against the appointment of Mr. Zukor.

Nathan Burkan, well known motion picture attorney, who is said to represent interests holding approximately $1,500,000 in Paramount bonds, told the court at the limited session Monday that his interests approved the appointment of Elihu Root, Clark and Buckner as attorneys for the receivers. Nor were there any objections forthcoming from the forty or more attorneys in court.

Among others in the business, Mr. Burkan serves Walter Wanger and Jesse L. Lasky, former Paramount executives whose contracts with the company were matters of legal adjustment.

In the meantime, executives along film row expressed confidence upon learning that Mr. Zukor was in charge of the Paramount situation with Mr. Hilles, who is one of America's most widely known political, economic and philanthropic citizens.

The application for a receiver for the theatre properties was filed by the circuit's holding company, Publix Enterprises, Inc. Assets of $23,864,076 consists of stock in affiliated circuit corporations and sums due from affiliates. Principal creditors are Paramount Publix Corporation, $1,037,247, and Publix Theatres Corporation, $5,748,272. The major liability, listed at $30,952,260, represents guarantees on leases of companies operating theatres. About 73 theatre leases in 50 towns and 21 states are involved.

Represented in the contingent obligations are units of Wilby, Fitzpatrick-McElroy, Shea, Blank, Sparks, Southern Enterprises, and others. A Universal Pictures Corporation note for $209,007 is also listed as a liability.

Publix's Holdings in Subsidiaries

Among the principal individual assets of Publix are stock held in the following corporations by Publix Enterprises, Inc.: Atlanta Enterprises, Inc., $1,015,810; A. H. Blank Theatre Corporation, $1,544,332, and Tennessee Enterprises, Inc., $1,014,004. Other major assets include debts on open accounts from the following sources: A. H. Blank Theatre Corporation, $1,476,915; Paramount Enterprises, Inc., $1,236,501; Southern Enterprises of Texas, $1,696,636; St. Petersburg (Fla.) Enterprises, Inc., $1,298,350; Toledo Paramount Corporation, $1,020,175.

Minor liabilities involving unsecured claims are listed for the following: Augusta Enterprises, Carolina Amusement Co., Charlotte Amusement Co., Montgomery Enterprises, Memphis Enterprises, Publix Indiana, Publix Salt Lake, Imperial Theatre Co., Paramount Publix, Publix Theatre, Savannah Theatres, United Theatre Enterprises, Kansas City Operating Co., Regal Theatres, J. H. Cooper, Lincoln Theatres, all of 1501 Broadway, and Daytona Beach Theatres, Gulf Theatres and Midland Theatres, all of Sparks Enterprises, Lakeland, Florida, and Commercial Investment Trust Co., Wilmer & Vincent, and W. S. Butterfield Theatres, New York.

One of the first matters to be attended to by the receivers will be theatre leases. A complete survey of 1,100 leases has been drawn up, and modification or disaffirmance of many are expected to be made part of future proceedings before a bankruptcy referee. Referees are obliged by law to disaffirm such leases if called upon to do so. In similar actions outside of the theatre business, hundreds of leases have been disaffirmed, with resultant savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Many Publix theatres are expected to be dropped by the corporation and its receivers. The receivers have six months in which to decide on disaffirming or continuing contracts and leases, but this period may be extended with approval of the court.

Paul E. Mead, head of the bankruptcy department of Irving Trust Company, said a complete staff of the bank's representatives had already undertaken a study of Publix's corporate structure and operating activities.

Company Will Contest Petitions

Many involuntary petitions against Paramount are pending. Directors of the corporation said they will contest such actions.

The voluntary application for Paramount receivers was speeded on Thursday when an involuntary petition was filed in federal court by three creditors, Reuben Gelford, I. Riseman and M. Yellou, holders of $4,000 of 20-year 5½ per cent sinking gold fund bonds. The bonds are part of an issue of $13,484,000 dated Aug. 1, 1930. The petition alleged that the corporation, while insolvent, on December 10, 1932, with intent to prefer M. E. Comerford, above other and like creditors, transferred to Mr. Comerford theatre properties of substantial value. The court is expected to dispose of this petition on Thursday.

Supreme Court Justice Richard P. Lydon, New York, granted the petition of Robert L. Levy, Chicago bondholder of Paramount, for temporary receivership for 23 features, allegedly valued at more than $10,000,000, which, it was said, Paramount delivered to Film Production Corporation. This subsidiary, claimed the petitioner, acquired the pictures in violation of the rights of bondholders and the agreement by Paramount not to alienate any of its property that constituted a security for its bonds. The suit also named Chase National Bank, as trustee of $13,000,000 of 5½ per cent bonds, issued in 1930, and the Film Production Corporation. Justice Lydon reserved appointment of receivers, pending a trial.

Films covered in the receivership, some of which carry working titles, and the sums spent on production, are:

"One Hour With You,"	$1,135,000
"The Broken Wing,"	$300,000
"The Miracle Man,"	$469,000
"Sensation,"	$321,000
"This Is The Night,"	$335,000
"Sky Bride,"	$250,000
"The World and the Flesh,"	$417,000
"Sinners in the Sun,"	$228,000
"Strange Case of Clara Deane,"	$182,000
"Thunder Below,"	$382,000
"Jerry and Joan,"	$189,000
"Come On, Marines,"	$177,000
"Merton of the Talkies,"	$159,000
"Horse Feathers,"	$462,000
"On Your Mark,"	$125,000
"Lives of a Bengal Lancer,"	$100,000
"Love Me Tonight,"	$580,000
"The Challenger,"	$162,000
"Bride of the Enemy,"	$154,000
"Ten Commandments,"	$79,000
"Siren and Tritons,"	$208,000
"Velvet,"	$334,000
"Countess of Auburn,"	$19,000

Paramount organized Film Production Corporation, it was conceded, and then turned over the pictures to it, accepting its notes for $13,875,000 in return, and endorsing them over to a group of banks to pay $9,600,000 due them on March 28, 1932, and to serve as collateral for $4,000,000 additional capital required to finish the films.

The Banking Situation

Ralph A. Kohn, treasurer of Paramount, in opposing the application, said the company owed $9,600,000 last March and that the banks agreed to buy the notes of the subsidiary, endorsed by Paramount Publix, and provide more than $4,000,000 additional. The banks, with the moneys due them after the agreement was made, are:

Bankers Trust Company, $1,500,000
Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, $1,500,000
Chemical Bank and Trust Company, $1,500,000
Commercial National Bank and Trust Company, $1,500,000
Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Company of Chicago, $1,500,000
First National Bank of Chicago, $1,500,000
National City Bank and Manufacturers Trust Company, $1,500,000
County Trust Company, $375,000
Tradesmen's National Bank and Trust Company of Philadelphia, $500,000
Empire Trust Company, $500,000

In the equity action against the parent corporation, Justice Bondy ordered the co-receivers, Mr. Zukor and Mr. Hilles, to post bonds of $50,000 each.

Two petitions for appointment of auxiliary receivers for Southern California assets and properties of Paramount Publix, were filed Tuesday in Los Angeles federal court. These will be heard Saturday.

On behalf of William Boal, of New York, S. S. Geldberg, attorney, claimed that Boal owns $1,000 worth of 5½ per cent sinking fund gold bonds which were defaulted in no-payment of interest.

The second suit was filed by McFarland, Schelnman, and Krasne, attorneys for E. W. Reynolds Company, New York. This suit claims $171 for merchandise.

At Boston, Rollins J. Levin filed a petition in federal court seeking appointment of himself as auxiliary receiver for Paramount Publix in that district. Rollins stated that he owns six $1,000 bonds. The petition will be heard Thursday.

Application for receivers to take charge of New Jersey assets of Paramount Publix was scheduled to be heard next Monday by Federal Judge Guy L. Fake, in Newark. The application was made by William Harris, counsel for William Boal, holder of a $1,000 sinking fund gold note. The Paramount Publix Jersey properties are in Asbury Park, Long Branch, and Plainfield. The action in Judge Fake's court came after Federal Judge William Clark had declined to act on the application.

On Dec. 30, 1932, L. H. Harris, a bondholder, filed a petition in federal court, New York, asking an equity receiver for the corporation. Last week the corporation received an extension of 20 days in which to file an answer to this petition, no action having been taken on it by Justice Bondy.

L. F. Harris is executor of the estate of Ida C. Harris, owner of $5,000 in 20-year sinking fund bonds of Paramount. He asked for the removal of the Chase National Bank as trustee for the bonds and the substitution of a receiver in equity. The suit alleged that the Chase bank had violated its trust by permitting the company to pay a cash dividend of $3,151,514 on the common stock on June 28, 1930. Mann and Webster are attorneys for Mr. Harris.

Interest on Paramount Bonds Due

Paramount's equity receivership forestalled necessity to pay approximately $363,885 interest, due Wednesday, on its issue of $13,214,000, 20-year sinking fund gold bonds.

Currently, the parent company's gross earnings are at the rate of $30,000,000 annually. The capitalization consists of $31,876,900 of $10 par common stock, and $4,243,175 of subsidiary preferred stock. Funded debt comprises $13,500,000 of 20-year sinking fund 5½s, due in 1950; $12,542,000 of 20-year sinking fund 6s, due in 1947; bonds and mortgages of subsidiary companies totaling $72,438,882, including $6,050,500, due in 1932. In addition, there were outstanding purchase money obligations aggregating $15,944,034.

In the first nine months of 1932 Paramount Publix showed a net loss of about $13,000,000. The last balance sheet, as of Dec. 31, 1931, revealed net working capital of $5,995,222. Total current assets then totaled $35,728,402; total current liabilities, $29,732,180.

Three committees for security holders were formed immediately and are now soliciting deposits of Paramount Publix securities. The first in the field, formed Friday, is headed by Frank A. Vanderlip, with Robert K. Cassatt, Duncan G. Harris, Lawrence F. Stern and Sir William Wiseman as members, and with the Chase National Bank as depositary. This committee is seeking deposits of Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation 20-year six per cent sinking fund gold bonds due Dec. 1, 1947, and Paramount Publix Corporation 20-year 5½ per cent sinking fund gold bonds due Aug. 1, 1950.

The second committee, organized Saturday, is seeking deposits of Paramount Publix common stock. The committee includes Duncan A. Holmes, a vice-president and director of Chase Securities Corporation; Barney Balaban, of B & K; John P. Bickell, a director of McIntyre Porcupine Mines, Ltd., of Canada, and prominently identified with financing of Famous Players Canadian Corporation; Ruloff E. Cutten of E. F. Hutton & Co., bankers; and Maurice Newton of Hallgarten & Co., banking firm connected with considerable earlier financing of Paramount Publix when the company was known as Famous Players-Lasky. The depositary of this committee is The Commercial National Bank and Trust Co.

The third committee is appealing to holders of first mortgage 5½ per cent 25-year sinking fund gold loan certificates of Paramount Broadway Corporation, due Jan. 1, 1951. This is the company that owns the Paramount Building. On this committee are Peter Grimm, chairman, of William A. White & Sons, real estate; J. Russell Forgan, Field, Glore & Co., bankers; Robert Goelet, financier; Howard V. Smith, Home Insurance Co., and Elisha Walker of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. The depositary is the Chemical Bank & Trust Co.

Deposit Agreements Ready for Holders

Deposit agreements to be sent to Paramount securities holders are now being printed, and are expected to be ready for distribution this week.

A fourth committee is seeking joint deposits of Paramount Publix and RKO securities. This one was formed by Maurice B. and Daniel W. Blumenthal, attorneys, of 474 Fifth Ave., and was described as an independent protective committee.

A move to organize a Paramount shareholders' protective association was launched in Toronto, with John P. Bickell of Toronto, vice-president of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, as Canadian representative. Minority stockholders in the Canadian company belonged to an association which opposed absorption of Famous Players by Paramount on a share exchange basis, and these stockholders never turned in their original Canadian shares. There is talk of again reviving this minority group.

Coincidentally with activities in New York, receivers were appointed elsewhere for numerous affiliated circuit corporations.

Howard McCoy, vice-president of Saenger Theatres, Inc., joined with Publix in a receivership petition filed at New Orleans. E. V. Richards, president of Saenger, was appointed by Federal Judge Wayne J. Borah. He was allowed three months by the court in which to affirm or disaffirm leases on the subsidiary's properties, approximating 60 theatres located in Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, Alabama and Arkansas. Mr. Richards was ordered to post $25,000 bond.

Paramount Publix claimed Saenger owes it $6,000. Liabilities of Saenger were given as $1,856,000. An additional $300,000 is listed as debts to various persons and companies. In the application the company did not list assets, but made mention of mortgages on various theatres and real estate given as security for bonds.

Saenger Theatres has outstanding $600,000 realty first mortgage bonds, reported due July, 1933. These are part of an issue of $900,000. Saenger first mortgage and collateral warrants due Oct. 1, 1940, total $2,500,000.

Other Publix Affiliates File Petitions

Voluntary petitions in bankruptcy were also filed in federal court at Omaha by A. H. Blank Theatres Corporation of Nebraska and Publix-Nebraska, which operates 21 houses. The action was authorized by the board of directors in New York on Tuesday. Book value of the two companies is listed at $3,000,000, but shrinkage is admitted. Federal Judge J. W. Woodrough named A. H. Blank of Des Moines receiver to operate the houses, and creditors will appoint trustees. Bankruptcy schedules will be filed later. Arthur F. Mullen was named attorney for the receiver.

The corporation owns and operates a circuit in Iowa, and owns subsidiary corporations operating theatres in Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois. Listed among the creditors are two Des Moines theatre companies, the Commonwealth Paramount Theatre Co., for $46,599, and Des Moines Theatre Co., for $348,642. The largest creditor is Publix Enterprises, Inc., which has claims for advancements and deferments amounting to $1,476,915.

On Monday, William Hamm was named receiver in St. Paul, by Judge M. M. Joyce, for Minnesota Amusement Co., northwest operating subsidiary of Paramount Publix for about 70 theatres. Hamm Building Corporation and other creditors alleged in their receivership petition failure to pay interest on a mortgage and rentals. The theatres are in Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Previously, receivers had been asked for Fitzpatrick and McElroy, a circuit of about 21 theatres operating in Indiana and Ohio.

Two additional suits, filed this week in Denver district court, ask judgments of $16,500 for two months' rent on the Denver theatre, and $9,500 back rent on the Paramount. Both these houses belong to Publix. Suits against Mountain States Theatre Corporation, holding company for Paramount Publix of Colorado, and two local banks, charge that the corporation fostered a conspiracy which enabled it to go into bankruptcy, thus avoiding terms of theatre leases.

District Judge Charles S. Sackman issued an order preventing the corporation from disposing of its assets, pending a hearing.

Authorization to include receivers for Paramount Publix as defendants in the Quittner monopoly suit against the company was granted attorneys for Edward Quittner, Middletown, N. Y., exhibitor, by Federal Judge William Bondy this week.

As a result of the ruling, an order lifting the stay of proceedings in the trial of the Quittner suit was issued Wednesday by Judge Bondy and the trial was resumed.

Katz, Zanft to Coast with Production Deal in Sight

A return to active industry participation on the part of Sam Katz, former Publix Theatres head, was foreshadowed by his departure Monday for the Coast in the company of John Zanft. A new production company in the offing is said to be the objective of the trip. Mr. Zanft, in Kansas City, said he and Mr. Katz formed a company on January 1.

TRAIN TO INAUGURAL TO SELL "42nd STREET"

Jack Warner Will Head Group From Coast to Washington; Stars Not Engaged Will Go; Broadcasts Planned En Route

A studio broadcasting train from Warner Brothers' Coast production plant will tell the story of the picture "42nd Street," on a cross-nation tour to Washington, D. C., on the way to the inaugural of Franklin D. Roosevelt as president on March 4. In charge of the Special, leaving Hollywood February 21, will be Jack L. Warner, production executive, who served as chairman of the Democratic national committee in California.

All Warner stars not actually engaged in production are to be on the train, according to S. Charles Einfeld, in charge of advertising and publicity. And T. K. Quinn, executive vice-president of General Electric, has issued instructions that the train be equipped with the latest studio apparatus. The first long stop will be at Kansas City, and personal appearances will be made by the players at other one-hour stops.

The Denver Post has tied up with the Special for the welcome in that city. Carl Lesserman, district sales manager at Chicago, wired that Mayor Cermak, Charles G. Dawes and Col. Rufus C. Dawes planned to have the stars as their guests in a visit to the World's Fair grounds.

One car will be fitted up with a short-wave transmission radio set for daily 15-minute broadcasts of prepared entertainment including songs from the picture sung and played by members of the cast.

The train will consist of six cars and locomotive. An electric kitchen, in addition to the regular dining car, will have the latest in electrical equipment.

Along the length of the train will be electric signs reading "Warner Bros. '42nd Street' Special," with credit to General Electric for equipping the train.

Players scheduled to be on the tour include Bebe Daniels, James Cagney, Joe E. Brown, Loretta Young, Joan Blondell, George Brent, Ginger Rogers, Ruby Keeler and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., as well as beauties from the production. In all, approximately 60 passengers will be carried. Besides the players there will be make-up men, wardrobe mistresses, a chef, two men in charge of the electric health kitchen, an electrical engineer, still cameraman, a publicity man, an assistant director, and a representative from the Warner studios.

Special lights have been installed to cast beams upon the train, which is being decorated in gold on the outside.

Kaplan Ouster Upheld

Supreme Court Justice Julius L. Miller in New York has upheld the ousting of Sam Kaplan, former president of projectionists' local 306, by the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, in a formal opinion following Kaplan's suit contesting the legality of the ouster. Other officers ousted, however, may seek re-election, the court decided.

Dialogue Ruling Sets Precedent

Justice Shientag of the New York supreme court, has decided that the owner of the dramatic rights and the silent picture rights to a play has the talking picture rights as well. This is believed the first decision of its kind in New York, and is seen as setting an important precedent. The case is to be carried to the appellate division on appeal.

It is pointed out that since talking pictures appeared producers have purchased film dialogue rights to all works which had previously been produced as, or purchased for, silent films.

The decision is based on a suit brought by Konrad Bercovici, author, whose "The Volga Boatman" was produced by Cecil B. De Mille as a silent in 1925, against the Cinema Corporation of America, owner of the dramatic and silent film rights. Bercovici contended he had not sold dialogue rights for a talking film, as such pictures were unknown at that time.

Consolidated Gets Universal Contract

Universal pictures has closed a contract with Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., whereby Consolidated will take over the making of all of Universal's coast prints, studio prints, daily rushes and development of negatives, beginning on February 5, when Universal closes its studio laboratory.

The contract is an addition to one entered into three years ago which provided for Consolidated to make Universal's release prints and newspaper newsreels. The Consolidated laboratories are only a short distance from Universal City and a fast truck service will be maintained day and night.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

State Fair

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

Fox rings the bell, is entitled to the large sized kewpie doll, and the exhibitor, whether he is on Main Street or Broadway, in New York or York, Neb., should cash in on the "State Fair" concession in a really big way. The picture, being a definitely faithful screen version of the once popular novel of the same title by Phil Strong, has all the elements of lucrative box office, and no mistake.

The cast names, and the contributions which their owners make to the whole picture, are box office opportunities of the first rank. Will Rogers, who imparts a considerable portion of the humor, in the familiar and popular Rogerian style; Janet Gaynor, who supplies simplicity and sweetness as only she can; Lew Ayres, appealing and performing the other half of one romance with Miss Gaynor; Sally Eilers, engaged in a romantic appeal with Norman Foster in the second combination. Louise Dresser offers an excellent bit as Rogers' wife. Distinct mention should be made of Blue Boy, Rogers' prize hog, who has a good deal to do with the action and serves to supply a number of laughs.

Indicating the picture's Broadway possibilities as entertainment, an audience at the Radio City Music Hall enjoyed itself immensely from start to finish. Of the film's Main Street value there cannot be the slightest question. It is of the stuff with which Main Street is familiar and has the players in whom Main Street delights. To the credit of the producers be it noted that no one of the marquee gems in the cast is too prominent. There is just enough Rogers, not too much, while Miss Gaynor, Ayres, Miss Eilers, Foster, Miss Dresser each has an important spot to fill, fills it splendidly.

The homely yet purposeful story opens on the Iowa Rogers farm, where he "babies" the hog for honors at the state fair, two days distant; Miss Dresser revels in the mince meat and pickles she prays will be prizeworthy; Miss Gaynor sees no romantic future with Frank Melton, involved with his milk cans; Foster, the son, thirsts for revenge on a concessionaire at the previous year's fair, and responds only half-heartedly to the invitation of an unseen Elinor.

Make the lobby a miniature state fair, utilizing freely stills from the picture. Go over the top on cast names, each one of which alone is a "selling" appellation. Indicate the drama which enters the lives of the youth of the Rogers farm amid the glamour of the state fair, and promise a delightful piece of entertainment from every angle—and for the entire family. There should be no doubt about this being a real "money" picture.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Henry King. From the novel by Phil Strong. Screen play by Paul Green and Sonya Levien. Photographed by Hal Mohr. Film editor, R. W. Bischoff. Sound recorder, A. L. Von Kirbach. Release date, February 10, 1933. Running time, 100 minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Blondie Johnson

(First National)

Gangster Drama

Guns roar, the mobsters gather again, victims are put on the spot, rackets wax fat, the sign of the double cross is revived, the gang rises from the squalor of dives to the luxuries of pent-houses, and the old gangster picture is with us once more—only this time the big shot is a dame and Blondie Johnson is a composite of all the underworld czars who ever have slid across the screen.

It's no burlesque, no satire, just a straight out-and-out exciting gangster show which has been given a touch of human interest and a romantic love interest background to substantiate the racketeering atmosphere. As such, it should prove an interesting experiment for showmen to demonstrate their ability.

There is entertainment in "Blondie Johnson," probably not ruthless enough to engender any startling objections to its exhibition, or yet of the sensation-creating type. Yet it has a certain element of novelty and construction that will catch the interest of all who can be brought in to see it.

Blondie, deciding that the world owes her a living, concocts a racket that wins her the amazed admiration of Curley, the current ace. In no time at all she both usurps Curley's living, concocts a racket that wins her the leadership and falls in love with him.

The element of comedy at least is equal to, if it does not overshadow the ruthlessness of Blondie's ambitions. In action and dialogue, it moves at a rapid pace and with Joan Blondell it is given an unusual appeal.

If your patrons have evidenced an interest in gangster pictures they probably will take this one in the spirit which it is intended—a different twist to an old idea. If you've had difficulty in enticing them in to see a gangster picture, try to sell 'em on the novelty of a girl assuming the male gangster prerogatives, yet in the end finding that her heart was bigger than her ambitions.

Because of its type, "Blondie Johnson" is adult entertainment. There is enough of drama, romance, action, comedy, suspense and novelty to satisfy the desires of the regular theatre-goers, both men and women, if your advance campaign gives them a clear idea of what to expect.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Screen play by Earl Baldwin. Directed by Ray Enright. Photography by Tony Gaudio. Art director, Esdras Hartley. Film editor, George Marks. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Release date, Feb. 25, 1933. Running time, 69 minutes.

The Face in the Sky

(Fox)

Romantic Comedy

Here is romantic comedy, presented with a swing. A simple, pleasant little story about the kind of folk all audiences know, it also carries an interesting punch of human interest that is half real and half imaginative. All the way through, it is evident that more than ordinary pains were taken to present the leading players in their established characterizations, and clever, understandable entertainment it is.

Joe Buck is a wandering sign painter, the best in his line, and in the typical smart-cracking Tracy way he knows it. With Lucky as his dumb stooge the comedy is heightened. Down in Maine, he's daubing the side of a barn. He can't get the right expression into the eyes of his painted beauty until a door swings open and Madge appears.

When the sign painters depart, Madge hides herself in their wagon, but gets the boys into a jam as they are picked up for abducting her. Under her promise to wed Jim, the charges are dropped and the scene shifts to New York, where the great Joe gets a job to paint a mammoth sign that has been a stumbling block to every other artist in the business.

There is both story and cast to talk about, and there is more than ordinary opportunity for exceptional interest creating exploitation. In some cases the title may require a little explaining. Alone, it might suggest something weird. Tracy being a sign painter, you have the chance directly in line with the picture's action to plaster every available space from doors to sides of barns with that title.

"Face in the Sky" will probably meet its greatest popularity in the smaller town. There is plenty in it to appeal to both men and women and it likewise contains enough down-to-the-earth entertainment to make a satisfactory feature for children.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Harry Lachman. Screen play by Humphrey Pearson. From the story by Myles Connolly. Dialog direction by Wm. Collier, Sr. Photography by Lee Garmes. Sound recorder by E. Clayton Ward. Settings by William Darling. Wardrobe by David Cox. Lyrics and music by Val Burton and Will Jason. Release date, Jan. 15, 1933. Running time, 77 minutes.

Dangerously Yours

(Fox)

Comedy Drama

Here's the old Raffles yarn with a gay romantic comedy complex, to which have been added more than a couple of bits of exciting drama; there's a dab or two of skulduggery which brings in a crystal gazing Yogi; a flock of detectives, who try to solve an unsolvable robbery; an abduction, which prepares the way for sequences featuring a vicious but laughable brawl between Blake and Claire; then a re-enactment of the original crime in which Blake doesn't let Claire double-cross him. Finally Blake decides to go straight and Claire renounces her career as a feminine Sherlock Holmes. It's all bound together with a line of dialogue and action that brought plenty of laughs from the preview audiences, which gave every evidence of enjoyment.

The comedy twist is the audience-interesting angle. As far as mystery and detective work is concerned, it's not to be taken seriously at any time. Audiences will early realize that it's all in fun. Miriam takes herself seriously only until Baxter presents her with a "slave-bracelet" in the shape of a heavy anchor and about ten feet of chain to prevent her from escaping his clutches.

More than ordinarily, dialogue contributes heavily to the interest of "Dangerously Yours." The right laugh-creating words are spoken at the right time and continually focus attention on that which is about to happen, aiding the audience.

With fun the predominant characteristic, some of it smartly clever and the big action scene of the show descending to the slap-stick variety as Baxter strives to subdue the ranting, squirming, kicking, biting Miss Jordan, there is also a neat romantic tinge to the story. Thus the show contains the elements that should appeal to the rank and file.

In addition to the intriguing title, which can be gagged around in any number of interest-creating ways, the cast names, action and dialogue suggest many unusual exploitation ideas. The anchor chain-slave bracelet gag can be circused, as can all the action that happens around the occult Yogi and the disappearing diamond and pearl necklaces. Get over the idea that this is regular entertainment with a novel romantic punch.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Tuttle. Story by Paul Hervey Fox. Screen play by Horace Jackson. Photographed by Tom Seitz. Release date, Jan. 29, 1933. Running time, 73 minutes.

A Successful Blunder

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

Lacking any outstanding cast names and being a story of a seventeen-year-old boy who wants to be a detective, "A Successful Blunder" falls short of being adult entertainment, and because of the far-fetched developments of the story may not be so strong for the youngsters.

Considered as a comedy, it will necessitate the building of a strong supporting program.

Junior Scott is so interested in becoming a crime sleuth that he never can hold a job, which fact causes his mother no end of heartache. Becoming friendly with a little miss, Josie, who is a newcomer to town, he is in her house when her father, who has stolen a lot of diamonds, is killed by his old accomplice, Wilkie.

Several humorous situations occur during the picture, bringing laughs from the preview audience, but the entire picture failed to engender any real enthusiasm. Looks as if the best thing to do would be to establish it as junior entertainment and use all kinds of gags that will get as many children into the house as possible for every performance.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced by J. G. Bachman for distribution by RKO Radio. Directed by Irving Cummings. Story and screen play by Sam Mintz and Leonard Praskins. Photographed by Joseph Valentine. Release date to be determined. Running time, 68 minutes.

CAST

Junior	Junior Durkin
Josie	Charlotte Henry
Mrs. Scott	Mrs. Wallace Reid
Wilkie	Arthur Vinton

The Woman Accused

(Paramount)

Drama

Unquestionably the strongest showmanship angle to this picture is the fact that the story, authored by so many celebrities, has been running serially in Liberty Magazine. Surely a great many of those who have been reading it will constitute a ready-made audience, and every means should be taken to call the show to the attention of those people in your locality who have been following it.

The picture, as a melodramatic romance, pretty generally follows the printed theme, although certain allowances necessary for picture production have been taken. It builds up the case of Glenda O'Brien, whose new-found romance with Jeffrey Baxter is endangered by the return of an old lover, Leo Young. She kills Young when he threatens to have a gunman "take care of" Jeffrey, and together with Jeffrey and a party of friends she takes off on an ocean liner on a cruise to nowhere. Leo is Bessemer's partner, and he, knowing of the former relations between Young and Glenda, decides that Glenda is the killer. He can't make his case stick with the district attorney, and he likewise gets on the pleasure liner in order to procure additional evidence.

A lot of gaudy, glamorous stuff associated with such cruises ensues until a mock trial is suggested. Bessemer makes it realistic by trying to trap Glenda into a confession of the real murder, without much success. Home again, he tries once more to convince the D. A., but Jeffrey, also a lawyer, administers a thrilling horse-whipping to Little Maxie (the best piece of business in the picture) and as a result Besseer, without a sufficiently strong case, loses out in his effort to trap Glenda.

Alone, without the lure of the famous authors, plus the Liberty tieup, "The Woman Accused" scarcely would be more than program entertainment. Its box office returns will be based on what you can do with that arrangement, plus the pulling power of the leading names in the cast.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From the Liberty story authored by Rupert Hughes, Vicki Baum, Zane Grey, Vina Delmar, Irvin S. Cobb, Gertrude Atherton, J. P. McEvoy, Ursula Parrott, Polen Banks, Sophie Kerr. Based on a story by Polen Banks. Direction by Paul Sloane. Screen play by Bayard Veiller. Photographed by Karl Struss. Release date, Feb. 17, 1933. Running time, 73 minutes.

Whistling in the Dark

(MGM)

Comedy Drama

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with commendable sagacity, obtained the services of Ernest Truex, of the Broadway stage, for the leading role in "Whistling in the Dark." Mr. Truex, there is little doubt, "made" the play in New York, and here contributes a lion's share of the entertainment in the motion picture version of the stage piece. The fact that the play enjoyed a lengthy, successful sojourn on the Broadway boards unfortunately may mean little to the common denominator of motion picture fandom, but the exhibitor certainly will not lose by indicating with especial emphasis that the picture is an accurate picturization of the highly successful play, with its leading player also transplanted.

Mr. Truex is a delight in a small size. His inimitable characterization is possessed of the fine touch of perfectly rounded comedy. These inches are expended in concentration on him because the audience will revel in his work. He is the picture's mainstay and should be billed and billed again. Forget that the patrons probably will not know him from Adam, in a great many instances, and sell him to them as though you meant it. There will be no regrets.

Mr. Truex, briefly, is eloping with Una Merkel, who, incidentally, due to her drawl, her ingenuousness and her general appeal, is excellent in the role, when their car breaks down and they are "captured" by a bootlegging gang of racketeers in a country house. Learning that Truex is an author of murder mysteries, they force him under threat of death to plot for them the "perfect murder," the proposed victim being a wealthy brewer who refuses to accede to their "shakedown" demands. There is little use in attempting to describe Truex's inimitable conduct throughout these sequences. Suffice to say that he is most amusing.

John Miljan, Johnny Hines and Edward Arnold are highly satisfactory racketeers, while Joseph Cawthorn contributes a good touch as the intended victim. Sell it along humorous lines, bring in the enforced murder plotting by Truex and the thought of the physically timid yet mentally resourceful author matching wits with the gangsters. Make every effort to put Truex across in the advertising. He more than deserves it and the patrons will probably leave the theatre talking about him, at the same time looking forward to his next appearance.—Aaronson, New York.

Clancy of the Mounted

Serial

Action in the land of the Northwest Police is the subject of this new serial in 12 chapters, with Tom Tyler and Jacqueline Wells. A development noted in the three first chapters is the fact that the girl lead has much to do; in fact, she dominated the action in the first episode, particularly in running the rapids in a canoe. The story is of the murder of a wealthy rancher, the arrest of Clancy's brother, and the machinations of the storekeeper and his renegade Indians. Dialogue is possibly too elementary, and situations are introduced over-obviously, but there is considerable action, the backbone of serials.—Episode lengths average 20 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts from 122 houses in 20 major cities over the country showed an increase in the aggregate of $33,733 for the calendar week ended January 28, 1933, with a total of $1,471,009, which compares with $1,437,276 from 122 theatres in 20 cities for the previous calendar week, ended January 21. During the more recent period no new high individual house records were established, while six new low figures were recorded.

Records and stocks of the local Educational-World Wide offices were transferred to the Fox exchange Saturday and Sunday. The deal between Educational and Fox for the new distribution and selling arrangement came with dramatic suddenness and left 20 of the 23 employees at Educational minus jobs. Dave Dubin, branch manager, Harold Wise, booker, and Edna Enk, cashier, were the only employees retained.

Barney Balaban Is Elected Balaban & Katz President

Barney Balaban last week was elected president of Balaban and Katz, major Chicago circuit, succeeding Sam Katz. John Balaban, who went to Chicago recently from Publix headquarters in New York, was elected secretary and treasurer. The Chicago office of the circuit explained that the two offices are of equal importance and that the executives would continue to function as before. John Balaban is in charge of theatre operation in Chicago, Indiana and Canada, while Barney Balaban has concentrated more especially on finance.

The election of Barney is seen in some quarters as important to the future financial structure of the organization. He is widely looked upon as a financial expert. Other officers of the organization are: Sam Dembow, Jr., vice-president; Eugene Zukor, Marion Coles and Elmer C. Upton, assistant secretaries. Mr. Upton was also named treasurer and controller.

Fox Wins Appeal Decision

The Massachusetts supreme court, in a decision handed down last week, ordered two deposits, totaling $348,000, plus interest, to be paid to the Boylston and Tremont Corporation, a subsidiary of Fox Theatres. The money represents deposits made in connection with the proposed purchase of property, on which it was planned to erect a $6,000,000 theatre by Fox interests. Decision followed an appeal.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 158:—(A) Name as many as you can of the various ways in which unnecessary damage is inflicted upon film. (B) What is meant by "pulling down" and what damage does it cause? (C) Name the various things that tend to inflict damage upon film sprocket holes. (D) Tell us what faults you have found in the packing of films received which tended to damage the films. (E) Tell us, in detail, just how you pack your reels for shipment.

Answer to Question No. 152

Question No. 152 was: "(A) When is the normal capacity of a water pipe or electric conductor said to have been reached? (B) How does increasing or decreasing the diameter of water pipes or electric conductors affect their resistance to water or current flow? (C) How does increasing or decreasing the length of a water pipe or electric conductor affect resistance? (D) If the interior of a water pipe be made rougher than it was, resistance to flow of water is increased. What is analogous to that in an electric conductor?"

I was really surprised at the number of at least satisfactory replies to this one, and at the number of really excellent ones as well. The following made satisfactory answers: G. E. Doe, Dale Danielson, Lester Borst, S. Evans and C. Rau, J. Wentworth, H. Edwards, H. D. Schofield, T. Van Vaulkenburg, P. T. Garling, A. Ilks and B. R. Rouen, O. Garling and B. Diglah, D. Eliers and D. Holler, P. L. Davis and T. Torr, T. McGruder, (H. D. Cylor, H. D. Davis and W. Sullivan), P. J. Cermak, H. L. Robson, G. C. Hendrie and B. T. Sampson, L. R. Rigas, L. S. Marksley and J. L. Bischoff, B. M. May, T. L. Shelton and M. R. Sanders, C. L. Daniels, P. C. Hewitt, P. Lambert and S. G. Goss,, R. and L. M. Wright, D. N. Peters (G. Farmann, T. H. Heins and R. G. Randant), M. S. O'Brien, S. Chestney and T. Lavery, B. R. Compton and L. Peterson, H. B. Coates, L. C. Cummings and J. D. Schneider, D. U. Shelton and B. R. Thompson, M. McGuire, D. M. Sykes and E. O. Olliver, L. T. Coates, P. O'Brien, F. D. Prinde and T. Gaitsley, M. L. Mastbaum and A. Burt, C. Lilly and T. G. Sawyer, M. O. Lynch, L. Peterson and D. Donohue, L. Cranlo and G. Deckson, F. B. Gamble, L. R. Richards, W. D. Adamson, J. L. Richards and T. B. Cudmore, L. Andrews, B. E. Danning and D. L. Simmons, H. M. Gregor, W. A. Andres, P. Farmer, D. Golding, A. Jones and L. T. Foley, P. Hadley and L. D. Solomon, T. Potter and K. H. Steele, S. T. and L. R. Powell, J. Ahrenson, H. Daniels and P. N. Arless. [Note: in some instances three men, presumably all in one theatre, have joined in answering. In such cases the three names are enclosed in parenthesis.]

I have selected the answer of L. Peterson and D. Donohue as best suited to the needs of publication, though many others made answers of equal excellence. They say:

"There is some difference in the case of a water pipe and an electric conductor, because of the fact that in one only friction and consequent loss must be considered, whereas in the other there is always the possibility of excessive heating, with consequent fire danger. Strictly speaking, this is perhaps not within the limits of the question, still if there is much heating in an electric conductor the change to a dangerous state is not far away.

"One way of putting the matter is to say the normal capacity of either a water pipe or electric conductor has been reached when the cost of power consumed in overcoming friction (resistance) equals the cost of decreasing the resistance by installing larger pipes or conductors. It usually is expressed as equaling normal interest charge on the capital necessary to make the change, which same I do not regard as correct, since it makes no provision for taking care of the capital outlay itself.

"My own way of stating the matter would be thus: The normal capacity of an electric conductor is exceeded when its temperature is raised above the limits set by the National Code; or, in other words, when the carrying capacity as set by the Code is exceeded."

[Note: Your reference to heat in the first part of your answer does not come exactly within the purview of the question as asked. It is a good point, nevertheless; therefore, I have admitted it for consideration. The temperature limit is what wire capacity, as set by the National Code, is based upon, hence your own way of stating the matter is entirely correct.—F. H. R.]

(B) We will give G. E. Doe the floor on this one. He says:

"Increasing the diameter of either a water pipe or electric conductor decreases the resistance, for the reason that the resistance will be opposed to a greater volume in either case, and the resistance will not be increased in nearly the same proportion as will be the volume of flow. Decreasing the diameter of either works the same way in reverse."

[Note: I have never seen the matter stated in just the terms Friend Doe has used. I believe, however, he is absolutely correct. If any of you thousands of Bluebook School folks differ, let me hear from you.—F. H. R.]

(C) G. C. Hendrie and B. T. Sampson state this tersely and well. They say:

"Each unit of length of either water pipe or electric conductor offers a fixed amount of resistance at any given rate of flow. If, then, units of length be subtracted, it follows that there will be less resistance. If units of length be added the reverse is true."

(D) S. Evans and C. Rau answer thusly:

"Increased roughness of water pipe interior increases resistance to water flow. Analogous to this in electric conductors is the composition of the conductor, which means its degree of conductivity. Copper wire, which offers low resistance (good conductivity), may be likened to a water pipe having a smooth interior. Nickel wire offers high resistance to current flow (low conductivity), hence may be compared to water pipe having rough interior."

Pacent Establishes New Consulting Laboratories

L. G. Pacent, president of Pacent Electric Company, has established Pacent Engineering Corporation, to which he will devote much of his time, as a private consulting engineering firm with offices at 79 Madison avenue, New York. Laboratories will be established at Little Neck, Long Island.

H. C. Likel, research engineer, formerly with Mr. Pacent, will be associated with him in the new company. B. H. Noden, secretary and treasurer of Pacent Electric, will act as general manager of that company.

Don't Cut Ticket Charge: Laemmle

The fact that production costs prevent the lowering of picture rentals this season is emphasized by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures, who currently warns exhibitors not to lower admission prices.

"If you are thinking of lowering admission prices, think again," says Mr. Laemmle. "It is easy to lower them—terribly hard to boost them. If you have survived to this day on your regular prices, be terribly careful that a few weeks of poor business do not panic you into a ghastly mistake.

"Hundreds of theatres have tried the experiment of cutting admission prices. Many of them have succeeded in doing a good business in the number of people attending their shows, but not in dollars and cents.

"Be careful not to be misled by the stock argument that 'everything has come down in price, so I'd better cut my own prices too.'

"Don't forget that the merchant who lowered his prices also bought for less. But now he is raising his prices. You cannot possibly buy for less, because the cost of making pictures cannot permit it. I know that as far as Universal is concerned there is no possible way of selling pictures to you for less money than you have paid in the past. I would rather do no business with you at all than let quality slip right now when the demand for quality pictures is at the highest demand the public makes.

"Business reports now reveal an upturn. To go through with a plan of slicing admission prices in the face of these conditions may be the greatest mistake of your business life."

Means Re-elected President Of Kansas City Association

Jay Means has been re-elected president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City. Other officers for 1933 are: Charles Vaughn, Art theatre, Kansas City, Kan., vice-president; Lee Miller, Chief theatre, treasurer, and Mrs. A. Baier, Lindbergh theatre, secretary, re-elected.

Mr. Means informed the members he would be unable to continue as president unless he was voted a small salary to compensate him for his services. Mr. Means has immediately begun consideration of ways and means of financing the organization. One of these is the sale of advertising reels to local stores.

Warner Trial Postponed

Trial of the government suit against Warner alleging violation of the Clayton anti-trust act in the acquisition of First National, has been postponed to April 3, by permission of the attorney general's office. Trial had been scheduled for last week in federal court, New York.

Bank Named Trustee

The First National Bank of Seattle has been named trustee in bankruptcy for Pacific Northwest Theatres. The bank was chosen as a compromise trustee after the referee in the case had disqualified Don Graham, Fox West Coast attorney, and Henry Broderick, heading opposition interests.

SOMETHING TO SHOOT

JUST WHEN WE HAD COME to the sober conclusion that no campaign could get us all excited or even make us forget our usual (rotten) game of golf, along comes George C. Just stop for a moment and think this over. Fifty thousand dollars worth of free space, merchandise and other forms of business stimulators concentrated for one smashing week's business. And of course the actual results at the box offices of the theatres throughout the division reflected this terrific amount of effort.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

We wish Old Man Winter would hurry up and do his stuff and then pull his freight back up north where he belongs. But it won't be long now until spring, gentle Annie, will be with us again, and with this thought come memories of babbling brooks, of budding trees, of singing birds and humming bees, of cooing doves and whippoorwills, and scented bloom of daffodils. 'Tis then that we'll be glad to know that we've been freed from sleet and snow, and we'll rejoice because the spring has come again.

Yes, sir, you're darned shoutin', that's just the way we will feel about it. But speaking of fishing. Do you know that we have traveled around hundreds of streams and lakes in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and, as much as we love to fish, we have never wet a line just because Ernie Rovelstad down in the Herald office at 1790 Broadway, N. Y., keeps punching us up to come on with our weekly dope for the greatest magazine on earth, but outside of that he's a swell guy.

But it is going to be different this coming summer. When we drive along one of Wisconsin's babbling brooks and know that there is a big hungry trout lying under some cress longing for a "Silver Doctor" or a "Brown Hackle" he's going to be accommodated. And when we drive along some of Minnesota's beautiful lakes and realize that there is a hungry bass out under those lily-pads looking for a "Shannon Spinner" we are going to stop and interview that baby; just watch and see if we don't.

It won't be long 'til we'll all want to go
Out yonder where the cool waters flow.
Where the flash of the trout
Will be just about
The most thrilling sensation we know.

Where the songs of the birds in the trees
Will be wafted to us on the breeze.
Then we'll give a glad shout
When we pull the trout out,
In the shade of the box elder trees

THERE, how does that sound to you Izaak Walton guys? Don't you want to come and go along with us?

This talk of prosperity being just around the corner is a lot of prune juice. "Prosperity" with Marie Dressler and Polly Moran hit the Moon theatre last night with a wallop and Old Man Depression took a nose dive into the cellar. It is just as we have always contended; whenever those two gals play, you will find prosperity right there with both feet. And then there's another thing, as Andy Gump says. This picture business will never reach its highest state of perfection until they put Kate Smith and that "Street Singer" together in a series of oldtime songs and cut out a lot of this cross-legged jazz that doesn't mean a damthing to the public nor the Fiji Islanders.

Music is music, that much we can tell,
But this jazzy jazz music is certainly——

Well, that's what we think about it, anyway, and it mach nich aus to us what the rest of 'em think.

Comes now the Hollywood Herald, a promising and growing young thing, and reports that the New York critics are unanimous in their opinions that Fox's "Cavalcade" is the best thing the screen has ever done.

We haven't a doubt that "Cavalcade" is a wonderful picture, but somehow we'd sooner get the lowdown on it from "What the picture did for me."

The North Dakota senate is entitled to the medal for pulling the prize boner in legislative matters. They recently adopted a resolution that 39 of the West and Midwest states secede from the Union. As we recall history, a similar attempt was made back in 1860, and preaching secession has become a very unpopular pastime. That senate is monkeying with a buzz-saw, but the good people of North Dakota should not be penalized because of the ridiculous fanaticism of her lawmakers.

Word comes to us that the good people of Los Angeles have riz up in their wrath over the lurid advertisements of "Frisco Jenny" and are swearing vengeance. Cam yourselves, good folks, cam yourselves. You have stood for a whole lot worse than that.

If the advertising of "Frisco Jenny" is true to the picture, why vent your wrath on the advertising instead of the picture, since the picture will be seen by a thousand people to one who sees the advertising. If the advertising is not true to the picture then why not tackle the press agent? Be cam, folks, be cam; some day they will film "Elmer Gantry" and it will then be time to start your revolution.

In the advertising of "Three on a Match," Walt Bradley of the Moon theatre here in Neligh prominently featured Lyle Talbot. This was a stroke of good business since Lyle used to play here with the Walter Savage Company and the Clint and Bessie Robbins Company, and he used to stick his feet under Walt's table and pass up his plate for more beans and sowbelly.

There are but few of us who could go through a hospital nursery and pick out the baby who would be president of the United States, but it has always been our contention that Lyle would reach the top of the ladder unless there was some faulty construction in the rungs—for

Great oaks from little acorns grow;
A little wind makes great drifts in the snow.

"Three on a Match" is a very good picture in spite of its title, which has nothing whatever to do with the picture and which meant nothing to the public. It might just as well have been Pussy in a Corner, or Who Killed Grandma's Goose. A title should be descriptive of the picture always. For instance, last night we saw "Merrily We Go to Hell," a title that fit the picture like a glove, since the picture began with a drunken debauch and maintained its reputation pretty much throughout its entirety.

If the picture was intended as a preachment for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment they had a mighty poor idea of politics. As we watched the unfolding of the picture there came to us that beautiful little poetic classic—

When the moon comes over the mountain
We hope the cork in the jug will be tight.
Then we'll get some fizz-water at the fountain
And we'll have a few cocktails tonight.
We will whooper 'er up Jake until morning
And our joy we can easily foretell,
When the moon comes over the mountain
Let's "Merrily All Go to Hell."
"Voss you dere, Sharley?"

A filibuster in Congress reminds us of a bull that Uncle 'Leazer Biggs used to own. He would stand at the feed-trough and wouldn't eat anything himself and he wouldn't let any of the rest of the herd eat.

Uncle 'Leazer finally put a ring in that bull's nose. There's a moral for Congress.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston, Constance Cummings—Drew less than normal and can't understand it. Picture is everything the critics have lauded it with. Especially should be a small town type story. Different and new idea in story, and mob scenes are truly great. Huston especially is great. Maybe folks don't like to be reminded of "madness" in the title for it sure failed to draw after real exploitation. Played Jan. 12-14. Running time, 76 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

BLONDE CAPTIVE: Contrary to some reports this did well for us and did not disappoint. Sell it honestly and it is OK.—Ed. Owinn, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—This has plenty of action and a fair story. Nothing unusual in it but it has action and that satisfies the small town people on a Saturday night. They will overlook a few defects if the picture goes somewhere.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt, Lillian Miles—As usual Jack Holt appears in an entertaining picture. Nothing big but good entertainment. Excellent sound. Played Jan. 9.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

THE NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou, Mayo Methot—Drew normal business. Clever little mystery, well acted and produced. But mysteries seem to be on the way out. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 66 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou, Mayo Methot, Skeets Gallagher—High class picture with new angle and full of suspense. They like this kind.—Ed. Owinn, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D.

THE NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou—This is a splendid picture. It should not be classed merely as a murder mystery. Skeets Gallaghen furnished the comedy. Columbia pictures are very good so far. Every one we have played has been satisfactory. This one drew well. Played Jan. 15-16.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selina, La. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Lyle Talbot—An expensively made show. Sold right and a real piece of entertainment.—Ed. Owinn, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan—Sure failed to draw. Don't know why either as it is a story so full of heroics and action of football. Should be popular. Nice little program type picture that will really entertain. Played Jan. 3-4. Running time, 71 minutes—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

TWO FISTED LAW: Tim McCoy—A fine western picture. Lots of action.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—Holds our record for best gross of this season. Still talking about it. A natural.—Ed. Owinn, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—One of the most remarkable yet. Timely—dealing with modern politics in a fearless manner. Every ctiy and town should run this and exploit it big. Played Jan. 8-9.—Charles W. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Drew extra business and pleased okey. Only comments were favorable with the regret that the picture did not have enough singing and especially the theme song was never used. My patrons are continually asking for musicals—and want them. Played Jan. 1-2. Running time, 78 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Excellent. You cannot miss on this one. Character actors positively wonderful. Use their trailer. Played Jan. 17-18.—Charles W. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

DR. X.: Lionel Atwill, Fay Wray—The very best of all shockers. If you add "Frankenstein," "Dracula," "Murders in the Rue Morgue," Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" all together you would have about the same number of thrills that you find in "Dr. X." Through a mistake, we got the black and white print. I am advised the color print is much better. Insist on the color print. Played Jan. 15.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Eric Linden, Aline McMahon—As an adult show this goes over good. Strange as it seems, we had a bigger turn-out of men than women. But it's a picture that can be stepped on and will get the business. Don't be afraid of it. Played Jan. 5-6. Running time, 72 minutes.—Carl Veseth, Palace Theatre, Malta, Mont. General patronage.

THE MATCH KING: Warren William, Lili Damita—Real life story of Swedish Match King with Warren William doing most of the acting. Picture grew tiresome before the ten reels was finished and hardly seemed to interest a small crowd in attendance. Would suggest only a one night showing. Won't stand up for two. Played Jan. 18. Running time, 85 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

THE MATCH KING: Warren William, Lili Damita—Very good show. Just a little too overdrawn for the average picture goer. But still a good show. Good for Sunday, or any day in the week. Warren William is very outstanding. Played Jan. 8-9. Running time, 82 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—A great picture from all angles. Audience reaction 100%. Robinson not a favorite here. However, too much praise cannot be said for his work in this production. Also, quoting Winchell, "An orchid for Miss McMahon." She is marvelous. Played Dec. 28-29.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young, George Brent—Just a mighty classy picture that will ring the bell of satisfaction. Don't know when we have played a more pleasing picture.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

TIGER SHARK: This is a great picture of sea life and has some real thrills. Edward Robinson is capable and Richard Arlen fills in the dull places. The new girl is all right but won't replace any of my favorites.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—Men and boys will like this picture but it's going to be pretty rough for lady patrons. Pictures of this type have very little box office pull and this one is no exception. Played Jan. 23. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

TWO SECONDS: Edward G. Robinson—Here is a great picture with a perfect cast. The work of Robinson is truly wonderful. He is in a class by himself. The story is somewhat depressing and will not please all, but it's a great picture and will do above average business. Played Jan. 14.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Fox

BACHELOR AFFAIRS: Adolphe Menjou—This is a very good comedy. Advertise it as such and it will be sure to please. Running time, 76 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Half of audience satisfied and half disappointed. Bow's acting the only worthwhile quality of the picture. By no means a family picture. Played Jan. 4-5. Running time, 85 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Very entertaining and interesting from beginning to end and it's good for any ordinary run of patrons out here, town or county. Played Jan. 21.—George Hodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson production. Another good jungle production. Personally was well pleased with it. Some regular patrons did not come out because they said those animal pictures are pretty much all alike. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Jan. 7-8.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

THE FIRST YEAR: Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor—Good for its kind but not the type of picture that the Gaynor-Farrell fans like to see them in. Drew very well and seemed to please. Played Jan. 3-4.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selina, La. General patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Drew average Sunday and Monday business and pleased 100%. Consider it a very nice little program picture. Played Jan. 8-9. Running time, 63 minutes. —S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—A good little picture that will satisfy. Story has been done times before but clever handling makes it seem new. Played Jan. 7. Running time, 64 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Eilers' personality will put over any of her pictures. Ginger Rogers should have better parts. Lyon surprisingly good, almost stole the laurels. Too bad Jimmy Dunn couldn't have had a part in this picture, as splitting up the Dunn-Eilers team is a mistake. They do not draw on their individual popularity. Played Dec. 19-20-21. Running time, 66 minutes.—G. A. Troyer, New Lyric Theatre, Rugby, N. D. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—Fair program picture. Patrons did not rave over it. Ben Lyon good in this one. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Jan. 14-15.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY PAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett —Scenes laid along waterfront. A drunken fisherman, whose wisecracks I presume the producers thought funny, is another case of "too much of a good thing." All together I presume this fellow was the center of attraction for a thousand fee, and it became boresome. Outside of this, it's good entertainment, but never gets outside the program class. Miss Bennett and Tracy good. Holds interest, Miss Bennett deserves better stories. Played Jan. 22-23. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PASSPORT TO HELL: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas —This is a fair picture. It is better than most of the other Elissa Landi pictures. Running time, 75 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen —One gentleman walked out on the picture. Everyone else did a lot of laughing and seemed well-pleased. Played Jan. 13-14.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS' ROOST: George O'Brien, Maureen O'Sullivan—Best Zane Grey story for a long time. Saturday night crowd simply went wild over it. Fast riding, beautiful outdoor scenery and a number of clever stunts by George O'Brien. Business unusually good considering the times. Everyone broke here. Showed an old man a silver dollar the other day and he didn't know what it was. Played Jan. 14. Running time, 70 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers—Pretty good picture. No raves. No kicks. Drew better than ordinary. Guess the title caught. Especially pleasing to the "femmies." Played Jan. 8-9.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—Very fine picture. It drew very well and was well liked. Played Jan. 10-11.—Edith M. Fordyce, Pincess Theatre, Selina, La. General patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers, Maureen O'Sullivan—This was liked better than his previous talkies by our patrons. Played Jan. 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—They don't make any better entertainment than this to please country town. 100% satisfaction. Business rotten, but no fault of the picture. Pleased all that came.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell—Patrons thought this was going to be an up-to-date jazz picture according to title, but it turned out to be a kind of western. Anyway, it was good. Eugene Pallette as the stagecoach driver almost stole the picture. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Jan. 18-19.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

Majestic

HEARTS OF HUMANITY: Jackie Searl—One of the best kid pictures we have run. Fine feature for Friday and Saturday. Sure gets the kids in. We ran a cowboy picture with it and it went over with a bang. Played Jan. 21-22. Running time, 70 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Mascot

PRIDE OF THE LEGION: Rin Tin Tin, Jr.—Will satisfy any audience. Action and thrills. Play this one up strong. Give them a good two-reel comedy with it and you'll have a good show.—William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MGM

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Fair picture. Supposed to be a special but far from it. Did good business on it. Doubled it to help it along. Davies is dead from the neck up. Our patrons don't go for her. They come to see other features. Played Jan. 8-9. Running time, 90 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies, Robert Montgomery—This show failed to draw for me but it is good and worthy of a good house. Well worth advertising. Played Dec. 2-4. Running time, 90 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. General patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Conrad Nagel—A picture that will please every member of the family. Every theatre should show this one. Running time, 81 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—The story is terrible. Gilbert wrote it, so you know what to expect. Virginia Bruce is so so. Gilbert is through, no drawing power at all. Played Jan. 10-11. Running time, 72 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—No good, and they felt the same as I, for they walked out on it. It takes more than film to get by now, the novelty of talkies has worn off and it takes pictures. Played Oct. 22-23. Running time, 84 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. General patronage.

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead—In spite of the generally adverse criticsm of this feature, I consider it good. The acting of Bankhead was good and the whole picture went over well. Played Jan. 7.—George Hodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

FAITHLESS: Robert Montgomery, Tallulah Bankhead—An extra good entertainment. Both stars fine. Balance of cast good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines, Cliff Edwards, Madge Evans—Plenty of action to the picture, but Haines is back at his smart alec stuff that we thought the directors had tamed him down on. Also it was a mighty good thing for Haines that he had Edwards in support for his work as Bumpy shaded Haines with the audience. If this one goes over you can credit Edwards.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—A grand flop for me. Can account for this production only in one way. All this bunch of actors had gathered on the lot long before time to commence work on their various productions and some one suggested a rehearsal. So on with the makeup. A little of this and a little of that. A few shots of one and a few shots of the other. Just testing out the camera, etc. Then lo and behold—old man Metro says what's the use of wasting this good film and spend a million or two advertising it. Make a special of it. People don't know the difference and we'll make 'em like it. So the "Grand Hotel" is just a great long drawnout conglomerated mess of nothing. I will never be able to crank my mind up to a point when I could say it was anything but a joke on the people.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

LETTY LYNTON: Joan Crawford—Pleased our crowd of Monday and Tuesday fans when they expect a sophistication sex picture. One man said he liked it better than "Strange Interlude." Played Jan. 9-10. Running time, 86 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—This picture did splendidly above average business. It is not as good as the previous Fu Manchu pictures made by Paramount and was quite disappointing to some, but it pleased the majority. Karloff, with this picture, adds more to his laurels in becoming a new Lon Chaney.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Boris Karloff is the star, and Bore-us is right. More kicks on this than any three pictures in ages. Oh, Metro—what's wrong. Couldn't you see that this was not wanted? Come on, old Leo, and give us some more of those truly good pictures you made when times were good. Now's when we need you at your best. Sure I know you've got some good ones up your sleeve, but let's have 'em now. Played Jan. 21. Running time, far too much.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

PAYMENT DEFERRED: Charles Laughton, Maureen O'Sullivan—What few came in at the beginning left before the end. Without a doubt the worst picture we have ever shown. Take a fool's advice and make a deal of some sort, but don't run it. Probably will never hear the last of it. Played Nov. 18.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—Splendid picture which drew better than anything we have had in months. Pleased 100%. Played Jan. 8-9.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess, Selina, La. General patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—What a show. It's all entertainment. Not quite as good as Emma, but still plenty good. This is the kind of a picture that will put the industry back on its feet. And it is really what the people want. And why not give them what they want, especially when they pay all the bills. We need less art and more entertainment. Played Jan. 15-16-17. Running time, 77 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. General patronage.

SKYSCRAPER SOULS: Maureen O'Sullivan, Warren William—A dandy picture. Maureen O'Sullivan steals the show. Did average business. Running time, 95 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

SON DAUGHTER: Raymond Novarro, Helen Hayes—A slow moving Chinese picture that is very uninteresting and absolutely no appeal to anyone. Just another poor picture and a good argument for the Brookhart Bill. Played Jan. 1-2.—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton—Not much—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Not quite as good as the other Keatons. Personally I was disappointed. Running time, 80 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Finely acted picture, but hard to put over. Strictly a class picture, the "High Brows" will like it but the "High Ball" boys in the balcony won't know what it's all about. Drew very little extra business. Played Jan. 19-20. Running time, 110 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE: Lionel Barrymore—This is a good picture but has no drawing power whatsoever. Will please those you can get to come in. Running time, 90 minutes.—Hippodrme Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

Monogram

GUILTY OR NOT GUILTY: Betty Compson, Tom Douglas—A good entertaining murder story. OK for Saturday.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

GUILTY OR NOT GUILTY: Betty Compson—They should pension Compson. She is too old to act. Fair picture. Doubled it and did good business. Kids get a boost out of Compson. She's good as a comedy. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 65 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HONOR OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—A good western.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STRANGE ADVENTURE: Regis Toomey, June Clyde—A very good entertaining picture. Good story, well acted.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby—A very entertaining production, and one which all small towns should play. Some will not like it, but the masses will get a big kick out of it. Stuart Erwin is swell. Played Dec. 15.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Radio stars—Perfectly splendid and was it liked? Several people came back the second time to see it. Play it and tell everybody you have it. It is certainly an outstanding attraction that will make money for you. Played Dec. 26-27. Running time, 80 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Robert Armstrong, Carole Lombard—Good show, minus love interest. Men will like it. Played Jan. 17-18.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Robert Armstrong, Carole Lombard—Here is a "honey" in any man's house. Title and cast don't mean much at b. o., but it's a picture. A take-off of the Tea-pot Dome scandal and one grand mouthful of enjoyment. Thanks, Paramount, and all concerned in making this one. Played Jan. 20.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Another gang picture that is somewhat modified and will probably go over for a one-night showing. Dozens similar to it have been shown before and would class this one as being no better or worse than the rest of them. Drew regular Saturday night business. Played Jan. 21. Running time, 81 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Hits the fancy of our audience. Good Saturday show with plenty of action to satisfy. Keep it up, Paramount. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 62 minutes.—I. W. Rowley, Ward Theatre, Pismo Beach, Cal. General patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—A very good picture and drew well for me.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Loew, Wynne Gibson—This is a good picture dealing with the automobile stealing racket as handled by organized big city criminals. Cast is good and it will fit into any program.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Rapids, Pierre, S. D.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—This is good entertainment and pleased people. Like "They Call It Sin" everyone liked it better than they thought they would. A little picture that goes big.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—Truly a magnificent picture. It is a finished product. The cast is excellent and the direction is superb, yet there were a good many who didn't like it, mainly because of the tragic ending. However, it has tremendous drawing power and should do a good business in all localities. Hayes' artistry will be remembered always. Played Jan. 13-14.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes. Did a flop that made Steve Brodie look like an amateur. Nicely produced and well acted. However, if that means anything at the box office, we have yet to find it out. Played Jan. 8-9.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth—Who said not to make a star of Erwin? This boy is another Will Rogers. He has a comedy all his own and I am glad to see him starred. Here is a picture for every member of the family. Back it on family night and hold it an extra day. It's clean, wholesome entertainment for any house and you can stand at the door and smile at your patrons as they pass out of the house. You don't have to hide when you have this class of stuff. Supporting cast is good and story great. Paramount seems to be making better pictures since they cut the deadwood out of the old oak.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—It should go big where patrons like Zane Grey. A lot of hokum but they eat it up. Played Jan. 20.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers, Thelma Todd—A lot of nonsense but they liked it, so what else is wanted? If you please your patrons, the piano player always gets a hand. If you want comedy book this one. The best Marx Brothers I have screened. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 72 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Nice little show that pleased the customers. With a surprise ending. Not much for children, but nothing objectionable. Played Jan. 10-11.—J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Very good program picture. Drew better second day than first.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—A swell picture that failed to draw. Maybe the other fellows will come out better. Picture deserves it.—R. L. Nowell, Cherokee Theatre, Monroe, Ga. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—To my notion a very interesting picture and it was different to any other. It held interest of all who came out to see it. These times the draw does not measure the value of a picture but this one did get some extra patronage. Played Jan. 1-2-3. Running time, 86 minutes.—H. J. Longaker, Glenwood Theatre, Glenwood, Minn. General patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton, Richard Arlen—Laughton is rapidly coming to the top, and without him this picture would be nothing at all. The picture seemed to strike a new keynote and in spite of a divided opinion it drew well. Played Jan. 8-9-10.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—There is a lilt and rhythm to this that is truly fascinating. A sure cure for the blues. Our patrons, the men as well as the ladies, seemed to enjoy it immensely. Music, fun, romance in large quantities about describes this. Attendance a good average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MADAME BUTTERFLY:. Sylvia Sidney, Cary Grant—In spite of a plot familiar to everybody, and an insistent dragginess in spots, this picture pleased 90% of our patrons and we did splendid business on it. The settings are lavish and beautiful and the Puccini music adds tremendously to the picture. Played Jan. 5-6.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marion Nixon—Oakie is coming down to earth. Done better in this one. Wasn't quite so high hat as he generally is. It is a good prize fight picture. Played Dec. 11-12. Running time, 74 minutes.—J. E. Courter, Courter Theatre, Gallatin, Mo. Fair patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Thomas Meighan—This type of picture just won't get the cash customers here. This picture is below anything we have played from Paramount this season. Business fair. Played Jan. 9-10.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—I reported on this last week. This second report is a comment on why so fine a picture as "Movie Crazy" should prove so generally poor at the box office. It is my belief that the cause is the title "Movie Crazy." Many patrons must look on the title as a reflection upon their love for the movies. I trust that Harold Lloyd won't become discouraged and stop making any more pictures. If one can overcome the handicap of the title and promise your patrons that here is entertainment packed with fun, romance and surprises, about the best that the screen can give, attendance may prove more satisfactory.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—This is Lloyd's best since "Grandma's Boy," but it did not mean a thing to us. This star belongs to the list that has been, for his pictures are too far and few between, and his type of comedy is out of date. Certainly not a "special." Business very poor. Fine for the kids and they turned out great. Played Jan. 15-16-17. Running time, 95 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—One fair for Lloyd. Children liked it but adults not so much. Business way below old Lloyd grosses, partly due to general conditions. Played Dec. 4-5.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—I consider this mighty fine entertainment from start to finish for old and young. It drew average adult attendance and record breaking children attendance. Get behind it. It will please them.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Good feature comedy, clean in every way and with Constance Cummings adding her splendid work to that of the star, should have proved box office. It did not, however, draw as well as pictures costing us half, and not nearly so well produced. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 90 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee—Very good picture. Excellent cast, story and direction. Played on double bill with "Golden West" and gave us the first decent business for six months. Played Jan. 8-9.—Walter Creal, Beacon Theatre, Omaha, Neb. Neighborhood patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook—Unusually good picture for small towns. Drew very well and pleased exceptionally well. Played Dec. 28-29. Running time, 72 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clarke Gable, Carole Lombard—They certainly liked this one, and there is no reason why they shouldn't. It's a good, entertaining and thoroughly enjoyable picture. Didn't hear one bad criticism. Like most pictures, it has its risque moments; but it seems they like it, so why worry?—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

HANCOCK WANTS MUSICAL COMEDY

A. E. Hancock, that stalwart of the Columbia Theatre at Columbia City, Ind., believes the producers are overlooking a good bet in clever musical comedy. Incidentally, we think that his suggestion DOES belong in this department. He says:

"This does not belong in 'What the Picture Did For Me,' but it is my opinion that the public is ripe for some smart, clever musical comedy. It would be a change from what we have been showing and this I know, that my clients are asking for the singing and dancing shows again. It is my guess that a few would make more money than the average picture that we are showing today.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

70,000 WITNESSES: Phillips Holmes, Dorothy Jordan—A most pleasing picture for old and young. Can be played any day of the week. Action fans will love it. Business slightly above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF CLARA DEANE: Wynne Gibson, Pat O'Brien—An old picture that is worthwhile. One that the woman's club can recommend and one that fits nicely with my Wednesday-Thursday crowd. I dug this up out of the past and kept in the black ink for a couple of days that usually show red.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis—Not a whole lot in this town got stuck on this one.—P. S. Jones, Star Theatre, North Brookfield, Mass.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—A firstrate picture of the gangster-detective type. Interest holding from start to finish. Average in drawing power. Played Jan. 10-11. Running time, 74 minutes.—Charles Born, Elks Theatre, Prescott, Ariz. General patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—A Zane Grey western that is well produced and plenty of action. Pleased about an average Friday and Saturday crowd.—B. C. Talley, Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C. Small town patronage.

RKO

THE ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—Splendid acting and flawless production fail to lift this picture out of mediocrity, from a standpoint of the box office. While an artistic success, it failed to please our patrons and we received many criticisms during its run. Played January 16-17.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

BEYOND THE ROCKIES: Tom Keene—Keene's westerns please our Friday and Saturday crowd because of the singing cowboys. It's not all talk and horse's hoofs. Running time, 62 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore, Billie Burke—Failed to draw. Received many very favorable comments from those who saw it but not the type of entertainment seemingly wanted by those patrons who stayed away. Truly a remarkable drama with superb acting. Played Dec. 27-29. Running time, 70 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore, Billy Burke—A picture that gave 100% satisfaction to all that saw it. Great story, fine cast.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Real good picture that gave satisfaction to those who saw it. However, the picture does not have appeal for the masses and the old box office says "just another picture."—Gerald Stettmund, Odeon Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

THE HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Here is Lee Tracy at his wisecracking best. There is not a quiet moment in the whole show. We had much better than average business both days, and they thought it one of the best shows of the year, which it is not. But you can boost it strong, get extra business with it and please your patrons, so what more can we ask for. Looking at this picture you might find out what is the matter with your own business. Perhaps you are not putting out enough ballyhoo. Played Jan. 14-15. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL:. Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—It certainly piled them in. We couldn't get rid of the kids. They stayed all day. This pair means business to us. A picture young and old will enjoy. Played Jan. 22-23-24. Running time, 74 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, Buster Phelps—This is good entertainment. It will pack your house with kiddies and the adults who come will like it. Let any child come free who brings a parent and you will help the box office.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—I had rather see Oliver fold her arms and give one good sniff then all the other comediennes on the screen. My opinion, however, doesn't seem to compare favorably with the theatre going public. We did poor business on the picture, but those that saw it liked it and took the trouble to say so. It is nothing like great, but one of the best program pictures seen in a good while. Oliver is great even if the plot is a bit doddery and you aren't a bit surprised when the murderer's identity is divulged. Played January 2-3.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—Our Sunday-Monday crowds were cut in half during this run due to sub-zero weather and snow, but those patrons who did venture out made many gratifying comments. Played January 15-16. —Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez, Karen Morley—A flop at box office receipts. Just another mystery and my patrons seem tired of them. Don't see from our receipts how the big radio broadcast of this mystery helped any and evidently it hurt. Played January 5-7. Running time, 76 minutes. —Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez—A good enough mystery drama, but failed to live up to the expectations created by Radio and N. B. C. ballyhoo. Certainly not a "special." Business just average and had a few walkouts. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—Good picture that did better business than the previous Bennett. Women will like the beautiful clothes.—B. C. Talley, Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C. Small town patronage.

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE: Gwili Andre, Frank Morgan—Surprisingly well-liked considering the semi-gruesome type of picture. Played January 10-11-12.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

THIRTEEN WOMEN: Irene Dunne, Gregory Ratoff—This is a punishing picture with lots of trouble and little amusement. It is box office as it has a ready made market through the story. Cast is sufficient and the direction satisfactory to get by those who come to see the story.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

Tiffany

THE LAST MILE: Preston Foster, Howard Phillips—100% entertainment, well acted and elegantly produced. Seemed to please all classes. Much favorable comment.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MAGIC NIGHT: Jack Buchanan—Try and figure out why they brought this over. I can't. Before it was over I suddenly remembered a very important engagement. Could not face the audience as they came out. Use your own judgment on this.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Gloria Stuart, Pat O'Brien—Thrilling airplane story. Well done and very interesting with demonstrations of the newest devices now in use with airmail service, but just failed to draw normal business. Some great shots of airplanes with crashes, etc. Played December 30-31. Running time, 82 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska, Family patronage.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy, Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Believe this the best airplane picture we have had. Made us an excellent Saturday show. Played January 21.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BACK STREET: Irene Dunne, John Boles—For this type of picture they don't come any better. Dunne turns in a marvelous performance of the woman on the back street of a man's life.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—My patrons proclaimed this one of Rogers' best. Well liked by most everyone. An appropriate subject. Running time, 73 minutes. Played January 21-22.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn. Small town patronage.

FLAMING GUNS: Tom Mix, Ruth Hall—For the first time in months we had them standing with this. Pleasing picture with plenty of action. Mix still gives them a fast performance despite his age. Played January 14.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

HIDDEN GOLD: Tom Mix—Good picture of this type. All of the Mix pictures have been good and the supporting cast above the average for western pictures. We have had to discontinue the use of western pictures due to the inability of out-of-town people who enjoy this class of entertainment to sell farm produce at any price. They have no money, so of course can't go to the shows. I firmly believe that westerns will come back, but they are dead at present. We cut the run to one day, which works better than to hold them for two or three. Played January 13.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—If you're looking for a raw, red-blooded, and somewhat exciting picture, here it is. It is so real that few women liked it, but it's still a good picture. O'Brien is splendid, and Tom Brown, featured in the cast, hasn't one single line throughout the picture. Played January 14-15-16.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

THE MUMMY: Boris Karloff—Horror pictures seem to have rather played out. Although we played this picture during the holiday season and had good business the first day, the receipts fell off trenemdously the second day. Although ridiculously impossible, the picture is excellent entertainment and splendidly produced. Will draw well on a midnight show. The angle of a 3,700 year old mummy coming to life will pull them in out of sheer curiosity if nothing else. Played December 31-Jan. 2.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

MY PAL, THE KING: Tom Mix—This is a picture that will please any small town patrons, and in my opinion will be well received anywhere. Great audience appeal. Played January 14.—George Hodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

OKAY AMERICA: Lew Ayres—A good gangster picture. Second day killed because of tragic ending. Otherwise a good Friday and Saturday picture. Played January 18-19. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Not so heap much. Karloff didn't get to spread his stuff in this. A kind of a much-to-do-about-nothing all the way through.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. Small town patronage.

RADIO PATROL: Robert Armstrong, Lila Lee—Pleased our family night fans. Running time, 68 minutes.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zazu Pitts, Slim Summerville—This picture introduces something quite new. The characters, in places, speak their troubles aloud, and most of them are truly a scream. Pitts, as usual, takes all honors from Summerville, and is aided by a splendid cast. Our patrons remarked it was one of the best comedies they had seen in a long long while. Although it is a bit slow in getting started, and should be shortened in places, it never drags or becomes boresome in the least. Played January 3-4.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

Warner

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell, Eric Linden—Blondell is liked by all our patrons. Did fine business on it but picture was poor. Music was the only thing that was okay. Played Jan. 19-20. Running time, 68 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: Kay Francis, William Powell—A good robbery story. Did not draw but satisfied all that did come.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell—A good picture but no draw for us. Just can't interest them in Powell.—B. C. Talley, Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C. Small town patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell, Joan Blondell—A very finely acted picture. Well liked and played to a nice business. Need we say more? Played January 13.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: Kay Francis, William Powell—An exceptionally fine picture, the best this popular team has made. Ending caused much interesting comment and proved puzzling to many. If these stars are box office for you, then you have a "natural" when you play this. Business for us, above average. Played Jan. 8-9-10. Running time, 69 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State, Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Nancy Carroll, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Failed to draw. Russian story, well done by the characters but not a popular type story with us. Played Jan. 10-11. Running time, 60 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska. Family patronage.

World Wide

LAW OF THE WEST: Bob Steele—Fine little western, good story and good photography. Good Friday and Saturday bill. Did average business on it. Played January 21. Running time, 60 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

BARNYARD BROADCAST: Mickey Mouse—One of the best Mickey Mouse series. Just one long scream of laughter with excellent music. Running time, 8 minutes.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS: The new series and okay, especially with movie fans, as they always show their star favorites at play or outside of the studios. Running time, 9 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

Educational

THE BIG FLASH: Harry Langdon—A good comedy. This little guy is funny.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

MILADY'S ESCAPADE: Operalogues—No good for the small town and I doubt they will get by anywhere, except the music hall. Very high class opera condensed, into a jumpy two reeler with foreign sets. I haven't seen a single soul that liked it. Running time, 20 minutes.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

THE OPERALOGUES: Are the outstanding two reelers. Music lovers will rave about them and come to hear them the second time. Your kids will walk out on them. The cartoon comedies are the best of the shorts and any one of the six kinds are good enough to sell the kids. Some are good and some are just fair but all of them have their good and bad so buy them cheaply.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre. S. D.

Fox

MANHATTAN MELODIES: Magic Carpet Series—Extra good. This reel gives you an idea of what takes place every day in the city of New York. No talking but good music. Photography good. Running time, 10 minutes.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre. Montpelier, Idaho.

MGM

ANY OLD PORT: Laurel and Hardy—Just the usual type of funny incidents used in their comedies and pleased okey. Running time, 18 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

FREE WHEELING: Our Gang Comedy—A very funny Gang Comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

OVER THE COUNTER: A real good musical short in color. Running time, 18 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

OVER THE COUNTER: Metro Dancing Girls—Two-reel color subject that seemed to please everyone. Good photography and lots of pretty girls who know how to dance. Running time, 18 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

WILD PEOPLE: Very good musical. All in color. Good entertainment. Running time, 17 minutes.—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb.

Paramount

HAREM SCAREM: Al St. John—Shame on you, Paramount and St. John, take this out of circulation. Not a laugh in it. Everybody was bored and it nearly ruined our show. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Ky. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE No. 2: Stuart Erwin—Not as good as the first in this series. They will have to be better than this one to get by in the future. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Ore. Family patronage.

HOLLYWOOD ON PARADE No. 5: Another good single. Has Abe Lyman's band in excellent numbers. —Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa.

JUST A GIGOLO: Why did they put a song like this in a screen song?—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

PICTORIAL No. 5: Just the usual pictorial. Running time, 8 minutes.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS: One of the best liked shorts by our patrons. Always plenty of laughs and the announcer is really clever. Enjoyed best by older patrons who remember the early "flicker films." Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. Family patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS No. 5: Just another souvenir of old time. Shots and stars good.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Small town patronage.

SING A SONG: James Milton—A screen song that is decidedly worth running. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SINGING PLUMBER: Donald Novis—Good clean comedy with several good songs and a lot of slapstick. Good for Saturday. Running time, 18 minutes. —Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala.

SINGING PLUMBER: Donald Novis — Good comedy. People are going for this guy Novis's singing. Her certainly is easy to listen to. Running time, 18 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

RKO

ENGINEER'S DAUGHTER: Mae Robson—It's a wow. Good for plenty of laughs. Don't let it get by you. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

TIGHT ROPE TRICKS: Tom and Jerry Cartoon—Good with any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE MILLIONAIRE CAT: Clark & McCullough—Comedy and lots of it. Two reels of everything to make you laugh.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville. Mich.

TWO LIPS AND JULIP: Masquers—Sure disappointed in this series if they are all like this one.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

United Artists

BABES IN THE WOOD: Silly Symphony—In our opinion the finest reel in the business. There were too many good comments on this. If any short subject material deserves marquee billing, this certainly does. Color beautiful.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill.

SANTA'S WORKSHOP: Silly Symphony—Another great color cartoon from Disney. This brought additional business after playing "Babes In The Wood." —H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill.

Universal

BUSY BARBER: Oswald—Good cartoons. Fine music and okay for children matinee. Running time, 7 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LIZZIE STRATA: Brevity—About the poorest single reel I have shown since talking pictures. Leave it in the can. Not worth showing. Running time, 9 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville. Ill.

WHO ME? Very good comedy. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selina, La. General patronage.

YOO-HOO: James Gleason—Good.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn.

Warner Vitaphone

GOOPY GEAR: This one is swell. Great music in it. Running time, 6 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HERE, PRINCE: Joe Penner—Just a filler. Not much to laugh at. Running time, 17 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

PASSING THE BUCK: Broadway Brevity—One of the finest two-reel subjects we have run.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

POOR LITTLE RICH BOY: Broadway Brevities—Very good. These Broadway Brevities are extra good. Beautiful sets, wonderful music and snappy songs. Smart wise cracks. Real entertainment.—S. H. Rich. Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho.

A REGULAR TROUPER: Ruth Etting—Not so good. Ruth isn't a regular trouper in this one. Should have better music and songs, not so much pantomime. Running time, 20 minutes. Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

STAND BY THE GUNS!

THAT old reliable added attraction, "Dame Rumor," will again have a grand and glorious opportunity of working overtime due to recent happenings in showbusiness. Every Tom, Dick and Harry in the business, from the page boy to the district manager's mother-in-law, will be telling you what's going to happen and when—but not why.

How do these "happenings" affect you? Basically, we are all affected. It stands to reason that anything of great importance will have some bearing on the individual status of all responsible people employed in the business. But here is a chance to prove your loyalty and sense of responsibility. If, perchance, you are employed by one of the companies now going through the mill, this is the time for you to stand by that company right to the last ditch.

Stand by in many ways. To use all your influence in seeing that nothing detrimental to the best interests of your theatre in particular, and the business in general, gets into the local papers. A chat with the managing editor and any other powers that you stand in with at the paper, will be of major importance. Don't weaken or break down the prestige of your theatre that you have been building up for so long.

Reassure the merchants who have played ball with you all the time that you are still in the swim and ready to continue your friendly and cooperative relations. Ditto for the entire Chamber of Commerce. In fact, all the way along the line it will become your task to offset conversation that may hurt your business. This can be done without pushing yourself into the foreground while so doing. Work quietly, efficiently and always in the best interests of your employers. But use tact and good sense.

THE AGE FOR LEARNING!

RAPIDLY changing tactics in showbusiness have caused many of the more mature showmen to feel that they could not maintain the newer and faster pace being set. . . . Stuff and nonsense. . . . If you've got a brain . . . know how to use it . . keep it from wearing out . . . and by all means, keep it young, then the rest of your carcass will keep pace with that brain and you'll have the added advantage of years of experience and a settled head on your shoulders, which is something the average youngster of today is badly in need of.

We won't attempt to mention names, but some of the most aggressive . . . fast-thinking . . . keen showmen we have met were the men in their late thirties and early forties . . . and we could recall, without extra effort, several past the half-century mark capable of teaching the home office a few good pointers on showmanship and showbusiness.

Age is a funny thing, especially the tricks it plays on one mentally. A young chap just left our desk bitterly complaining that here he was at the age of thirty-two and without a job and little prospects. How would he ever get anywhere at "his age"! There's a laugh for you. Thirty-two and talking like a graybeard. Thirty-two is still the youthful age so far as we are concerned. Many a successful man has admitted late in his declining years that he was hardly himself before he reached forty.

It is quite true that showbusiness . . . more than any other line, is a business of young men . . . but "young men" need not be taken to mean the youth of nineteen to twenty-five. . . . Hell no. . . . When you're thirty-five you are still a "youth" . . . but getting a little mellow perhaps with age and experience . . . that mellowness which comes with taking it on the chin . . . fighting tough battles . . . living a clean life . . . and storing up that wealth of experience that is worth so much . . . and is so badly needed . . . when opportunity knocks at the door and beckons you to bigger and better things.

And just remember this . . . Madame Opportunity takes her own sweet time in arriving at your front door. . . . She has learned the wisdom of age and knows that few men below thirty are ready to tackle successfully the big jobs in life . . . while those over forty will make good to a far greater percentage than the younger men.

Just retain . . . and develop further . . . that courage to think for yourself . . . to avoid snap-judgment . . . and most important of all . . . to use that brain of yours so as to keep it fit and young all the time . . . on the theory that if the brain is kept young the body will match it in energy and vitality. . . .

GLENN CARROLL HELD BIG BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR MICKEY MOUSERS

Mickey Mouse's Birthday Week was celebrated not long ago by Glenn Carroll, manager of the Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kas., with all the fancy trimmings that go along with such an event.

For a cake (see photo) Glenn dug up a couple of nail kegs, covered them with pasteboard and then added a coat of real cake icing. A special cutout of the famous Mouser, placed alongside the cake, is also shown in the accompanying photo.

Mickey Mouse
C'mon and see him

We have another snap-shot of Glenn's at hand which shows the ghost-like bally he used on "Doctor X," but it's too faint for reproduction. Suffice then, to state that the man was masked and wrapped in what looks like a long white sheet. He carried a sign reading, "Fox-Midland—Mon.-Tues. —The Mysterious Doctor X."

A few weeks ago Carroll staged a food, clothing and toy benefit show, turning all articles tendered in lieu of admission over to the County Food Commission for distribution to the needy. Much good work along these lines has been accomplished by many Club members and we're glad to credit Glenn with his share. We'll be telling you more about his work in future issues.

LETTER TO EDITOR FROM DAN BURGUM GOOD FOR A STORY

Front page tear sheets of a Greenville, Miss., newspaper at hand bear evidence that Dan Burgum, manager of the Paramount Theatre there, has the knack of grabbing free space in that much sought after section of a paper.

One story carried a reprint of a letter Burgum sent the editor concerning the visit of an out-of-town band, in which he complimented the organization on the fine showing it made and suggested that the Paramount theatre stood ready to sponsor a movement to raise funds for a local band.

On the front page of another issue a story called readers' attention to names of local citizens among that day's ads, which would entitle them to guest tickets at the Paramount.

Good work, Dan, and we're glad to see your name back again among Club items. Let's hear more from you.

Cheerful News; Oh, Yeah!

It is reported all Fox-West Coast employees in the San Francisco district have taken another five per cent cut, making it thirty per cent all told.

COLUMNS OF SPACE OBTAINED BY LABY ON TWO CAMPAIGNS

Several hundred additional inches of free space found its way into the pages of the scrap book of George Laby, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Boston, as the result of a "Can Matinee" and a publicity gag on "Fugitive."

But a small portion of the pile of 1,000 cans of food collected for benefit of the unemployed is shown in the accompanying photo, in which you may also get a glimpse of George himself and his house manager, Philip DePetro, in the act of transferring ownership of the various articles to officers of the Salvation Army. Over one thousand kiddies attended the special Saturday morning program arranged for the benefit and brought as many cans of food along. However, cocoanuts, fruits and even doughnuts were received at the gate in lieu of cash admissions. Columns of publicity daily testified to the complete success of the show from that angle.

Laby's advance campaign on "Fugitive" was effective to the point of holding over the film for a second week's showing. Lacking complete details at this writing, we'll merely mention one stunt he used to excellent results.

Whether a press book gag or not, he contrived to have published and reproduced in a Boston paper a story and facsimile letter from the Fugitive himself, allegedly at that time in Boston. The Fugitive was supposed to have attended the Paramount and witnessed the screen version of his own story and the letter expressed to the Paramount's manager his appreciation of the picture, etc. Authentic or not, the gag was a corker and created considerable of a furore in Boston.

We're mighty glad to hear again concerning Laby's activities and to record that he grabbed off a lot more free space from reputedly hard-boiled Boston managing editors. More power to George and his crew!

ZIGMOND FEEDS EARLY BIRDS ATTENDING HIS SPECIAL FREE SHOW!

Jerry Zigmond, manager of the Denver Theatre, Denver, recently served breakfast and a free showing of "No Man Of Her Own" to 1,000 early-to-rise employed women as an effective publicity stunt for that picture. He figured on playing host to about 600, so prepared for 700 but they started forming in line at 5 A. M. and night-owl restaurants in the neighborhood had to be called upon to provide extra rations for the hungry horde. The house-cleaning staff would like to have this happen every morning—oh, yeah!

"Man Against Microbe"

¶ That the motion picture theatres of America can join and share in the beneficent and continuously successful crusade of science to lengthen the span of human life and to alleviate, reduce and eliminate the great preventable losses and sufferings of disease, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has made this one reel picture of the story of "Man Against Microbe."

¶ The picture contains no advertising and no propaganda save that in the great broad cause of human life and health. It is not an argument for insurance or anything else but health. It affords the theatre an opportunity to declare itself a part of its community and community service, offering possibilities of whole-hearted cooperation from civic organizations and officials concerned with public health.

¶ Available to theatres without cost. Write or wire that you want to play it and give three tentative play dates.

SOME NOTES ON WHAT ROBERT ANTHONY IS DOING TO BOOST B.O.

A brief resume of what is being done by Robert Anthony, manager of the Temple Theatre, Cortland, N. Y., to stimulate business these days, will undoubtedly be of interest to fellow Club members who operate on a tri-weekly change policy.

Every Tuesday night is known as "Country Store," during which baskets of food and armsful of baked goods (promoted) are given away in the usual "Country Store" fashion. On a three, two and two-change basis, Tuesday is the third day of the picture; hence the "pick-me-up" to see it through.

On Thursday night's he's using the old, familiar "Family Night," on which an entire family is admitted on two adult tickets. (Since they're not raising those old-fashioned families any more, this gag is not as dangerous as it appears.) The purchaser must be the head of the family, thus entitling their children or what have they to free admission.

TEXAS
Catsup

Every Friday matinee between opening and 6 P. M. any child may gain admission by presenting especially prepared coupons and five cents. The coupons are distributed in schools by newsboys, with permission and even cooperation of the teachers.

The three stunts listed above, Anthony advises, have become more or less standardized, despite the fact that it was tough plugging for the first three weeks. However, interest gradually developed until their worth as regular features became apparent.

To get a serial started a short time ago he held a free morning show for the kiddies, during which the first chapter of the serial and a cartoon were shown and the regular five-cent tickets given out. A short, personal address was made to the youngsters between the two shorts, announcing the afternoon show and advising them to get their five-cent tickets on the way out. The morning show was crowded, but played nowhere near the gate that greeted the afternoon performance, despite inclement weather.

Giveaways Helped!

While still on the subject of kiddie shows, we may add that a few give-aways were arranged for the youngsters over the holiday season, generally selecting the second or third days of the picture. Gifts usually consisted of three sets of skiis, scooters or sleighs, all secured gratis from local merchants by giving them credit in display copy.

Another holiday activity consisted of holding food matinees at both Temple and State, to which children were admitted free for donation of some article of non-perishable food. All articles were given to the local welfare committee to make up Xmas baskets for the needy. The accompanying photo shows a portion of the food collected at one of the shows.

Keeping tax on pictures which have any Latin slant, Anthony makes a bid for Italian patronage by sending out a special flyer printed in the native language. We have one at hand that was widely distributed by newsboys on Leo Carillo in "Deception." He also gets out-of-town coverage gratis in a newspaper which has a large circulation.

It's plain that Anthony has been using a variety of stunts to keep in the running and we're sure his recipes for boosting the box office will be of interest to many other members of this Club. We'll be on watch for more of his show-selling tips and, in the meantime, wish him continued success during the New Year and for many more to come.

CIVIC LEADERS PAID TRIBUTE TO TOM KANE WITH A FULL PAGE AD

Men prominent in Redwood City and San Mateo County, Calif., recently paid high tribute to the popularity of Tom Kane as manager of the Sequoia Theatre and a respected citizen by taking a full page of space in the local newspaper on occasion of the Sequoia's Fourth Anniversary.

Included among the names printed in the accompanying reproduction of the ad are newspaper executives; the Chief of Police; the manager of a large department store; County Assessor; Sheriff; the Mayor of Redwood City; City Councilmen; a Congressman-elect and the head of the local Chamber of Commerce.

Theatre managers from surrounding territory who also subscribed to the move included Harry G. Seipel, manager of the Peninsula Theatre, Burlingame; Edward W. Hussong, manager of the San Mateo Theatre, San Mateo; George Teckemeyer, manager of the Varsity Theatre, Palo Alto, and Harry E. Browne, manager of the Stanford Theatre, Palo Alto. Most of these names will be familiar to readers of this department.

The message the page placed before the public eye referred to the Sequoia as one of the outstanding business institutions of the city and gave full credit to Tom Kane for directing its successful career. This same subject was further taken up in one of the main articles in the editorial columns, headed "4th Birthday Comes to the Sequoia Theatre."

Those familiar with the work Kane has been doing at Redwood City will not be at all surprised at this fine testimonial given him by men prominent in his community, nor are we, who have had the pleasure of recording his activities from time to time. From past observations we would state: show us a theatre man well thought of by the business men in his town and we'll show you a successful showman.

Reported With Publix

Y. F. Freeman, for the past 20 years one of the chief executives of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises in the South, is reported slated for an important post with Publix. He recently arrived in New York City from Atlanta, where he has been handling the real estate end since Lynch turned his theatre holdings over to Publix in '23.

ON THE OHIO FRONT!

Showmen in This Territory Are Exerting Unusual Effort To Make Theatres Profitable

CONTINUING where we left off last week about Pete Wood; it is nothing new to listen to Pete stage an argument on behalf of his many independent members. Optimism, we regret to state, is not the present keynote of the independent theatre owner. He is much too occupied trying to get by this season without taking time out to make cheerful predictions that he probably wouldn't believe himself. But he's fighting a game battle and we'd like to see him get through.

Stage Shows Again?

Much talk is being circulated regarding the return of stage shows and in this particular city we heard some supposedly definite rumors that Loew's intend to try it again. Throughout this territory they are doing a lot of talking about it and many are inclined to feel that the time is again ripe. We consider ourself as strong a champion for the cause of vaudeville as any of the men we met, yet, we honestly feel that the time is NOT ripe for the return of vodvil at this stage of the game. Our chief reason being the tremendous overhead due to the increased cost of such additions to the regular shows.

The biggest obstacle to stage shows is the union situation. But those unions must get wise to themselves and realize that they are slowly but surely killing the goose that has been laying some nice golden eggs. Exorbitant demands in the way of crew and salaries will do more, and IS doing more, to choke off the return of stage shows than any other single factor. If the union won't play ball, how on earth do they expect to keep their men at work? It would seem like common ordinary good horse sense for them to take notice of present-day conditions and face what every other trade has and is facing; lower wages and sensible consideration for the problems of the theatre owners who are trying to carry on in the face of almost insurmountable difficulties.

It would take no prophet to predict that the unions in taking a complete arbitrary stand are merely rushing into—disaster. In those spots where the theatre owner has taken the bull by the horns and asserted his right to try and stay in business, the unions have found themselves licked. They should not tempt fate and risk the complete loss of what they have been working for for so many years. Meeting conditions and arriving at fair decisions in the way of getting stage shows back into theatres will again put thousands of union men to work and help showbusiness to bring the customers back to the box offices.

AKRON!

Here we are in what was once one of the swellest show-towns of the state. And look at it now! Lots of theatres, run as good as theatres can be run; showmen who are working their fingers to the bone to bring 'em in, but—they just won't be enticed. Reason? Well, there IS a depression, Technocracy—notwithstanding other names for it—and about the most important of all is that Goodyear plant operating so far below normal that you have to take an elevator to get down to it.

But, the Akron showmen keep right on plugging away for dear life and it need never be said that they did not try their utmost to make the town a profitable affair for their respective houses.

First to be visited even before a much-needed dinner was Al Beckerich of the RKO house. Surrounded by handicaps that would make any one give up the ghost, Al carries on and does everything humanly possible with the material he has to work with. In view of the number of circuits and others represented in this city, product is none too plentiful and at the RKO houses it assumes alarming proportions.

Looking the Town Over

Over at Loew's we managed to shake hands and spend a few minutes with Ernest Austgen. Nice house Ernie is handling and, like the rest of the boys, he's doing his best to keep out of the red. Then we went over to see Dick Wright and it was indeed a pleasure to shake hands and chat with this quiet, efficient, go-getting showman. Sort of reminded us of that Pittsburgh shin-dig that "Ace" Berry had us out to in the not-too-distant past when all those peppy Warner Boys from the wide-spread territory journeyed into the division office town. Dick is still plying his trade of pulling the customers into his theatre and from conversation with other showmen in Akron we gathered that he was succeeding to a certain extent.

Frank King of the Colonial, a Fieber and Shea house, was a distinct surprise; the last time we set eyes on him was at Club headquarters in New York. However, he's here now and plugging for all he's worth. Frank has no cinch on his hands, from what we could see in the brief time we spent there, but he has one advantage; even if he plays to fewer people than some of the other houses, it always looks crowded at the Colonial.

In passing one might observe that the three circuit houses in Akron had to take a tough dose of union trouble medicine when according to rumor, some mysterious (?) hoodlums deposited a nice, big, juicy dose of stink fluid on New Year's Eve that refuses to be talked down at this late date. So much so, that we understand new carpets will have to be installed. All of which is so helpful to box office receipts.

We were given an interesting slant in several of the towns visited on their attitude towards the exploitation material being sent out by home offices of the producers. One accommodating chap undertook to read through one of the most assinine flock of merchandising suggestions that we have ever heard and when you sum up the majority of these "broadsides," you wonder who could possibly think up such tripe and get paid for it. Some day the producers of this type of material will finally come to the realization that one good, sensible suggestion that has a chance of being used is worth more than a ream of mimeographed baloney that has reached that exalted stage where it is consigned without much ceremony to the waste paper basket.

If a man's home life has any influence on his business tactics then some of the credit for Nat Holt's friendly and sympathetic relations with his men is due to Mrs. Holt. They have two swell kiddies and a home out in the country far from the noise and excitement of the downtown city streets. Nat loves his home life and takes every opportunity afforded the busy theatre executive of today to spend as much time with his family as is possible.

—And Pictures, Too!

Looking back, at this point of the trip, brings to mind a certain reaction as applied to many of the independents who are finding the sleighing rather tough. They have gone the circuits one better when it comes to digging up additional avenues for revenue and while the larger houses no longer consider it beneath their dignity to favor candy machines, the independents are going in for the extra coin via many other ways.

It would not be too far-fetched to advertise some of the smaller houses as follows: Cigars, Cigarettes, Candies, Coin Machines, Baffle Games, Pop Corn—and talking pictures."

But, more power to them. Every means of revenue is essential for those who are trying to stay in business, and if these means will help, then they should go to it. Even screen advertising is a welcome form of money these days and many's the larger house that is using the screen to help balance that weekly statement.

We must not lose sight of the fact that while most of the circuit houses are operated under leases a great majority of the independents own their own properties, which in these days means additional worry and trouble. Meeting interest and mortgage payments, taxes, water charges and all those assorted insurance premiums is no laughing matter. But they are a most optimistic crowd and feel that if they can struggle through this season their worst worries are over. To which we add a fervent "Amen." (So say several thousand more of us, too.)

YOUNGSTOWN!

Taking leave of Nat Holt in Akron so that he could double back to Cincinnati and also get up to Fort Wayne, we altered our plans so as to include Youngstown before going into Cleveland. Since, at the best, it must be a quick visit we were quite content to just spend a short time with each of the boys.

First on our list was "Sig" Solomon.

"Sig" has been a loyal Round Tabler for many years and has always been an enthusiastic contributor. From him we gleaned a pretty good picture of the town and its headaches. Solomon is the chap who was sent out here by Publix for two or three weeks and is now in his third year. Which makes spending three months in Philadelphia one night, a tame pun. But he's right on the job and from indications—as well as product—seems to be doing the lion's share of business. Youngstown, like many other Ohio cities, has been pretty hard hit and the theatres are feeling it just the same as all others.

We rather liked the "See It From the Beginning" slugs that Sig, as well as several other Ohio managers, is using to encourage the patrons to get to the theatre before the start of the feature. It's a good idea for the patrons and certainly for the theatre since it affords them the opportunity of getting a better break and turnover. Solomon has made mats of these reverse slugs and they can be used in all sorts of newspaper ads. Maybe if you want one or two of these mats you could prevail upon Sig to send them to you. Try him; a little note may turn the trick for you.

Many Good Showmen Here!

Was glad of the opportunity to meet "Dinty" Moore over at the Warner Theatre. "Dinty" was well represented on our Club pages not so long ago in connection with his specialized form of intimate advertising. Many who read the lowdown on his "Dinty Sez" series thought well enough of it to try it out themselves. That's sufficient recommendation for any one's idea. Moore is only stopping off here on a temporary assignment, so we'll be looking for word of his permanent address soon.

Jack Elliot has taken over the former RKO Palace and dropped the RKO from the signs. . . . A tough battle Jack has on his hands, but he knows showbusiness and he certainly knows Youngstown, so if there's a chance, you'll be hearing of his putting that house over in a big way. . . . He's still plugging the only real vaudeville in the town and giving it a swell break. . . . They ought to support it. . . . We promised Jack that we would try to look in on his son Wallace when we reached Cleveland, but we must tell him now that we did not make it. . . . Next time, though, we won't miss the chance.

Joe Shagrin is operating the Park for Feiber and Shea. We met his brother out on the Coast two years ago and lost sight of him since. But we'll locate him yet. Al Cooper is running the Hipp., and they tell me that he's the same guy who came to New York and started the big N. Y. Hipp. a rolling to some profitable business, so maybe there is something in that name, "Hipp."

S. D. Weinberg is running the 10c Dome and doing a fairly good business with his bargain bills. Jimmy Murray is running John Harris' Strand and those who recall Harris from some years back may also recall that this was his first house. If I'm wrong, blame Sig Solomon.

The Warner Bonus Plan for theatre managers is about the nearest approach to the plan we advanced a few weeks ago as a solution to the low salaries of today and to encourage the men in the various houses to extra creative effort. The cash bonus is always an inducement and by dividing the territory and quotas fairly all managers stand an equal chance of getting some of the bonus money.

In view of the fact that most of the circuits, more than independents, have cut salaries down to the bone, it would be a logical move for them to institute a bonus plan whereby the manager gets a reasonable percentage on that part of the gross above the average receipts of the theatre, or, above the actual overhead of the house. Something of this sort will eventually have to happen unless theatre owners go back to paying salaries in keeping with the work and responsibilities of running a theatre.

CLEVELAND!

Completing one of the quickest stops we made on the entire trip, we pulled out of Youngstown late in the afternoon and reached Cleveland about dinner time. Rather late and tired, so we merely drifted from house to house looking over the business, and after this sketchy inspection we came to the conclusion that an important question was before the world: "Why Was Cleveland?"

They ought to offer some prizes for the best answers. Here is one of those over-seated and over-invested cities if there ever was one. They do the bulk of their business during the afternoon and the deadline seems to be around four o'clock. After that hour downtown becomes almost deserted. Night business is 'way off and far below what it should be for a city of this size. As near as we could judge this condition is caused by two important factors. First: the residential sections are too far removed from easy accessibility to the downtown houses, and second: they have too many outlying houses throughout the entire city and suburbs.

In our opinion, it is going to be a long time before the big theatres in Cleveland cease to be one great big headache to those operating them. Even the legitimate house, running one of the year's greatest box office successes (in every other spot) was playing to a corporal's guard down in the orchestra when we stuck our head in the door.

The Warner Crowd!

Early the next morning we phoned Sid Dannenberg and from the enthusiastic welcome in his voice we decided to make the Warner office our first stop. We did. But we walked into one of those rare (?) conferences that happen no less than sixty-eight times a day, but this one was on the level and as a result of it they expected "20,000 Years in Sing Sing" to pack 'em in when it reached every spot in the territory.

"Hank" Harold ran out of the meeting long enough to say hello and finally the whole shin-dig broke up and we sat 'round the table with Nat Wolf, divisional manager (and this is a man's sized territory), also Frank Phelps, his assistant. Nat Wolf is one of those level headed showmen who has sense enough to face the truth and can see no logical reason for beating around the bush when he has a problem to tackle. His knowledge of the difficulties to be overcome can only leave one feeling that if those difficulties will ever be overcome, Nat will accomplish the feat.

It was most interesting to get his slant on the price cutting going on in so many spots throughout this part of the country and it will be worth while to know that price cutting has been found to be bad just as often as it is claimed to be good. The proof of the pudding is in the eating, and so far as price cutting is concerned Wolf has tried it and found that it was not always the best way out of a bad situation. This slant was important to us because we had been hearing just the contrary in many of the other Ohio towns. Adjusting the prices of theatre tickets to conform slightly to present day economic conditions seems a sensible procedure, but when that price changing reacts directly against the receipts of the theatre then it's time to think three or four times before plunging into such a drastic measure.

Do not lose sight of the fact that while it is a comparatively simple thing to cut prices, the raising of them is a mighty ticklish proposition. So if you are contemplating such a move we can only beg of you that you analyze the possibilities and reactions good and bad, that can come of such a cut and then think it over once more before making a move. BUT, once you have decided that a cut is a good idea, back it up with something resembling a wide-spread campaign and shout it from the housetops.

Lamm Wins a Prize!

While at the Warner office we also killed another bird with the same stone, so to speak, when out floated (?) Julius Lamm, who runs their Uptown Theatre and despite conditions he turned in one of the year's best campaigns recently and walked off with a nice, fat bonus. That's something to crow about these days, and of course the prize money was of minor importance. (Sez who?) Julius is hard at work on future plans and can see no reason why he can't cop one more prize check now being offered. If good showmanship will do it, he'll come through.

Getting back to Dannenberg, we can't pass up the opportunity of expressing ourselves on the impression he made. Here is certainly a keen and wide-awake showman with a wealth of publicity and advertising experience behind him and ability galore. It's no small task looking after the wants of a division as large as this one and spread over so much territory. To do so means keeping in close touch with every house regardless of location and knowing what it is that will do the particular house the most good. He stands by at all times to give the boys a helping hand and lend that oft-needed push to get a good campaign over to better than average results at the b. o.

Sell the Picture First!

One interesting fact was revealed by our visit to this office; they have relegated most of the so-called crazy exploitation and gag stunts to the ash heap for the time being and are concentrating on selling the picture alone. By this we mean that instead of trying to help the picture out with some exploitation gag or merchant tieup, they are putting all their efforts back of the particular picture and depending on the improved quality of the product to bring about the desired results. This is most interesting after the past few years when it seemed that every theatre in the land was trying to outdo each other in giveaways and tieups that had no direct bearing on the picture. As a result it would seem that the public grew accustomed to looking for the giveaway and yet never seemed to respond the way they should as a result of the tieup being engineered.

Now it's back to "Sell the Picture" and we rather like the new trend, or rather, we should call it back to the old trend. Merchandising, in our opinion, ought to be confined to the picture being sold and anything tied to the campaign ought to have some bearing or connection with the picture so that the public never loses sight of that title or cast at any time. This would naturally create much more interest in the picpure than heretofore and gets away from the business of giveaways when all the time we are in the picture business.

Loew and RKO!

On the Loew sector we find that H. M. Addison is in charge of the city houses, with M. A. Malaney looking after the advertising and publicity; J. E. Lykes at the Stillman; J. P. McBride at the Park; Arnold Gates at the Granada; John O. Newkirk at the Alhambra, and Henry Lee assisting Lykes at the Stillman.

Had lunch with Bert Henson, who handles the advertising and publicity for the local RKO houses but could not find the time to see Wallace Elliott or Frank Hines of the Palace and Hippodrome. Tried to call Deffenbaugh, the RKO artist, but he was out, so those whom we missed will have to be placed at the top of our visiting list the next time we reach Cleveland.

Henson, according to some of the whispers we heard around Cleveland, is facing a sort of peculiar situation, but all of our questions would not move him to say anything more than that all the RKO boys in this city are battling in a solid line and doing their utmost to help put the houses over. For which we recommend Bert to the Diplomatic Hall of Fame.

Incidentally, Bert let us have some material to look over on our way home and perhaps we'll be able to show some to you soon.

As We Pictured Him!

Having published many a fine article about J. E. Lykes, we were naturally glad of the opportunity of spending a little extra time with this smart young showman. Lykes is typical of the next group of theatre executives who will be directing the destinies of this business. He is not the noisy or flashy type by any means, rather the quiet manager whose theatre reflects the neatness and smartness of his methods. This was another time that we had found our mental picture mightw close to the man himself. Despite the very short time left between this last minute visit and train time, we did enjoy the visit very much. Ditto for making the personal acquaintance of Lee, whom we last discussed on our Club pages some time ago while he was at the Alhambra.

The introduction of special foreign picture shows, to follow the lsat showing of the regular feature on the last day of the run, seems to be gaining momentum and ought to be productive of some much needed extra money. The plan—which will be set forth in detail in an early issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD—has been tried in many spots and proven successful in more than one way.

The method of presentation of these foreign pictures varies according to the particular situation, but it is applicable everywhere and considering the small cost generally involved, ought to lift many a theatre out of the red and into the black. This may sound far-fetched, but from the viewpoint of one who has had an opportunity to observe, at first hand, the way this works you may be sure that it will bear investigation.

The Press Book Again!

Few topics have been the subject of discussion or debate as frequently as the poor, harrassed press book. Personally, we did not want to make too much of an issue of it, because we have never been successful in finding a single home office executive who would honestly care to hear anything about press books.

The general consensus of opinion regarding press books seems to be that if the companies turning them out would confine themselves to cast, credit, footage, ad suggestions, mats and a few pointers about the picture, it would more than suffice for the use of the men in the field. The exploitation appears to be not alone impracticable, but they hardly paid any attention to it.

Exploitation suggestions as printed in the greater majority of press books are so obviously ground out like sausages that the respect for such suggestions is not on the level with a well developed worm. On the other hand, the ad suggestions and mats are of vital importance since the ad artist who knows his business will generally use a scene or ad mat in some part of a good ad. The mats are almost indispensable for the manager who must make up his own ads without the assistance of an ad artist.

A revision in press book styles is due and we hope some smart company will take heed of the call from the field and be guided accordingly. We would cheerfully discuss the many reactions we have had in our travels and correspondence with any press book editor sufficiently interested or with enough nerve to dare to change the old order.

Billposting Again!

With the many other changes taking place we noted with much satisfaction that billposting is again coming back into something resembling its own. We are, and always have been, great believers in outdoor advertising when sensibly used. Here in Ohio we find that many of the circuits feel that newspaper circulation has been falling off and to offset this condition are trying out window cards and billposting as a means of reaching some percentage of those many theatre-goers formerly reached solely thru the medium of newspaper advertising.

Showmen in other parts of the country would do well to give this slant real serious consideration, because it may go a long ways towards reviving interest in the theatre and getting your message to the greatest number of people, especially those living in places far removed from the theatre.

Double Features Not Strong!

The double feature evil has been carefully handled in this territory and as a result the wholesale butchering of shows with straight double feature bills has been avoided. Those few subsequent runs who are using double bills are being held far behind the first runs. The first runs themselves are staying away from it entirely. Knowing what double featuring has done to murder business in the New York metropolitan area, we rejoiced at finding the opposite out here. Stay away from this evil, boys, or it will eat you alive in many different ways. Double featuring brings on a bad shortage of product, gives the patrons an overdose of entertainment, enough, as a matter of fact, to satisfy them for a week or longer. Why should they be anxious to come back for your next show?

Price Adjustment!

This has been discussed previously in the series and in a more direct way, yet it is an important matter and one worthy of everyone's attention. We do not advocate a price war, neither do we say that every situation in the country should reduce their admissions; but we do say that you should take stock of conditions in your community, gauge your operating costs, figure out the possibilities of more people coming to your theatre at a reduced rate, before you jump to conclusions. There are many arguments for and against reducing prices. Nat Wolf is quoted elsewhere; from our own experiences we have seen two theatres in two different localities reduce their prices; one is now doing a tremendous business and making real profits while the other is playing to the same number of people as before they reduced their admissions and as a result gross less than ever.

But the time has passed when the average community theatre can expect to continue to get thirty-five to fifty cents for a movie show. You'll find spots here and there getting away with it, but that is all they are really doing—just getting away with it. Price your admissions to match local conditions; some theatres are fortunate enough to be located in communities well able to afford a high admission, but most of them are in spots where the pocketbook is beginning to look thin and anemic.

In Conclusion!

In closing this chronicle of our extremely enjoyable visit to the Ohio territory we must again express our great appreciation to Nat Holt for the many courtesies extended and to every one of the RKO boys, as well as all the others, too, who made our visit so pleasant. To find MOTION PICTURE HERALD in practically every theatre throughout the entire area covered was another source for rejoicing. Verily, a trade journal so well read, so well thought of and so much sought should really be a boon to the industry. One book containing everything that any modern showman could want to find in the normal course of his day's work.

Until our next voyage afield we bid you all au revoir. ''CHICK''

SCENARIO WRITING GAG IN NEWSPAPER GETS MEAKIN SPACE

A nice piece of publicity in a leading Washington (D. C.) newspaper was recently grabbed off by Hardie Meakin, manager of the RKO Keith's Theatre, by use of a scenario-writing gag.

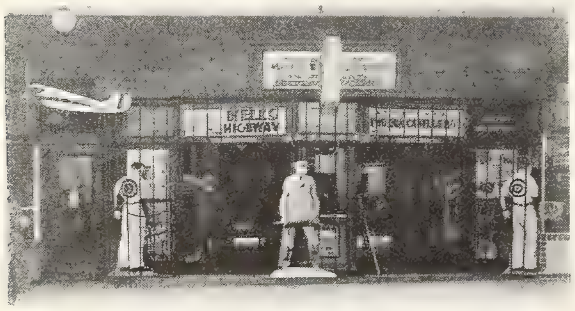
On the amusement pages of several issues we have at hand appeared deep, two-column scene cuts from "Bitter Tea of General Yen," captioned with a scene number and a sub-title briefly describing the episode illustrated. A story alongside queried readers on their ability to write scenarios, stating that the "Washington Herald" was the first newspaper in America to offer readers an opportunity to obtain information in regard to this type of writing. They were further asked how they would write the published scene for Director Capra, but were told that no prizes were offered and not to send in answers; that it was merely the intention to familiarize those interested with the technique of scenario writing. Subsequent issues carried excerpts from the scenario to illustrate the style.

Nice work, Hardie, and we're sure some of your fellow Club members will be able to sell their friends on newspapers the same idea. As you, they're interested in getting a good break on the amusement page; the fans are anxious to learn how to write scenarios, and the newspaper is always ready to obtain additional reader interest. A perfect setting!

PRISON ATMOSPHERE FIGURED IN FRONT MADE BY GEO. ELLIS

Prison atmosphere figured strongly in a front and ballyhoo used by George S. Ellis, manager of the Penn Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., to exploit "Hell's Highway."

In addition to the jail-like effect across the entire front entrance, convict and guard cutouts behind the bars at either side and in front of the box office. A real gun was placed in the hands of the guard figure. Official convict suits were promoted from a nearby penitentiary and five boys were engaged by Ellis to parade up and down the city streets. Handcuffs and leg manacles lent further realism to the bally.



A stunt used in connection with the bally, which caused a mild sensation in downtown Uniontown, was pulled with permission of the local Chief of Police. Ellis arranged with his "convicts" to stage a "break" while on parade and for the guard to fire his gun in the air, all of which focussed much attention on the bally.

News from George Ellis and his Penn Theatre has been missing for some little time from Club pages, but like many another man these days, George has been busily engaged with pursuit of his duties. Now that he is again on the active list we'll be looking for additional stunts to pass along.

WHAT THIS BUSINESS NEEDS IS MORE WAUGH, SAYS MEMPHIS SCRIBE

A deep two-column ad in an evening newspaper was taken by Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., to announce a 10 o'clock preview on "20 Years in Sing Sing." Using the personal endorsement angle, the Old Maestro told 'em that the picture had more entertainment than any one had ever seen in one film; that he had weighed its merit against "Fugitive" and "Silver Dollar" and other outstanding Warner pictures and was fully convinced that it was an epic of its kind. Moreover, he told 'em his verdict was an honest one.

All of which is quite characteristic of Maestro Waugh, alias Old Doctor Penetro, Medicine Man of Memphis. Now we come to the portion of this little article which treats upon traits peculiar to the Chinese. Yes, Howard, "The Chinese Are Clever," according to a paragraph we came across in Harry Martin's column "Footlights and Flickers" in the "Appeal." For the benefit and enlightment of your fellow Round Tablers, let us quote Mr. Martin:

> "Howard Waugh, the Old Maestro of Main Street, gets a full-page write-up in the Motion Picture Herald on the strength of his brilliant campaign for 'I'm a Fugitive from a Chain Gang.' Just now the Warner manager is engineering another drive on '20 Years in Sing Sing.' What showbusiness needs today is a few more showmen with the ingenuity and originality of this chap Waugh."

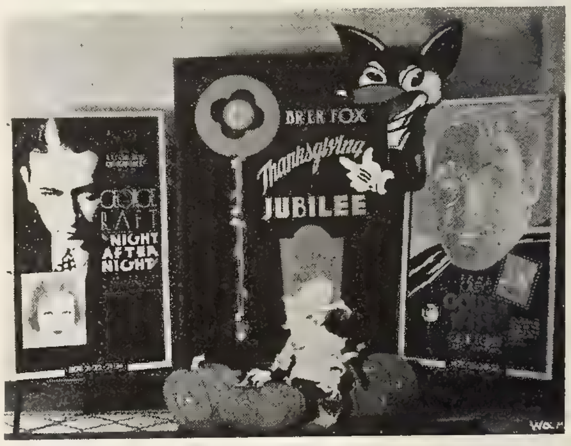
So are the Chinese clever or are they clever? We'll leave it to Howard's brother conspirators. We have a hunch that for "ways that are" so and so and so and so, they can't be beaten, nor even tied.

SCHLICTER AND EARL NELSON DOING GOOD WORK FOR FOX-TOPEKA

We are indebted to Lawrence Breuninger, city manager of Fox-Topeka Theatres, with headquarters at the Jayhawk, Topeka, Kan., for the accompanying photo showing a sample of art work being turned out by H. E. Schlicter and Earl Nelson, in charge of Fox-Topeka's art department.

This particular display was made in conjunction with the "Br'er Fox Thanksgiving Jubilee" and two forthcoming attractions, "Night After Night" and "Golden West." Note the appropriate center piece, flanked by the attractive likenesses of George Raft and George O'Brien. "Br'er Fox" is the advertising symbol used by Fox-Tokepa and other Fox houses out in the Midland and Midwest divisions.



Thanks to Breuninger for his contribution to the Club and we'll be mighty glad to receive further evidence of the excellent work being turned out by Nelson and Schlicter; also news of what else is taking place in showbusiness in Fox-Topeka houses.

FRANK SARGENT HELD PARADE IN BAYSHORE TO SELL A DUAL BILL

Opening "Movie Crazy" in conjunction with a new serial, "The Last Frontier," Frank Sargent, manager of the Bay Shore Theatre, Bay Shore, L. I., gave all the good clam diggers down along the South Shore something to look at in the way of exploitation.

One week prior to opening his lobby display consisted of burgees, wagon cutouts on serial, a large six-sheet cutout, an Indian tepee and trimmings of corn-stalks and pumpkins, the latter also answering for Thanksgiving material. He also tied in with one of the largest bakeries operating on the Island for distribution of 5,000 Harold Lloyd heralds, and spotted over 100 one-sheets about town and arranged for display of a dozen tire covers on autos.

Three days prior to playdate he had a street bally of an Indian, using same the first day around the local school; the second day, in auto with bass drum and banners, and two days before opening staged a street parade consisting of nine cars (see photo). Leading the parade was a man dressed like Lloyd, followed by a white Austin car. The next car in line carried a man, to all appearances taking moving pictures of Lloyd being chased by the Austin. The following cars were decorated with burgees, side and rear tire covers. The Indian stood up in the last car, which was appropriately bannered for the occasion. Each car contained several attractive young ladies and one carried a trumpeter. Special ads were carried in the local paper on the serial, in consideration of which the movie reviewers stressed special appeal to the kiddies.

Sargent's bally created quite a sensation down in Bayshore and materially helped to bring about highly satisfactory business during the engagement. The only cost to theatre was for wages to the "Indian" for two days, burgees, tire covers and newspaper space. House employees cheerfully contributed their services in the staging of the parade. Good work, Frank, and we'll be looking for more information on what you're doing. We're sorry that photo wasn't a little sharper, but trust your fellow Club members will be able to get a slant on the parade.

PROOF THAT A CO-OP CAN BE PROMOTED IN BIG NEW YORK DAILY

If anyone thinks a full page cooperative ad can't be promoted in one of the big New York City dailies, we can refer them to a recent issue of the "News," wherein appeared the result of a tie-up engineered by the well known Martin Starr, advertising expert, musical show impressario and whatnot in showbusiness, on occasion of Boots Mallory's appearance in "Handle With Care" at the Seventh Avenue Roxy.

As a matter of fact the page on "Handle With Care" was an offshoot of a page prepared for "Walking Down Broadway," a corking title for a co-op deal with any merchant awake to the value of such advertising, but, unfortunately, a picture which was relegated to the shelf. Not to be outdone on account of this, Starr's resourcefulness asserted itself, the campaign was changed around and the page secured in connection with a retail shoe dealer's ad for the substituted picture.

The page broke during the week that Radio City made its bid for public favor and, according to word from Mark Luescher, in charge of advertising at the old Roxy, was particularly timely in view of a reduced budget in effect at the big house during recent months.

So there you are, fellows; the above shows that a full page of generous mention for theatre and current attraction can be secured in a newspaper which boasts a circulation of 1,425,000, to say nothing of another three-quarters of a page in the "Journal," which has a circulation of 632,559. Congratulations to Starr.

DO YOU WANT TO CUT COSTS? USE THESE THEATRE ECONOMIES!

Smart Supervision Can Result in Many Important Savings on Your Theatre's Overhead; Use Good Common Sense!

Use This Article as a Basis for Starting an Operating Economy Drive in a Strong Effort to Cut Your Expenses!

by IRA GLUCKSMAN

WHEN a theatre hangs on the border line between black and red, there are only two courses the management can take to show a profit:

1. Increase grosses.
2. Cut expenses.

This article proposes to give in condensed form some of the widely applicable methods used by theatre managers in applying the second part of the procedure.

Most of the suggestions are not intended to lop off big slabs of expense individually. They consist of minor items—hidden wastes, easily overlooked, small in themselves, big as a group. In the aggregate they can total startling sums. Applied at your theatre, they may mean the difference between profit and loss for 1933.

Economies of this nature fall into two groups—those which can be made only once and those which can be continuous, week after week, month after month, year after year. Depression has taught showmen from the big chain operators down to the owner-manager of the 200-seater a great deal about conserving the seepage in operating costs.

Economies which can be made only once are the result of resourcefulness and ingenuity. Take the case of a Canadian exhibitor who last year needed a new sill for his box-office.

The sill he had was wooden and splintery with long use. He decided a marble replacement was needed. But the cheapest price he could get was $25.

Then he discovered that his fireman had once been a stonecutter in a cemetery. This gave him an idea. Visiting the local monument works, he was able to buy for $3 and two passes a gravestone that somebody had neglected to call for years ago.

The fireman cut the sill out of this stone, a carpenter did the woodwork for a few passes, and the theatre has enough marble left to install new sills for the next thousand years.

Twenty-one bucks in the "kick" for this ingenuity! A man who uses his head that way once will do it again. Over a stretch of time he is going to save a lot of expense.

But savings of this nature are not the ones where the biggest economies for the year can be made. The ones that can be put to work continuously are the first to go after. Here are some of them:

Water

1. Stop all leaks in water pipes, faucets, lavatories, etc. After one manager in a Scranton theatre had a water pipe leak eliminated, his water bill dropped from $105 to $45 a month.

2. If your theatre has drinking water fountains that run constantly, convert these into the type that must be turned on when the patron wants a drink. A Chicago theatre that did this saved 6,000 cubic feet of water the first day.

Cleaning

1. Supervise issuance of supplies and eliminate all waste. After a while the cleaning staff will get in the habit of using minimum quantities, and will require only periodic supervision.

2. If dust cloths are laundered, they can be used over and over. This eliminates buying new dust cloths.

3. Don't let the cleaning staff use the house lights. Cleaning lights require much less current.

Heating

1. Check up on how long it normally takes to heat the house. One exhibitor had been in the habit of getting his fires started at 9 A. M. An inquiry showed that the house normally required only an hour to heat up and that the fires could be started three hours later. Three hours a day difference means a lot of fuel.

Art Materials

1. Keep files of all star head mats, posters, star name lettering for applique, etc. These can be used for future pictures featuring the same players. They are also valuable in preventing the theatre from being caught short in case of a sudden booking change.

2. If beaverboard is recovered with an ingrain wall paper, it can be used over and over indefinitely. The wall paper is applied to the board with dry bill poster paste. It will take any paint except oils and actually saves on paint, too, because the paper absorbs much less paint than washed beaverboard.

3. Save scraps of beaverboard. These can be used for applique lettering, arrows, strips, etc.

4. If you operate a first-run and a second-run theatre within easy transportation distance of one another, it pays to have the frames in the second-run house standard with those in the first-run house. Then posters used first-run can be repeated second-run.

5. Save everything built for the stage. One theatre in the South conserves hundreds of dollars annually by repainting and reusing sets that alternate between stage and lobby display.

*Figures Tell the Tale

	Annual Saving
Water pipe leaks stopped ($8 per month)	$ 72.00
Dust cloths laundered and reused ($1 per month)	12.00
Heating regulated ($55 per month, 8 months average)	440.00

Uniforms repair and pressing bill cut in half	196.00
Odd jobs done by staff or promoted, would have cost	200.00
	$2,769.20

 Note. — These figures are ultra-conservative. Any fair-sized house operating on a grind policy, which has not put these economies into effect, can probably do much better.*

Communication

1. Mail going to the same destination can often be grouped, saving on stamps and stationery.

2. Use ordinary mail by attending to matters immediately. Delay necessitates use of special delivery, telephone, airmail or telegraph. This costs money.

3. If the telegraph is necessary, know which type of telegram will carry the message cheapest. For example, a telegram sent to the home office or an exchange at seven o'clock in the evening is unnecessary. A night letter, which is much cheaper, will arrive early the next morning. The telegram would be read no sooner.

Advertising

1. No-cost tie-ups will often eliminate charges for heralds, throwaways, etc.

2. Cleverness and simplicity in ads will often eliminate extra composing room charges.

3. If press sheet mats are effective, why not use them instead of special local engravings and extra composing room work?

4. Investigate all advertising and eliminate any outdoor, posting, sniping, delivery, window cards, or newspaper advertising that is not definitely earning its way.

Electric Current

1. Use smallest wattage bulbs possible all over the house, inside and outside.

2. If you have a chaser on the upright sign, it may be possible to eliminate its use, or to cut its use to peak hours only. One theatre sliced its bill $25 a month this way.

3. Notice where city street lights are located in relation to exit doors. One manager found that the street light was right at his exit doors and enabled him to cut his exit door bulbs from 75's to 25's without any one noticing the difference.

CUTTING THE OVERHEAD!

4. Lighting of the vertical (upright) sign can often be eliminated entirely or limited to peak hours, especially in summer when the sun sets late, particularly in communities having daylight saving.

5. Appoint each member of the staff a committee of one to see that all unused lights are turned off.

6. Get the electric company to recheck the house meters. One exhibitor in Arizona received a check for almost $40 when the power company checked his meters and found the theatre was being overcharged.

7. Set a lighting schedule for the house and get every employee to know it by heart. This prevents haphazard operation of switches and can save hundreds of dollars a year.

As a sample of what drastic reductions can be made, here's how one house cut its cost for current 25 per cent: Elimination of dome lights; 25-watt bulbs instead of 50's in box lights; 10-watt bulbs instead of 25's in exit lights; 25-watt bulbs instead of 200's in mural lights; all house lights cut in half; one light eliminated in each wall bracket; traveler eliminated in vertical sign; installation of a definite schedule for light operation.

Bulbs

1. Use only those bulbs made for voltage on power lines in your house. The average life of a bulb is 1,000 hours. Experiments have shown that when a 110-volt bulb is used on a 115-volt circuit, its life is decreased 45 per cent. This means that for every 110 110-volt bulbs used on a 115-volt circuit, 145 110-volt bulbs will have to be used. This means, in dollars and cents, a 45 per cent increase in bulb costs.

Furthermore, if 110-volt bulbs are used on 120-volt circuits, the increase in unnecessary cost is even worse. The increase in bulb mortality will then be 69 per cent with 69 per cent increase in bulb costs.

A further advantage of using bulbs of correct voltage is a gain in candle power.

2. Another gain in candle power can be made if bulbs are kept clean and their reflectors kept bright.

3. If you contemplate increasing the wattage on a circuit, make sure there will be no overload. If the wattage of bulbs used is greater than the total capacity of the circuit, this circuit will become a fire hazard and all current registered by the meter will not be consumed. This is a decided waste of current.

Screen

When not in use, keep the screen covered, especially during cleaning of stage or auditorium. If stage drapes, movable masking pieces, border lights, etc., are hung in such a way as to touch the screen, they will mark its surface and mar the picture.

Equipment

1. Keep machinery, especially moving parts, well oiled. Improper lubrication causes wear and breakdowns. This costs money.

2. Keep machinery clean. Dust from cement floors and carbon ash are extremely abrasive. Wipe excess oil away.

3. Inspect equipment regularly. Replace worn parts in time to eliminate breakdowns that may injure additional equipment.

4. Have seats inspected regularly and immediately fix loose screws or upholstery tacks. This will eliminate torn clothing that theatres sometimes have to pay for. A good plan is to assign each member of the staff to a specified section of the theatre, and make him responsible for the seats in his section.

Transportation

1. Investigate the cheapest method of film and trailer transportation. One theatre found that the difference between motor line and express was $10 per week. This is over $500 a year on one item, or the equivalent of more than 2,000 25-cent admissions or 5,000 10-cent kid matinee admissions.

2. Is there property in town that's being filled? One exhibitor who used to pay to have his ashes hauled away, found that the contractor filling up a piece of land was glad to take the ashes. Another exhibitor used ashes to fill up holes made by melting snow and rain outside his exit doors.

Miscellaneous

1. Look through old supplies in storerooms and see if there is anything that can be used. One manager who did this a few months ago discovered a lot of old-style carbon filament bulbs which, while not usable in fixtures where the public could see them, could be spotted around in indirect lighting fixtures. There's hardly a theatre which couldn't salvage something rotting in its storerooms.

2. Check all extra merchandising units, such as candy machines, frequently. Make sure quantities are sufficient. Eliminate types of merchandise which do not sell satisfactorily.

3. Typewriters, adding machines, mimeograph machines, etc., needed only temporarily, can often be promoted for a few passes instead of rented for cash. Running off mimeographed heralds in the lobby with a sign giving the dealer's name has obtained a mimeograph machine for many exhibitors temporarily needing one.

In this, the second contribution from Ira Glucksman, we were fortunate enough to secure an article of timely and major importance. It is all very well for everybody in the industry to shout "Economize," but very few have come forward with real constructive suggestions as how to put the advice into actuality.

Here is the same advice, given in a language we all understand and backed up with tangible, concrete ideas so that you can apply them to your own patricular operation.

Mr. Glucksman has had many years of practical experience in theatre operation and circuit house organ publication work to equip him with the knowledge essential to one trying to help his brother showmen to realize greater savings and, as a direct result, profits from theatres now just about bordering on the line between red and black.

4. Scratch pads, memo paper, and second sheets can be obtained from the theatre printer without charge. The printer has a lot of this paper around, cut off larger sheets used for odd-size jobs.

5. Passes can often do the work of cash. A Texas exhibitor gets his film taken to the depot by a taxi driver for two guest tickets a week. Another manager in the same state has issued a season pass to the city engineer and in return that worthy gentleman repairs motors and other equipment and does any necessary wiring free.

6. Impress on the staff necessity for caring for uniforms to eliminate as many pressing and cleaning charges as possible.

7. Sometimes when a rent reduction or some other similar reduction cannot be made, a compromise can be effected. Witness the case of a southern exhibitor who induced his landlord to buy $30 worth of tickets monthly and distribute them to people known not to be patrons of the theatre.

Cooperation of Staff

It is a good idea to get the staff together now and then and remind them of the need for economy around the theatre. Tell them that especially in these times their cooperation is necessary to keep operating and maintenance costs down to a minimum. Explain that their jobs depend upon the showing of the theatre. Ask them to boost grosses and economize in every way they can. Often they will enthusiastically do odd jobs of repairing and painting, if asked in the right way.

Caution

The old saw about penny wise, pound foolish applies to theatre economies. Before any apparent economy is effected, thought should be given to it, and, if necessary, investigation made.

The exhibitor who had a small house and saved about 50 cents a month by diluting handsoap to the point where it was almost useless lost out. Antagonizing two patrons a month by giving them soap of that character more than lost the half dollar he thought he was saving.

Or the manager who read that a certain type of screen could be cleaned by a certain process more cheaply, and then ruined his screen, which was of a different kind entirely, couldn't show a saving on that "economy."

Or the showman who cut out $10 worth of heralds weekly with a consequent reduction of $50 in grosses directly traceable to this expense reduction was not on the right economy trail.

An economy is an economy only when it cuts down operating costs without incurring a greater loss in revenue or the spoilage of valuable equipment.

But there may be plenty of real economies to be found around your theatre. Some suggested in this article apply; others might possibly be suggested by them.

Start your economy hunt and enjoy watching the cost of doing business take a nose dive!

NEW JERSEY GO-GETTERS!

by AL ZIMBALIST

Well, it's time some one started to recognize the show-businessmen of New Jersey . . . and what could be a more appropriate medium than this corner of the Round Table! As far as the writer is concerned, the Jersey showmen outshine all others in aggressiveness, ability, vision and showmanship . . . for you see, mah bread an' jam comes from Jersey. However you like, you can dispute the foregoing facts, for this, according to Maestro Lewis is an open forum.

A talk with (vas you dere, too, Sharlie?) Bechtoldt of the beautiful Sanford Theatre in Irvington revealed that in most cases, giveaways like turkeys, geese and foodstuffs, prove more of an incentive than jewelry and such tie-ups. As an example, Charlie claims, and we believe he's right, that his business jumped 'way up when he had the turkey give-away—and N. S. G. when the jewelry was given away . . . this is being put on record so that you can guide yourselves accordingly. . . .

George Behr had a unique display in the window of a store adjoining his theatre . . . on the Fischer toy give-away. . . . Nat Mutnik is another who exercised a little effort in selling the Fischer give-away . . . and Sam Mutterpearl, of the checkered coat (he'll tell you its class—who knows these days) took a lot of time and effort . . . and if you'll take our word for it . . . the Fischer give-away was really one of the best we've seen . . . also, not forgetting the Weshner Brothers . . . and this time we believe that Ben cops the honors for his display . . . everything was neatly arranged on a specially erected platform . . . surrounded by beautiful spotlights . . . neat trimmings and an attractive lobby card. . . .

Here's a hand for Jack Stein who really sold Jimmy Shearer's show . . . and a fistful to Tony Williams for grabbing all the newspaper space on the show. . . . Joe Lefkowitz of the Regent-Paterson is selling his show via a de luxe manner . . . he's another of those "Gimme newspaper space—" fellows . . . but Joe does more than ask for it—he receives!!!!! In other words, he can take it!!!! How many of you other fellows can give it—and get it????

Bobby Clark, of the Montclair Clark's, is a very fast little worker . . . nothing secretive about his shows . . . everybody knows where his theatre is at, what's playing, etc. . . . Al Barber raided the meadows recently to give more of a Christmas effect to his theatre front!!!! Hail Milt Brenner for his speedy activities . . . just got to the Hawthorne-Newark and do the people up there know about his theatre, How!!!

Let's all hope that Mickey Kippel, assistant to Larry Conley, recuperates sooner than that. . . . He was dangerously ill with pneumonia. . . . But thank God he is quickly recovering. . . . Why don't some of you send him letters or something to cheer him up!!!!! Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, is the address!!

A great big hand to Clarence Scott, of Clem Murphy's staff for the fine intelligent way he goes about his duties. . . . And one of the most courteous porters we have met yet!!!!!

Andy Goldberg is doing more than twiddling his thumbs up at the Regent-Elizabeth . . . a bouquet to Dave Beehler of the Ritz, Elizabeth for the way in which he sold his New Year's show in the lobby. . . . A praise tipped needle to Charlie Bechtoldt for his display on the Fischer give-away . . . and one to Tony Williams who took extra pains to sell it. . . .

A couple of bouquets to Frank Holler of the Roosevelt-Union City for his fine attractive lobby and excellent outside work on promoting his programs!! A bouquet to his wife for presenting him with a fine, sturdy youngster who is the spittin' image of Pop Heller. . . . Congratulations!!!!! See you again soon.

PAUL BINSTOCK MADE THIS FINE DISPLAY FOR A DOLLAR-FIVE

The display pictured in the accompanying photo and made for "Goona Goona" by Paul Binstock, manager of the Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., cost just $1.05, which represented expense attached to purchase of a six-sheet and a one-sheet. The entire background of native atmosphere, trees, etc., was painted in on compo-board. The dragon's eyes and mouth were constructed in a shadow box with flasher button, the eyes covered with green and mouth with red crepe paper.

A WEIRD MELODRAMA
GOONA-GOONA
LOVE POWDER

This display caused a lot of comment and made patrons stop and look; so what more can anyone ask for a dollar-five? That's keeping expenses down, Paul. Let's hear more about your work. Incidentally, we're glad to welcome your assistant, George Stoves, as a new Round Tabler, and will watch his career with interest. With your able coaching it probably won't be long before he'll be stepping up another notch.

Kuehn At Bayonne

Rudolph A. Kuehn, for the past year and a half manager of the Capitol and State Theatres in Union City, N. J., recently succeeded Tony Williams as manager of the DeWitt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J. Incidentally, his transfer was the occasion for a good-sized story and photo in the news section of a Bayonne newspaper. Williams, it will be recalled, is now district manager for Warner houses in Hudson County.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

RADIO VS. SCREEN

A RIPPLE of agitated concern over competition from the radio now sweeps a new wrinkle into the troubled brow of the motion picture industry. Like most all the other agitations, it is a subject of unnecessary concern, and at most reflects a decidedly transient phase of the constantly changing face of the amusement situation.

It is true enough that a great many persons are staying at home, or sitting in hotel lobbies listening to the radio, spending hours that might be spent in the motion picture theatre.

"Spending" is the important word in that paragraph. The hours are all that they are spending. It appears more than probable that a radio entertainment costing nothing seems, just now, a better bargain to a considerable fraction of the population than a motion picture show costing something. It is not entirely ironic to observe, too, that a radio entertainment which costs nothing comes about as close to being worth its price as anything on the market today. A public with the price in its pants will not stay away from the theatre long.

There is an ample background of experience in the early history of radio. Through its novelty life it did probably hold quite a few customers from the box office. Bridge and the jig-saw puzzle are today likely to be keeping more actual dimes away from the box office than all of radio, and golf is no help.

The radio as entertainment has not suddenly got better. It has as entertainment stood distinctly still for a long period. It is the surrounding situation, more especially the purchasing power and the purchasing mood, that has changed.

The debate now going on about what is to be done about it, how the motion picture is to meet the competition of the radio or to relate itself to it, will arrive at no conclusions. There is in fact nothing more to be done about it all than there is to be done about the weather.

The relations between the arts and industries inevitably adjust themselves, and forces of inertia far beyond the powers of groups, bosses and programs. It may be remarked, for instance, that once upon a time the masters of the stage were going to do things about the motion picture. As late as 1914 the brave Mr. William A. Brady, discussing the movies, said: "Now we've got them on the run." Mr. Daniel Frohman, quoted in these pages recently, remembers when the stage saw the bicycle as a great menace.

Except in the most transient manner no one ever really does anything about anything. The destiny of the motion picture is clear enough and the pattern of its continued development obvious. The motion picture is going on and on, absorbing and knitting into its fabric all that invention and technology can bring to its service. The rise of the thing which the motion picture is—the business of recreating events—began long before the screen was born, began with the birth of drama and has now become in fact the theatre of today. In terms of evolution the speaking stage is archaic, a fossil remnant, of relatively no importance and destined to fade into less.

Radio as a serious and long continued rival of the screen is quite as unthinkable as a serious revival of the silent screen.

The public with money to spend will go spending it wherever the lure leads. It always has and always will. People are no more likely to stay home and listen to the radio when they have the price of a show and "going places" than the youngsters are to stay home and dance to phonograph records.

Star value, the box office value of personality, grows out of being attractively and favorably known to the masses. All of the arts are avenues to fame. But the quality of the fame attained is identical. In the main the screen from the beginning has found that it made bigger and better star value for itself than could be had from other media, but all the other media from stage to printed page to circus and prize ring have contributed star values now and then to the screen. Now and then radio may contribute, too, but nothing in the parallel histories of the radio and screen thus far indicates any important interrelation.

Radio is really nothing to worry about for long, unless you want to worry about mah jong, ping pong and Joe Miller's jokebook.

THE FILM CROP

MR. HENRY FORD, who is talking decentralization for motor manufacture these days, envisions a time when farmer-mechanics will build cars part of the time and plow the rest of the time. He says that a great deal of the motor car can be "grown on the farm." Which reminds us that the motion picture with its cotton cellulose base and its calf gelatine emulsion is really a farm product. It could do with more corn fed customers.

BOUND WHERE?

IN a few years more we shall be seeing what may be the result of the impact of growing Manhattan and its theatre zone against the southern boundary of Central Park. The march of amusement houses has been steadily north since the colonial days. When the motion picture was born, Fourteenth street was a great rialto, giving way presently to Twenty-third street and shortly to the tidal movement up Broadway, widening out in Forty-second street and variously across the upper Forties. Now for the moment Radio City seems to peg the movement. But one day the trend will have to decide between East and West. Now it looks like East will win.

RADIO PRESENTS A NEW CHALLENGE TO THEATRES

Exhibitors Meet Growing Competition by Cutting In Broadcasts, Signing Stars of Air and Their Motion Pictures

Renew Protests Against Permitting Players To Go On Air; Broadcasting Companies Raise No Legal Objection

Radio broadcasting is a serious competitor of the motion picture screen for the first time since radio's first force as novelty entertainment expended itself some ten years ago. Economic conditions and unemployment are the basic influencing factors said to be keeping millions of prospective theatregoers at home nightly listening to commercial broadcasts by a score of air headliners.

Radio audiences are growing daily; theatre attendance reacts accordingly, and, while authorities in both fields are unable to estimate definitely to what extent radio is making inroads on box-office receipts, exhibitors almost everywhere are complaining that the competition is serious, if not menacing. Some say 40 per cent of the subnormal condition of grosses is attributable to radio's newly developed magnetism.

A decade ago the novelty of radio made some inroads on theatre receipts. There was really no prolonged influence on theatre business until the Amos 'n' Andy series, and after a few months that died away. Now a new and bigger struggle is underway. Radio and theatres are squaring off. Exhibitors are facing a real challenge, which, it appears, many will meet by bringing headline broadcasts into their theatres as a part of regular evening programs. Experiments already have proved successful, although exhibitors who have not tried the plan declare against it.

Interrupt Programs

The theatre presentation idea of radio programs is scarcely new. As far back as at the peak of Amos 'n' Andy's reign of popularity, hundreds of exhibitors installed radios on their stages or hooked them up to their loudspeaker horns. They then advertised, in heralds and out front, that the air feature would be broadcast during the regular performance.

Currently, the theatre radio idea has struck only a few points, where exhibitors have connected a receiver with their sound amplification system and arranged to interrupt their programs accordingly. Only the Eddie Cantor, Jack Paul and Ed Wynn types of broadcast are picked up.

In other localities, theatre owners are resurrecting old pictures which star present day radio headliners. Heavy billing is made on the radio phase and the exhibitors report increased business. Radio headliners as stage attractions in motion picture houses are also being used, while considerably more attention is being paid to exploiting the presence of radios in lobbies or theatre lounges for entertaining overflow crowds.

The legality of drafting sound amplification systems for presenting radio programs in theatres is clear. Officials of Electrical Research Products last week concluded a study of the question and their findings indicate that "there is no reason why the corporation should place broadcasting restrictions on any of its 6,000 or more installations in the United States."

An executive of RCA Photophone said, "We cannot place such restrictions on any of our equipments."

There is, however, likelihood of difficulty with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. If the movement grows, the society is expected to step in and demand royalty payments from theatres thus using the music of members. Theatre presentation of comedy or dramatic programs from the air holds no particular interest for the ASCAP. E. C. Mills, general manager, said: "If theatre owners play ball with us and have our legal permission to re-broadcast our musical numbers, there will be no difficulties. Eddie Cantor sings many of our songs, and while we license the broadcasters to use our numbers for commercial purposes, no such right for theatres is thereby granted. If the movement gets beyond our control, it may result in a great deal of unpleasantness for the exhibitor."

The license issued by the American Society says, in part:

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing Licensee (the broadcasting company) to grant to others any right to reproduce or to perform publicly for profit by any means, method or process whatsoever, any of the musical compositions coming within the purview of the within license performed pursuant hitherto, or as authorizing any receiver of any such broadcast rendition to publicly perform or reproduce the same for profit by any means, method or process whatsoever."

Presentation in theatres, therefore, being for profit, would be considered a violation.

Erpi's service engineers, during regular inspection trips, have in the past reported to officials all radio hook-ins to Western Electric's amplification system. The corporation subsequently notified the exhibitor that it would not be responsible for a breakdown of the sound system, or interference with service, as a result.

Deny Aiding Movement

National Broadcasting Company and Columbia Broadcasting deny that they are in any way behind the theatre presentation trend. NBC, in fact, is seeking to determine to what extent the idea is being used. It appears that the corporation's interest might be in connection with increased charges to the advertisers whose programs are being picked up for the edification of thousands in theatres. Advertisers over the air usually pay on the basis of "circulation"; or drawing power of the hour, network, stars used and entertainment value.

Columbia officials are reported as having no thought as to the theatre practice but one executive in New York said, "If this is so, then it's all right with us."

Merlin Hall Aylesworth is president of NBC; William Paley heads Columbia.

Besides Cantor, Wynn, Pearl and Kate Smith, some of the more popular evening broadcasting stars are Groucho and Chico Marx, Burns and Allen, Rudy Vallee, Ben Bernie, Tom Howard, Stoopnagle and Budd, Ruth Etting, Mills Brothers, Bing Crosby, Abe Lyman, Morton Downey, Boswell Sisters, Guy Lombardo, Paul Whiteman, Amos 'n' Andy, Ken Murray, Charlie Winninger, Al Jolson, Rubinoff (on the Cantor hour), Jack Benny, Ted Weems and Lawrence Tibbett. Practically all were brought to Hollywood at one time or another to appear in pictures. The Marx Brothers and Jolson, Tibbett and Cantor are the only headliners whose screen efforts enjoyed any appreciable success. However, theatre grosses are usually increased with their personal appearances.

The general complaint of exhibitors was lodged against stars appearing between 6 and 10 p. m. Practically every program featuring talent mentioned in the foregoing is broadcast during that period. Exhibitors throughout the nation have voiced, concertedly and otherwise, loud protestations to the large producers for permitting their contract stars to appear on nation-wide programs. It was agreed, however, that no great harm to receipts can come from broadcasts by these players if such broadcasts are confined to hours other than between 6 and 10 p. m. The radio people say this arrangement is impossible.

A "code of ethics" concerning the appearance of film stars on the air has been suggested by exhibitors. Others believe that producers should refuse to employ players who will not agree to refrain from broadcasting.

Dropped by Circuits

Motion picture corporations decided long ago that broadcasting is economically unwise. Warner Brothers, Paramount and Radio-Keith-Orpheum, which is affiliated with NBC, used national hook-ups at tremendous costs to broadcast weekly institutional programs advertising their stars, their product and theatres. These programs proved a boomerang, and after wholesale complaints from exhibitors they were dropped.

Motion picture stars are not always reimbursed for their radio appearances. Frequently, they are induced to appear for whatever publicity is promised by the commercial sponsor.

Another socalled radio "evil" which exhibitors are complaining of is the free admission of thousands of prospective theatre customers to radio studios during broadcasts. Seats at NBC's studios in New York are at a premium whenever big names broadcast. Last Sunday evening, hundreds were turned away when crowds stormed National's studio in the New Amsterdam Theatre Building, Times Square, to hear Mr. Cantor's jokes and Rubinoff's violin.

The situation is similar in Los Angeles, Chicago and other broadcasting centers, while stations in small towns are beginning to encourage attendance of the public.

Following action of Allied in the Northwest, the board of directors of national Allied, assembled in annual session two weeks ago in New York, registered protest against radio performances of picture stars during hours when theatres are open. Citing examples of loss of attendance during certain radio program hours, Allied and certain of its affiliated state units recommended that the industry "eliminate this form of competition by requiring stars to choose between air and screen careers."

Following is a detailed summary of the effects of radio on theatre admissions, and of presentation of radio programs over amplification systems by picture houses:

The Alhambra theatre in Milwaukee was one of the first in the current movement to stop its shows to present popular radio programs over its sound amplification system. The Chase and Sanborn Sunday evening program, with Eddie Cantor and Rubinoff, was the first used. With the success of that experiment, the entire Lucky Strike hour with Jack Pearl in his Baron Munchausen act was presented. The audience heard the programs in their entirety, complete even to commercial announcements. Both programs were to be presented every week, but the Universal theatre suddenly dropped them because, while the audience appeared to like the hookup, the management found that they didn't improve the box-office.

The presentation of radio broadcasts in theatres has never been tried at Tampa. The only house in that territory engaging in radio activities of any kind is the Tampa, which has a tie-up with the local station whereby a half-hour organ recital is heard each noon.

Receivers in Lounges

Theatres in Washington, D. C., have not employed the radio program. Capital city houses rarely engage in any form of ballyhoo.

Buffalo exhibitors have not yet taken to it. Theatres there still get heaviest crowds Sunday evenings, despite Cantor and other weekend air highlights. The tendency in the Buffalo territory is to feature radio headliners in stage shows. Eddie Cantor played a one-day show this week, and next week Ed Wynn will appear for a week at the Erlanger, with one night off for local broadcasting over WBEN. The biggest radio favorite in and around Buffalo is Ben Bernie. His recent personal appearances at a picture house were very successful.

Theatres in Seattle and the Pacific Northwest do not use radio broadcasts. Some of the large houses have receivers in lounge rooms, but few patrons manifest interest, the only exception being important national events, or election returns, which usually are hooked up with the theatre system.

At Portland, Oregon, exhibitors used broadcasts to a limited extent some time back, when radios were placed in the lobbies to entertain those waiting.

A check-up indicated theatres west of the Rockies were not using radio programs, except a few widely scattered independent situations.

The policy of the large group of Fox-Skouras western and midwestern houses is strongly against radio tieups in any form. The circuit even refused to rent its closed theatres for public broadcasting purposes.

A few houses in the Los Angeles territory advertised the broadcasting of important programs in their lobbies, but were stopped by the broadcasting companies and the practice died out. There appears to be no interest in the idea in Hollywood or Los Angeles.

In San Francisco territory, radio broadcasts are not employed and important exhibitors voiced strong opposition against them. There are, however, occasional tieups effected between radio stations and San Francisco first-runs for mutual advertising value.

Southern California exhibitors say that radio competition is quite keen.

Philadelphia showmen are adverse to calling attention at all to radio headliners. None has embraced broadcasting over amplification systems.

Chicago owners see no place on regular programs for big broadcasts and none is doing it. Balaban and Katz officials declared the practice was tried several years ago and proved unsuccessful. The general opinion is that Cantor will not bring patrons to theatres who want to stay home to listen to his broadcast. Local exhibitors are of the opinion that radio presentation of headliners would be ill received, as have previous efforts in connection with important fights and the like.

The Essaness circuit in Chicago gave patrons Amos 'n' Andy when they were at the peak of their popularity, but the policy was dropped because its appeal was lost on a large audience in unaccustomed surroundings for this type of socalled "intimate" or home entertainment. Many houses in Chicago have foyer radios for those waiting. Local owners say broadcasts keep many patrons at home, but they insist theatre programs cannot be successfully compromised.

Protest to MPPDA

St. Louis exhibitors do not use radio broadcasts as part of regular programs. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, as chairman of a special committee of the national MPTOA, protested to the MPPDA a long time ago against the use of screen stars in radio hookups. He said at that time that the place for stars is on the screen only. His stand reflects the current sentiment in St. Louis. The important Ambassador theatre in that town has for years been broadcasting stage acts and organ numbers, and on infrequent occasions, other first runs have broadcast stage acts and musical numbers.

In connection with the resurrection of old picture releases of present day radio favorites, Tom Edwards booked in Ed Wynn's "Follow the Leader" at his Ozark theatre, at Eldon, Mo. In reporting the results, in the HERALD's "What the Picture Did for Me" department, Mr. Edwards said, "I played this one two years ago and didn't do any business on it. Since then Wynn has popularized himself over the radio. I just brought it back on bargain night and it was the best bargain night business in three months."

Currently, Warners is playing the old Wynn picture on Broadway, at the Winter Garden. This precedes an elaborate stage show headed by Ed Wynn which opens Friday at Metro's Capitol, across the street from the Warner house. RKO may reissue Rudy Vallee's "Vagabond Lover" and Morton Downey's "Mother's Boy," which Pathe made.

Idea Applied in Kansas City

Radio broadcasts are not being used any place in the Kansas City territory, although recently the Ed Wynn broadcast brought favorable results at the Ashland theatre. Exhibitors in Kansas City say that radio competition is strong, especially the headline programs. They are, however, averse to a tieup. There was much criticism locally of companies which permit their screen stars to be featured on the air.

Theatres in Cleveland territory do not use broadcasts. Strong feeling exists there against radio competition. Exhibitors say Cantor's programs have cut Sunday business at least 40 per cent. Also, there is much local opposition against featuring screen stars on the radio. The public becomes satiated with their type of entertainment, it was said.

Cognizant of the magnetism of big-time radio names, exhibitors in Providence are installing radios in their lobbies. The wisdom of this idea was exemplified recently during the showing of "The Kid from Spain," starring Eddie Cantor, which played at Loew's State. The management not only arranged for the presenting of the Cantor program as a "special feature," with much ballyhoo, but tied up with shops where coffee is sold, showing stills of Cantor in his Chase and Sanborn apron.

The Paramount theatre in Providence for many months has had a radio installed in the lobby. Fay's theatre, spotting vaudeville, has variously featured radio headliners, such as Vaughn de Leath, Henry Burbig and others. Recently, RKO's Albee brought in Rudy Vallee.

Vallee, Crosby, Kate Smith, the Four Mills Brothers and dozens of others have been headlined along Broadway. Paramount's key house at 43rd street has been the principal user of radio personalities. The Capitol uses many radio names, too.

Theatres in New Orleans and thereabouts admit suffering from radio competition. Radio programs are said to be making serious inroads on the box offices of this territory. However, headline radio acts have not yet been picked up for theatre programs.

To date there has been no move on the part of Houston managers to meet the competition of air headliners by presenting radio programs in theatres, although they admit the competition does exist to a menacing extent. In the opinion of local exhibitors, the most effective manner in which to meet such competition is to show radio headliners, whenever possible, in screen attractions. Eddie Cantor's pictures play Loew's State; Kate Smith and others in musical short pictures are featured frequently at the Metropolitan; Olsen and Johnson and their company of 35 in "Atrocities of 1933" are currently playing RKO's Majestic. Thus, Houston exhibitors believe, the radio competition is turned to theatre advantage, building additional patronage. That this may prove a boomerang later is "just one of the eternal risks of the business," said one exhibitor.

Delaware, Nebraska Not Using Plan

Exhibitors in Omaha and Wilmington territories have not resorted to use of broadcasts.

Theatre owners of San Antonio are well aware of the extent of radio competition, but they have taken no steps toward presenting programs of the Cantor-Pearl-Wynn type. Quite some time ago, when Amos 'n' Andy rose to the height of their popularity, local managers used that feature, but when the radio company obtained restraining orders, San Antonio operators dropped the policy. The test cases made by the radio people, it was said, prohibited picking up the broadcasts for commercial usage without paying special royalty fees.

In Oklahoma, exhibitors agree that business is off, but they attribute this to general economic conditions and not alone to the radio influence.

Minneapolis and Dakota owners indicated a lack of sympathy for carrying radio programs over their amplification systems. They protested against the performances of stars over the air and said that the practice should be ruled out between 6 and 10 p. m. Broadcasting from theatres has fallen off considerably in the territory. Local theatres broadcast features directly from their stages with quite some success, but the only mutual tieup in existence now is the announcing of current attractions, which is made nightly.

Warners is reissuing Jack Pearl's old "Meal Ticket," a Vitaphone short which the German comedian made two years ago. In scores of small towns, the Pearl short is being billed above the feature and getting all the newspaper play. Peggy Shannon, then an unknown, appeared with Pearl.

The radio situation regarding Cantor's Sunday broadcasts is different in Pennsylvania and other "blue" territories because theatres there do not play on Sundays.

OLD FIRST NATIONAL "CO-OP" IDEA REVIVED

J. D. Williams Originates First Choice Pictures, Inc., with Roy Curtiss President; New Company Will Distribute Only

The old First National franchise system of cooperatively managing a motion picture corporation was reborn late last week in the form of First Choice Pictures, Inc. The official announcement culminated months of preparation and described a plan for linking the interests of from four to five thousand exhibitors with a group of independent producers.

First Choice, sponsored and developed by many of the former exhibitor franchise owners and executives of the original First National organization, will only distribute motion pictures and will not engage in exhibition or production.

J. D. Williams, organizer of the former exhibitor-cooperative company, is the originator of the First Choice plan and is its vice-president. The president is Roy Curtiss, identified with the industry as a "behind-the-scenes operator" since 1918. H. O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer of the original First National group, is treasurer of First Choice. William M. Vogel, for years a distributor of American-made pictures in foreign markets, is secretary. These four, with Arthur DeYoung, partner in a New York banking firm, comprise the board of directors.

30 Voting Trustees

The sponsors also include 30 voting trustees. They are the official regional representatives. Among those already enrolled as trustees are:

Louis F. Blumenthal, of Haring & Blumenthal, which operates theatres in New Jersey and New York.

Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, Ky., well known exhibitor and one of the original First National franchise holders.

John Hamrick of Seattle, exhibitor in the Northwest.

Thomas H. Boland of Oklahoma City, one of the original First National franchise holders.

John J. McGuirk, former president of Stanley Company, also a former president of First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Harry A. Richards, New York.

Frank H. Durkee, exhibitor, of Baltimore.

Oscar Bate, New York.

Equal ownership with the organizers and voting trustees is vested in exhibitors, according to the company.

The announcement further states that the exhibitor members will determine the number of features and short subjects First Choice will release, and that the vote of its exhibitor participants will determine the producers, stars and directors whose productions will be acceptable for distribution and exhibition.

Releasing will begin in the fall. Between 12 and 52 features and 26 to 104 short subjects will be made available yearly.

Home offices have been established at 20 West 43rd Street, New York. Sales effort will be direct and physical handling of prints will be through some existing national exchange system. Nor will the company concentrate on distribution to theatres alone. The announcement said additional services will be offered, such as cooperative buying through national purchasing facilities; advisory service on theatre operation; a theatre managers' employment bureau for members; provisions for giving counsel on theatre construction; group business insurance for theatre members, and creation of a fund from grosses, out of which short term loans will be made to relieve distressed theatre situations, at nominal interest rates.

Hudson Supervises Producing

W. J. Morgan will have charge of distribution, and Earl J. Hudson, former First National production executive, will supervise producing arrangements. C. L. ("Bill") Yearsley will handle advertising, publicity and exploitation, a post which he held in the old First National organization.

Mr. Morgan started this week organizing a staff of 50 or 60 salesmen to be established in every key city.

The plan provides for exhibitor ownership of the corporation up to 50 per cent. For this purpose 1,020,000 shares of common will be made available to exhibitor members under five-year options. The company will issue 204,000 shares each year for five years, and these will be allotted on a basis of film rentals paid. Price of the stock ranges from $1 a share on the first 1,000 options to $10 a share on all over 5,000 options. Purchase of the stock is not obligatory at the expiration of the option in 1938.

The company was incorporated last week at Wilmington, Del., listing capital of $150,000 and 2,040,000 shares of no-par value. Incorporators are Mabel Hudson, Thomas R. Purcell and Robert L. Loeb, of New York.

The announcement, which declared the company is the "first 'fifty-fifty' distribution organization," said it will be operated on a profit-sharing, percentage basis all along the line, with the participating producers, exhibitors and the company receiving proportionate returns. Between 25 and 50 producers are expected to participate. Only one theatre in each zone will be linked up, and one franchise holder to a territory.

The theatre owners' percentage or rental rate will be set before he joins the movement. "Every exhibitor's contract will be alike, except rentals, dependent on importance of theatres," said the announcement. Theatre owners will not be compelled to play percentage—"but the company prefers it because it's the fairest way."

Reduced distribution and sales costs are expected to effect considerable savings in operations. The plan will be financed and operated at the outset by its founders. The 30 voting trustees will represent the shareholders. The corporation's officers and executives will receive "nominal, living salaries and a percentage of the annual profits." Salaries, therefore, will fluctuate with profits, with the total of all officers' fixed salaries arbitrarily limited to $150,000 annually.

Exclusive Rights to Brand Name

By giving exclusive rights to the First Choice brand name in their zones, exhibitor owners will "not have to bid against a competitor every buying season to hold a brand name their efforts and advertising have made valuable." After the first year, exhibitor members decide by vote how many pictures they want from the company.

A "review board" of seven members will handle production matters. Four must be exhibitors or former exhibitors, it was said.

Supplies, equipment and accessories are to be included in the plan for purchasing on a wholesale basis for exhibitor members. "The company will not charge a profit on advertising accessories," it was said.

MERIAN C. COOPER

Cooper New RKO Production Chief

Merian C. Cooper, adventurer, explorer, newspaper man, and for the past three years a producer for RKO, is the new generalissimo of all Radio production in Hollywood. The appointment came quite unexpectedly last week after David O. Selznick's resignation had been accepted by B. B. Kahane, president of RKO's film subsidiary. Mr. Selznick will join MGM as executive associate producer.

In 1914 Mr. Cooper resigned from Annapolis and moved to Minneapolis, where he was a reporter until the outbreak of the Mexican border hostilities. Joining the Pershing forces, but refusing a commission on the grounds that an officer's life did not hold sufficient thrills for him, he was made top-sergeant. Then came the World War.

After a few months of brilliant flying in France, Cooper was shot down behind the German lines and taken prisoner, spending several months in a prison camp.

With the Armistice, Cooper found himself without a job. His resourcefulness and courage came to his rescue, however, and with some of his demobolized fellow aviators he organized the famous Kosciusko squadron and ultimately became its commander. Fighting with his squadron against the Russian Red armies in Poland, he was shot down for the second time in his career and spent almost a year as a guest of the Reds.

After his release from the land of the Soviet, the desire for more travel seized him. Joining an expedition which was touring the world with no definite purpose in mind other than adventure, he met Ernest B. Schoedsack, who became his partner. When the expedition was off the southwestern coast of Arabia they stopped to make a pictorial record which became "Grass." There followed "Chang" and "The Four Feathers."

Encouraged by the success of these films, Mr. Cooper became actively interested in the motion picture industry, and for the past three years has been chief production assistant at the RKO studios.

EXTENSIVE DEPORTATION OF ALIEN TALENT AT STUDIOS THREATENED

Lambs Club, Asking Rigid Enforcement of Six Months Rule, Says Turnover of Foreign Actors in U.S. in 2 Years Is 12,000

The production branch of the motion picture industry has been threatened with extensive deportation of alien players and studio workers who are said to have overstayed their six months' labor permit to work in this country.

Immigration officials have not enforced the labor laws to the limit, is the opinion of several members of the industry and the theatre in New York. A marked leniency toward foreign actors, directors and writers who enter the country has been shown, according to a petition sent to Washington recently by the well-known Lambs Club. This petition embodies a request that the "traffic" in alien actors be made more rigid than heretofore, and charges that in the last two years the turnover of alien actors in this country has been nearly 12,000, and that at one time on Broadway all the names in electric lights were British.

Special Agent Making Inquiry

An investigation is now being conducted in Hollywood by Murray W. Garsson, special agent, as part of a program of investigation designed for enforcement of the immigration law, according to Washington officials who said it is not intended as discrimination. Government officials said they attach no more importance to the move than if the agents were investigating employees of any other industry. Nevertheless, the Government's action has stirred up considerable feeling among artists, both in Hollywood and New York.

This Mr. Garsson was himself a figure in the motion picture industry, mainly allied with "independent" causes, in the period around 1925. He had a project for a newsreel which was to have been called the Screen Dispatch and edited by Donald McIlvaine.

Albert Deane of Paramount's foreign department, said that Mr. Garsson's activities in Hollywood might cause serious trouble for the industry in foreign countries where distribution is large.

"If the industry wants to exclude all aliens and make pictures solely for American consumption we will lose our foreign business completely," Mr. Deane said. "Foreigners are not fundamentally fond enough of things American to make such a thing worthwhile.

"The fact that we want to continue distribution in foreign countries is enough to make us occasionally take into consideration the point that people in other lands like to see something besides American faces, but this is not a set practice.

"When we bring a foreign actor to this country our first thought is that we are bringing something new for our own people to see. We do not aim so much for reciprocity as to bring in and develop new stars."

The consensus has always been that the importation of foreign talent furthered the possibilities of American pictures as international merchandise. "Art should be international and we ought to have outgrown such narrow practices as barring alien artists from our shores," said Richard A. Rowland, Fox production executive. "We do not bring in foreigners with a view to giving our pictures an international flavor. They are regarded purely as artists and are brought in because of that fact, and because we believe they will be popular. In the majority of cases these players have not been heard of in their own countries until they have been developed in Hollywood."

Robert H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, said that "one-third of star drawing power in Hollywood is foreign."

The Labor Department at Washington said that 82 persons "calling themselves actors" were admitted under immigration quotas during the fiscal year ended in June, 1932. Eleven hundred and six actors were admitted during the same year for only temporary residence. Included in this number are those who arrived to make pictures or to take part in stage productions under special permits. The department emphasizes the fact that not all of these may be actors, but when questioned for passport visas gave that as their occupation. The department also points out that United States consular agents abroad have been instructed during the past two years to issue no visas to persons coming to this country to look for work.

Selwyn Blames Hollywood

Archie Selwyn, New York stage producer, said this week that Hollywood was to blame for the present situation.

"Hollywood has encouraged foreigners to such an extent that all they have to do now is to signify their intention of coming to the country and they are immediately snatched up for pictures," he said. "This has resulted in an overwhelming amount of unemployment among native actors both here and on the Coast."

Mr. Selwyn and Gilbert Miller are two New York producers who import more foreign plays and casts than any others in the business.

"But," said Mr. Selwyn, "I always try to cast at least three-quarters of my foreign plays from native talent. I believe that alien actors are necessary in parts which require aliens."

An official of the Lambs Club also said the organization had no desire to bar aliens from the country altogether, but that they should be admitted only to play specialized parts.

Two years ago Great Britain adopted a slogan of "Buy British" in an effort to stabilize Empire industries. Demonstrations were held throughout the Empire, and among those workers directly influenced by the fever of indignation against foreign imports and foreigners generally, was the actor.

At that time, there were approximately 350 American actors in the United Kingdom. These included about 120 who divided their time between the legitimate theatre in the West End and Elstree, the film capital of Britain.

Overnight several were notified by the British Home Office to leave the country. Some were shunted out with 24 hours' notice. Mass meetings were held and it was claimed that Americans in particular were taking work away from British actors. The sentiment, public and stage alike, is that no American, with only a few exceptions, be allowed to play a part which could be filled by an Englishman. They jeer at the American accent and at what they are pleased to call "their awkward manners," but they do support good American plays with American casts. The possibility of American invasion, causing the British actor to lose his "bread and butter," however, is practically negligible.

Sixteen Players, Charged With Violations, Agree to Leave America Following Inquiry by Murray Garsson, U.S. Agent

Tex McLeod, internationally-known cowboy humorist, who has been resident in Great Britain for five years, was pulled off the boards of the Holborn Empire in the middle of the week. McLeod finally was allowed to remain, but only after proof that he owned property there. A few other alien actors who own property in England include Tallulah Bankhead, Hartley Powers and Bernard Nedell.

Must Have Permit

No actor is permitted to enter England to work without a contract or a labor permit. The "open house" policy which has prevailed in this country has never been known over there. The same is true of France and Germany.

American actors who enter the country as visitors are required to sign a statement that they will neither work nor seek work.

Alfred Wall, secretary of the British Equity, recently proposed a closed shop policy modeled along the lines of the American Actors' Equity. He said that the movement would be the means of regulating the exchange of actors between the two countries, and that it would do much to overcome the misunderstandings.

Lambs Club agitation helped to stir the authorities at Washington to action. Mr. Garsson invaded Hollywood with a corps of agents to deport violators of six months' permits. Sixteen actors and actress of foreign birth, and all little known, have been charged with violations of immigration regulations. These have all agreed to leave the country without protest. Ten of the 16 are British.

J. C. Furnas, writing in the New York Herald-Tribune, attributes the large influx of alien actors to their generally superior histrionic ability.

"This is particularly true of the British," he says. "It has been true, of course, ever since there was an American stage, that British actors find America a happy and profitable hunting ground. But it is only recently that Hollywood has been drafting so many and so brilliant Britons. There does seem to be some point in the agitation now said to be current in the film colony, trying to extend the 'Buy American' principle to discriminate against the foreign actor in American films. The epidemic of Mexicans died down long ago, but the British invasion is still going on."

Appointment of a sub-committee to hold hearings on legislation to bar alien actors was agreed upon by the Senate Immigration Committee this week. The legislation was sponsored by Rep. Samuel Dickstein and was passed by the House at the last session.

Equity's attitude toward them will remain unchanged, said a spokesman, who added: "We have always welcomed them. At the same time there are certain necessary restrictions involved. We require all aliens to become members of Equity, and in addition to their dues, they must pay 5 per cent of their weekly salaries, or a minimum of $10, while they are employed."

The Equity official said he did not believe that the presence of alien actors made much difference to employment in either the theatre or in Hollywood, but he expressed a belief that if Equity had the same control over film players that it has over actors of the legitimate stage, such a question never would have arisen.

ZUKOR, HILLES STAY AS RECEIVERS; REORGANIZING OF RKO UNDERWAY

Paramount General Creditors' Committee Named; Several Hundred Workers Dismissed; Production Plans Drafted

Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles were continued last Thursday by Federal Judge William Bondy as temporary equity co-receivers for Paramount Publix Corporation. The receivers immediately set about to readjust the corporation's economic structure, pending a hearing March 17 when an order will be returnable, before Judge Bondy, to show cause why the appointment should not be made permanent.

Judge Bondy refused to appoint a third coceiver. He indicated that such an appointment would be an unnecessary drain on the assets, but said he would reserve definite decision.

Gordon Auchincloss, recently resigned trustee in the Kreuger and Toll case, was suggested as a third receiver by A. J. Schanfarber of Chicago, who said he represented a group of bondholders. Attorney Schoen offered the name of Arthur F. Friend.

One hundred attorneys representing the corporation, security holders and creditors, met Thursday in Judge Bondy's chambers. The question of solvency of the company was left open until an early meeting of creditors.

The court ruled that it was within jurisdiction in acting on the equity receivership. A bankruptcy petition had been filed in advance by Reuben Gelford, I. Riseman and M. Yellou.

The Dow, Jones financial press, predicted this week that new working capital will be necessary eventually for Paramount, obtained either from bankers or through assessment on security holders.

Creditors' Committee Named

Counsel for committees began functioning this week to protect the interests of holders of bonds, banknotes and debentures.

General creditors organized a committee, headed by R. E. Anderson, of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and including Martin Quigley, of Quigley Publishing Company, and E. C. A. Bullock of Rapp and Rapp. This committee sent a letter to creditors, which said, in part:

> "The bill of complaint" (petition for receivers) "alleges that the assets have a value of approximately $166,000,000, and that the total of claims outstanding of all kinds is approximately $60,000,000. We are advised that the unsecured claims, according to the company's books, total about $2,000,000, and that other claims for which the company has not admitted liability, may be presented.
> "A number of the general creditors having claims amounting to more than $1,300,000, have formed a creditors' committee for the purpose of protecting their interests and with a view to effective cooperation with the receivers.
> "Such expenses as the committee finds it necessary to incur will be pro-rated among the creditors represented by it. The legal work thus far done in behalf of creditors now represented by the committee has been done by Mr. Nathan Burkan, counsel for various creditors, and Mr. John H. Ray, general counsel of Electrical Research."

Creditors Urged to Respond

The committee urged creditors immediately to sign an agreement authorizing it to act for them. The order giving Mr. Anderson's committee the power of attorney said:

> "The undersigned creditor of the above named corporation (Paramount Publix Corp.) does hereby authorize R. E. Anderson, of Electrical Research Products, Martin Quigley, of Quigley Publishing Company, Inc., and E. C. A. Bullock, of the firm of Rapp and Rapp, members of the General Creditors' Committee, to act as his or its attorney-in-fact, in relation to the proceedings in equity filed against said corporation in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York, or in any other proceedings filed by or against said corporation, and to appear and intervene in any of said proceedings through counsel to said committee, and do and perform such acts on behalf of the undersigned, as said committee may deem advisable.
> "This authorization is executed upon the express condition, however, that no proposal for the settlement or adjustment of the claim of the undersigned, nor of any plan of reorganization shall be accepted or agreed to by said committee or its representatives, without submitting the same to the undersigned and securing his or its specific consent thereto."

Certificates of deposit for Paramount Publix securities were sent to stockholders for signatures by a committee which includes Duncan A. Holmes, Ruloff E. Cutten and Maurice Newton. Secretary is Richard W. Matthews, 20 Pine street, New York.

A committee for protecting bondholders of Paramount Broadway Corp. was preparing to

THE AUTHORITY OF RECEIVERS

The authority of both equity receivers and receivers in bankruptcy in administration of the affairs of companies so involved is practically unlimited. As agents of the court which appointed them they are answerable only to that court.

Ordinarily, equity receivers do not extend their authority into the actual operating policies of the companies, except where those policies involve waste, extravagance or dissipation of assets. Phases of operations shown to be operating satisfactorily are rarely disturbed. The scope of their activities is usually confined to the administration of tangible assets with a view to their conservation and preservation.

Duration of receiverships may vary from six months to an indefinite period, determining factors being reestablishment of the company on a paying basis or an agreement between creditors and the court that reorganization or liquidation is necessary. The fees of an equity receiver are fixed by the court either at the conclusion of the receivership, or at intervals on the receiver's requisition. The fee of a trustee in bankruptcy is one per cent of all receipts over $10,000. The trustee in bankruptcy, who, like receivers in equity, is appointed by the court, is the trustee of funds for the creditors.

Ancillary receivers are appointed by district courts to operate properties and take over assets outside of the state where the parent company has headquarters. They are subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in the districts where they are appointed. Referees in receivership cases are appointed by the court as a personal contact between the court and the receivers to referee any disputes between the receivers and creditors.

Numerous RKO Departments Disbanded, Personnel Curtailed; Orpheum Houses to Undergo Radical Changes

The management of Radio-Keith-Orpheum last week joined with A. H. McCausland, representing Irving Trust Company, equity receiver, in formulating plans for operating the corporation and its bankrupt theatre subsidiaries. Mr. McCausland established headquarters in RKO's home office in Radio City, pending a hearing February 17, when Federal Judge William Bondy, New York, will decide on the permanency of Irving Trust as receiver.

In line with economy orders issued by the receiver, executives of the company immediately set about to reorganize and adjust operations, disbanding numerous departments and curtailing official and staff personnel. The RKO operating department assumed duties formerly handled by the maintenance division, which was abolished along with construction and other divisions. The theatre house organ was discontinued. George Godfrey, head vaudeville booker, and Bruce Powell of the merchandise department were dropped.

Landlords Organize

A protective committee for holders of common stock of Radio-Keith-Orpheum was formed this week. The committee consists of Robert C. Adams, Ferdinand Everstadt, Maurice Goodman, Paul M. Mazur, Grayson M. P. Murphy and Herbert Bayard Swope. In a communication to stockholders the committee says that it does not feel it necessary to ask for deposits at present, but requests all stockholders to authorize the committee to represent them. The statement said: "A deposit agreement is prepared to be dated February 9, copies of which may be obtained shortly from the depositary, the Commercial Bank and Trust Company of New York, or the secretary, which will permit withdrawal of deposited stock without expense in the event that a reorganization plan is not adopted or within 20 days after promulgation of any plan." RCA is cooperating with the committee.

Meanwhile, counsel for the corporation appeared in court at Baltimore to defend a petition filed by Basher and Goldman. At the hearing Tuesday, insolvency was denied.

The receivers are convinced that there are many profitable units in the bankrupt Orpheum division. They are preparing to salvage these houses. Others, however, will be disposed of in the liquidation process which already has commenced. Orpheum creditors will meet February 17 in the offices of Oscar Ehrhorn, referee in the case, of 280 Broadway, New York.

While the receiver and the management were going ahead with plans to obtain reduced rentals on theatre properties, Walter Reade and 40 other New York and New Jersey landlords were organizing to "protect" properties leased by RKO. W. C. B. Schlesinger is attorney.

Charles W. Cullen, U. S. referee in bankruptcy at district court in Wilmington, appointed Herman Zohbel, RKO treasurer, the receiver for RKO Western Corp. and RKO Southern Corp., theatre subsidiaries. A hearing on a petition of Doris Charing for receivers for New Jersey properties was continued by Federal Judge Guy Fake for 10 days.

Receivership of local Cincinnati theatre subsidiaries was temporarily lifted. Judge Silverman, of New York, had filed the petition. Receivership was asked for Omaha Orpheum Co.

Standards Bureau Studies Material In Acoustic Field

Increased importance has been given the sound investigations of the United States Bureau of Standards by the development of talking pictures, and a number of studies have been under way at the bureau for several years in this field.

Of considerable importance to the film industry has been the research into the absorption coefficients of acoustic materials, which means the degree to which various materials deaden sound. Extremely delicate measures have been made on 97 different samples of material used in the interior finish of auditoriums to produce good acoustic qualities.

By determining the absorption coefficients of various finishing materials, it is explained, it will be possible to direct sound and control its volume as desired on a strictly engineering basis, determining the relative volume of sound to be reflected from a particular point and finishing the walls with the proper material.

Echo suppression and the control of resonance also are accomplished by the proper treatment of walls, a matter of importance not only in theatres but in broadcasting studios.

Say Censor Bill Invites "Rackets"

The New England Watch and Ward Society, self-constituted guardian of public morals, is urging the passage, by the senate of Massachusetts, of a bill designed to penalize the owners of buildings in which are exhibited performances deemed objectionable by the authorities. Such buildings would be classified, according to the bill, as common nuisances, and subject to padlock procedure.

Among the individuals appearing at a recent hearing in opposition to enactment of the measure was Judge Edward L. Logan, of South Boston, representing the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, organization of motion picture theatre owners, who declared such legislation would lay the foundation for "an organized blackmail racket." Judge Logan indicated the bill would place in the hands of every citizen, "normal or abnormal, sane or insane," the right to secure an injunction against any theatre. Citing no need for any further legislation, Judge Logan, in the course of a sharp verbal tilt with Senator Mackay of Quincy, Mass., declared the measure would permit anyone to "persecute or prosecute" any theatre manager or owner by merely claiming some part of the exhibition tended to corrupt youthful morals.

Dramatists' Group Fights New York State Tax Ruling

The Dramatists' Guild of the Authors' League of America plans court action in an effort to save playwrights, songwriters and lyricists from paying New York state income tax on formerly exempt copyrights. A test case involving Elmer Rice, playwright, is planned, with the intention of carrying the action to the appellate division of the state supreme court.

The tax bureau of the state has declared that assessments ruled retroactive on incomes of 1929, 1930 and 1931 will be pressed. The determination followed a recent opinion of the United States supreme court reversing a decision that copyright incomes are exempt from state taxation since copyrights are issued by the federal government.

Hodkinson Urges First Principles

Earle E. Crowe, financial editor of the Los Angeles Times, in an interview with W. W. Hodkinson, Paramount's first president, says:

"Rescue of Paramount Publix Corporation from receivership at an early date is a perfectly feasible business proposition, but not along the obsolete lines on which the company and the business have been conducted.

"Authority for this positive statement is W. W. Hodkinson, founder and first president of Paramount. Recently returned from Guatemala, where he reorganized and expanded the services of Compania Nacional de Aviacion, the air transport line he controls, Mr. Hodkinson was called upon to comment on the turn of affairs in the company over which he presided for so many years.

" 'Paramount,' said this pioneer film executive, 'has been doomed for years, not particularly because of managerial faults, but because it has been representative of a faulty system. This company is now in the position through receivership where it can go back to first principles and start anew under intelligent direction.

" 'I think I know what I am talking about when I say that neither Paramount nor any other picture company can recover from receivership on the same principles followed in the last decade or so. I cut the pattern on which the industry developed in its formative days. When my associates and competitors were determined to enlarge on that pattern by consolidating distribution and production, I promptly withdrew.

" 'It is time to return to independence of production, of distribution, of exhibition. It is time to embrace the idea I have repeatedly urged: Centralization of distribution, grading and standardization of pictures and theatres, standardized prices at low levels, and simultaneous national releases.' "

National Board Meets to Analyze Film Appreciation

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, with headquarters in New York, and of which Wilton A. Barrett is executive secretary, was scheduled to hold its ninth annual conference at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. "Analysis of Motion Picture Appreciation" was to be the central theme of the discussions, to be participated in by various educators and Board officials.

Motion picture study groups and those interested in better films are to attend from virtually every part of the United States. Visiting delegates were to witness a demonstration of a group of boys and girls from nine to 14 reviewing and discussing films, as an example of the work of the Young Reviewers Club of the National Board, a section established experimentally during the past year.

Speakers scheduled to address the delegates include Leroy E. Bowman, Child Study Association of America; Dr. Frank Astor, National Child Welfare Association; Lawrence A. Wilkins, director of modern languages in the New York City public schools; Miss Mary Mathews, curator of education, Brooklyn Children's Museum; Joseph L. Marron, Jacksonville, Fla.; Harry Alan Potemkin, critic; Alan R. Blackburn, Jr., secretary of the Museum of Modern Art, New York; Mrs. Mildred Wilder Champlin, Oneonta, N. Y. Stage and screen personalities are to be introduced to the conference at the Board's 18th annual luncheon on Saturday, when Dr. George W. Kirchwey, former dean of Columbia University Law School, will preside.

by Joseph O'Sullivan

In motion picture chronology, it is a far cry from "The Birth of a Nation," silent screen masterpiece of the beginnings of screen history, to "Cavalcade," sound screen epic of England's travail from the turn of the century.

From the viewpoint of cinema art, however, it seems but a logical step in progressive achievement; for in the score of years that has intervened, few of the film recordings of momentous subjects deserve the designation of "epochal." That Noel Coward's sound screen epitome of the trials and emotions of the British people from the Boer War to the present is, in truth, an event of major import to the screen, has been acknowledged by able reviewers in words of unstinted, and just, praise.

Musically, the analogy to David Wark Griffith's masterwork of twenty years ago has many points of contact; for "The Birth of a Nation" was one of the first, if not the pioneer, of American-made pictures for which a special musical score was prepared. It was, undoubtedly, the first to emphasize effectively the power of music to motivate and vitalize screen action.

Inherently, the drama of "Cavalcade" does not, of necessity, require music to reinforce or interpret subjective motives, situation or characterization; hence there is at no time any lapse into the pitfalls of the bathos of sentimentality too often incidental to underscoring. But the stirring march of events does imperatively demand—and utilizes with amazingly telling effect—music that, in itself, is a veracious chronicle; a veritable musical panorama that reflects and re-creates the spirit of the times.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

CAVALCADE — Louis De Francesco and Reginald Berkeley

This imposing march is used as accompaniment to a cavalcade of horsemen symbolizing the passing of each significant era.

LOVER OF MY DREAMS — Noel Coward

(She) All my life I have been wait-ing, dream-ing a-ges through,

An old fashioned waltz song which occurs in an operetta by the name of "Mirabelle," written by Mr. Coward in the old fashioned manner as a satirical comment on the lyrical stage of the period.

20TH CENTURY BLUES — Noel Coward

A commentary on the Jazz Age, composed by Coward. It is, in a manner, a symbol of the revolt of the present day.

In accomplishing this a score comprising more than fifty popular songs, national anthems, hymns, ballads and topical tunes, was prepared and expertly woven into the musical fabric by Louis De Francesco, Fox director of music, with the assistance of his staff of composers and arrangers, including: J. S. Zamecnik, Arthur Lange, Edward Kilenyi, Peter Brunelli and Frank Tresselt, who was also director of voice parts.

An appraisal of this tonal re-creation of three decades of eventful history, cannot but bring into clear perspective the eclectic scope and universal function of music—that it is limited by neither time, mode nor idiom. To the initiated or to the close observer of musical materia, it is apparent that period music is an infallible index to the character of its generation; that this is as true of the classics as it is of the songs of the people. Musical dissonances of today would have shocked an older generation. With the ever-increasing overtones in this thing called civilization, we find a reflex in the overlapping of mixed harmonies in tonal expression. The pace swiftens, and the tempo of our melodic medium accommodates itself to life as we experience it. Music, the well-spring of human emotions, reacts to these phenomena.

A resume of the musical score of "Cavalcade" reveals compositions that range from the immortal Marche Funebre of Chopin to Noel Coward's own Twentieth Century Blues; from the stately Pomp and Circumstance of Edward Elgar to Arthur Lange's Chaos in Jazzland. Chronologically, it covers a period from 1899 to the present and even forecasts the music of the future.

At pertinent moments the lilting strains of Strauss' Blue Danube and the Emperor Waltz are heard. The mauve "nineties" are recalled by those popular ditties yclept She's Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage and Good-Bye Dolly Gray; also by those popular ballads of England, such as Take Me Back to Yorkshire and I Do Like to Be by the Seaside.

In keeping with the veracious musical chronicle of that era, there is exposed part of an operetta called "Mirabelle," composed by Mr. Coward for one of the big scenes. Written in the now obsolete style which was still prevalent a quarter of a century ago, it is a gently satirical comment on the lyric stage of the period. Coward wrote both the lyrics and music of the piece and engaged Adele Crane, a protege of the great Nellie Melba, to sing the prima donna role.

That popular classic of the early part of the Twentieth Century, Oh! You Beautiful Doll, emerges from obscurity, while the war is covered by Madelon, Mademoiselle from Armentieres, patriotic songs, and the French songs sung by Poilus in the trenches: Aupres de Ma Blonde, and Les Trois Capitaines.

The dominant theme of the musical score is an imposing march, Cavalcade, written by Louis De Francesco and Reginald Berkeley. It is used as an accompaniment to a cavalcade of horsemen symbolizing the passing of each significant era and the inauguration of a new one, and also recurs throughout the picture as an accompaniment to the dramatic action. Incorporated in it is a fate motif symbolical of the major theme of "Cavalcade." It starts with a fanfare, then leads into a flowing majestic melody that is a tonal connotation of the bigness and dignity of the epochal story. Under this imposing theme there is a continually moving, restless motif, suggesting the movements of the symbolical cavalcade.

Sir Edward Elgar's famous military march, Pomp and Circumstance, with its impressive maestoso movement, is heard frequently during many of the background interludes.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY DRAWS TO A close. England is alarmed. South Africa is in revolt. Troops are being rushed to the front. The sentimental ballads and suave waltzes give way to martial music.

Jane Marryot watches her husband march away to the strains of Soldiers of the Queen. The rollicking lilt of The Girl I Left Behind Me and When Johnny Comes Marching Home, old favorites carried over into the nineties from an older day, fill the air.

The cavalcade moves on. It is January

This mellow old favorite is used as a recurring motif of enduring human kindness, good cheer and loyalty.

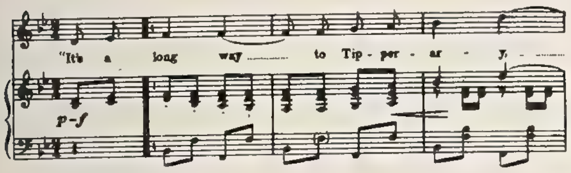
TIPPERARY



Jane Marryot, who, fifteen years before, had seen her husband march off to the Boer War to the strains of Soldiers of the Queen, and When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again, again waves good-bye to her husband to the strains of Tipperary.

of 1901. England mourns. London is silent, save for the deep-throated tolling of bells. Victoria is dead! Throngs of people in somber dress stand mute in the streets. Jane Marryot and her two young boys, Edward and Joe, watch from the balcony of their home. The sound of horses' hoofs beats in slow cadence on the paved streets. Muffled drums. Then, faintly, the rhythmic dirge of majestic music, gradually growing louder. It is the Marche Funebre of Chopin, immortal threnody of immortal genius. The dirge swells into an ecstasy of woe as the cortege approaches. One does not see the cortege—only Jane and her two boys on the balcony, watching silently in homage to the dead Queen. The music gradually diminishes and dies away as the cortege passes on.

WITH THE INEVITABLE CHANGE WROUGHT by the alchemist Time, the music accords. It is 1914. England marshals its forces for the World War. Jane Marryot, who fifteen years before had seen her husband march off to the Boer War to the strains of Soldiers of the Queen, now hears on all sides the exhorting lyrics of the recruiting songs, I'll Make a Man of You, Your King and Country Want You, and Military Mary Ann. Again her husband, now her oldest boy, march away, keeping step to the insistent rhythm of Keep the Home Fires Burning and Tipperary, that leads to Belleau Wood, to Flanders Field—to Argonne.

WAR RAGES. HELL FOLLOWS HIM WHO sits upon the white horse. Five years of cataclysmic strife, epitomized on the screen by photographic multiple exposure—marching, fighting, maddened men; zooming cannon, shrieking shell, pestilential gas—all jumbled into a heterogeneous mass of visualized horror. The music goes mad—a rampage of polyphonic conflict. God Save the King! Deutschland Uber Alles! Marseillaise! Yankee Doodle! Over There! La Brabanconne! A chaos of sound and fury—an orgy of dissonance! The nations rage together, and the gods of cacophony rend the earth! Here, surely, is a tone-picture of fantastic power.

NOVEMBER 11, 1918. THE ARMISTICE. England — London — jubilates. Trafalgar Square a milling throng of joy-mad people. But England is England, and a Briton is proud of his innate dignity; hence the musical background of this unrestraint, the maestoso of Pomp and Circumstance. This scene might have been interpreted with realistic raucous revelry, and would have lost something significant in its transcription.

THE TEMPO OF LIFE BECOMES MORE RAPID, more disjointed. It gains in speed what it loses in reserve and dignity. The Jazz Age canters in with moan of saxophone, blare of cornet, groan of trombone and the thud of jungle-drum. Rhythmic noise runs amuck to keep pace with the jazz-hoofing era, scoffing at restraint, at conventions, at traditions. The Twentieth Century Blues, typical of the age, is rampant. Chaos in Jazzland has its innings. The revolt of the "lower classes" is mirrored by the revolt of music to older standards. The cycle of this thing called civilization, for three decades of English life, is brought to date.

OH, YOU BEAUTIFUL DOLL

Oh! you beau-ti-ful doll, you great, big beau-ti-ful doll!

This delectable ballad is of a vintage in the decade following the 'gay nineties.' It reveals the fact that the Twentieth Century was beginning to 'loosen up' in its slant on life.

A TOUCH OF DEEP PATHOS, MORE POIGNANTLY realistic by its historic verity, is attained in the night scene on the Titanic just a few hours before the disaster. Young Edward Marryot and his newly wedded wife, on their honeymoon, are conversing alone on deck. Just before they walk out of the scene, the strains of Nearer My God to Thee are heard softly underscored. It crescendos into a closeup of a life preserver lettered: "S. S. Titanic."

THE FOX FILM COMPANY THROUGH ITS chief of production, Winfield Sheehan, is responsible for a notable and distinctive achievement in advancing motion picture art, by utilizing so discerningly the various media of the audible screen. It points the way to a new and greater era of sound screen production in which music will assume its rightful function.

It is also evident that Frank Lloyd, director, and Reginald Berkeley, who made the screen adaptation of Noel Coward's great stage play, were in close accord in translating the author's ideas to film.

Louis De Francesco, Fox musical director, and his able corps of assistants, have done nobly by the musical score. It is, indeed, something of tremendous import to the too-much neglected art of co-relating picture and music in photoplay production.

A NEW TECHNIQUE, RHYTHMIC DIALOGUE

On February 4, 1928, "The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson, opened on Broadway, and brought to the screen a new day and an entirely new technique. On February 9, 1933, was opened "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum," starring Al Jolson and released by United Artists, and bringing to the screen what is purported to be a new technique in the talking picture. This so-called "rhythmic" motion picture, wherein the players render their lines in musical lyrics, or "rhythmic dialogue," is credited to Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, composers of stage and screen material. It is said that 85 per cent of the picture is done in "rhythmic dialogue." Disagreeing, apparently, with the conception that musical comedy song and dance of the stage variety are successful additions to the talking picture, Mr. Hart says, "When a singer steps in front of a microphone, stands still and has his lips photographed mouthing a song, the action is stopped. What was dynamic suddenly becomes static, and the story is retarded, never again to gain its full strength of life."

Not Disposing of Rights

Reports that negotiations had been held for a possible Paramount talking version of "The Merry Widow," starring Jeanette MacDonald with Ernst Lubitsch directing, brought a statement this week from MGM that it had not disposed of talking picture rights to the play and that it is anticipated MGM itself will make it as a talker some time in the near future. MGM's silent version, directed by Erich von Stroheim, was released Aug. 30, 1925.

send out agreements for deposits. Morton L. Deitch, 141 Broadway, is handling details. A third committee, seeking deposits of Paramount Publix bonds, and headed by Frank A. Vanderlip, is expected to forward agreements to bondholders late this week. Meanwhile, Joab H. Banton, former New York prosecutor, was completing organization of another committee.

Co-receiver Hilles moved into offices on the eleventh floor of Paramount's headquarters at Times Square, and immediately set about with Mr. Zukor gathering economic and operating facts pertaining to the situation. This they interrupted frequently to disband certain departments. Several hundred Paramount workers were given notices of dismissal.

The receivers are studying personnel contracts and other corporate matters for adjustment. The court vests in receivers the right to affirm or disaffirm all contractual obligations. This includes film deals with other distributors, which at the moment is the subject of much discussion in the executive chambers of these other companies. There has been no indication as to the nature of new booking deals which will be proposed by the receivers. Publix theatres, in the meantime, are continuing to pay Paramount, MGM, Warners, Universal and others on the basis of existing rental contracts.

One immediate effect of the RKO and Paramount Publix receiverships was the C. O. D.'ing of prints by many of the large distributors.

Rental Burdens, $17,000,000

"The receivership will relieve the parent company of the burden of fixed charges and also of rentals on theatres, which, in 1932, amounted to over $17,000,000," said Wall Street Journal on Tuesday. "Gross income," it was said, "will, of course, be greatly reduced by the loss of the theatre properties, which, however, last year were the main cause of losses."

"Under ordinary operating conditions, it should be possible for the producing and distributing companies to operate at a profit. One of the chief problems in rehabilitating the company and keeping up income will be to maintain the quality and number of film productions and to obtain funds for next season's productions," the publication said.

While home office executives were busy with economic problems, Emanuel Cohen, vice-president in charge of production, traveled from the studios at Hollywood to La Quinta, in the desert, where Bayard Veiller, Russell Holman, Louis Lighton, George P. Putnam, E. Lloyd Sheldon and others of his production staff talked about new production. They drew up a preliminary outline of next season's features and this will be rounded out in time for presentation to the sales convention, which tentatively has been set for May, in Hollywood.

A. M. Botsford has been named assistant to Mr. Cohen.

The receivers began early in the week to protect the interests of the corporation in the field. Mr. Hilles and Mr. Zukor petitioned the federal courts at Chicago and Los Angeles for ancillary receivers. They were appointed by U. S. district courts in both districts to act as co-receivers over Paramount properties within the jurisdiction of each. Balaban & Katz, which is owned by the corporation, operates in the Chicago territory, while talent contracts and studio properties are assets in the southern California district.

William Boal, of New York, withdrew his receivership petition in Los Angeles.

Supreme Court Justice Lydon withheld action on a petition for receivers for the 23 features produced by Paramount and said to have been transferred to Film Producing Corp., a subsidiary, supposedly as collateral for bank loans. At a hearing on a suit brought by Robert S. Levy, Judge Lydon said an injunction would be sufficient protection for the films.

Henry Herzbrun, Paramount legal advisor, left the Coast for New York this week. It is expected he will make arrangements for the transfer of players' and directors' contracts from the Paramount Publix Corporation to Paramount Productions, Inc., the production subsidiary.

Although many contract persons in Hollywood are said to have refused to accept pay checks from Paramount Productions, Inc., on the ground that it might affect the status of their contracts with the parent corporation, the matter is reported to have been adjusted by permitting an endorsement "accepted in payment for services under Paramount Publix contract," to be stamped upon the Paramount Productions check.

George P. Putnam and Russell Holman, members of Paramount's story council, also left the Coast this week.

Meanwhile, William Bundy Bartels was appointed last Thursday as ancillary receiver for Paramount Publix in Ohio, including Paramount Distributing Corp. Coincidentally, Judge Hough rescinded an order impounding the company's bank funds. Mr. Bartels is also receiver for Publix in Ohio. The situation in that territory will remain in statu quo until a hearing in a few days.

A hearing on William Boal's New Jersey petition for receivers for Paramount properties in that state was postponed Monday until next week. Publix this week darkened 14 New Jersey theatres, 11 of which were formerly operated by Walter Reade, who has been negotiating for re-possession.

Completing Decentralization

Meanwhile, at Publix headquarters in New York, Sam Dembow and Leo Spitz were working with George Topliff, representing Irving Trust, in charge of Public bankruptcy proceedings. The trio were rapidly completing decentralization of the circuit, and while Publix will continue to maintain headquarters in New York, only a skeleton force will be retained. George Walsh was returned to the Comerford division in Pennsylvania, and Leon Netter, Louis Notarius and Louis Snyder will be sent to the field.

Reorganization or liquidation of the many Publix subsidiaries now in receivership will be undertaken at once by Irving Trust. Conferences are being held daily with landlords for purposes of rental reductions. In many territories, leases will be disaffirmed.

Under Judge Bondy's orders making Irving Trust temporary receiver in bankruptcy for Publix Enterprises, the bank is authorized to continue the business of that corporation for 30 days, ending February 25.

During the week, E. M. Loew in Boston sued six Paramount Publix theatre units for $2,000,000, alleging monopoly. The divisions are all in New England.

Charging failure to meet payments due on theatre deals, Louis Marcus filed suit for $88,750 in Salt Lake City.

Olympia Theatres, a subsidiary operating about 50 houses out of Boston, was placed in receivership, and Harry LeBaron Sampson and Samuel Pinanski were named temporary receivers. A hearing will be held Friday.

Al Reuben, sportsman, was named receiver for Publix Ohio Theatres, and at a hearing at Boston in the case of Rollins J. Levin, Homer Albers, dean of the Boston University Law School, was appointed ancillary receiver for Paramount Publix in that district by Federal Judge Hugh D. McLellan. He will act in cooperation with Charles D. Hilles and Adolph Zukor. Bonds of $10,000 each were ordered for the three.

Warner Reports $1,746,761 Loss

Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and subsidiary companies have reported a net operating loss of $1,746,761 for the 13 weeks ended November 26, 1932, after deducting all charges, including interest, amortization and depreciation. This compares with a net operating loss of $1,848,868 for the corresponding period of the previous year, and a net operating loss of $5,852,298, including a special writedown on film of $1,368,524, for quarter ended August 27, 1932.

After allowing for a profit of $966,645 arising from the retirement of debentures and subsidiaries' funded indebtedness, the net loss for the quarter ended November 26, 1932, equaled $780,116. For that 13-week period net profit from operations before amortization and depreciation of properties and before allowing for the profit arising from the retirement of the funded indebtedness was $445,431.

The company has anticipated retirement of $1,200,000 of the $1,287,500 optional six per cent convertible debentures required for the purchase fund on August 1, 1933. The financial statement shows current assets of $14,881,360, including $2,732,029 in cash, as compared with total current liabilities of $12,743,188.

Industry Building More Solidly: Hays

Financial readjustment problems of the industry are being met in an orderly as well as organized manner and out of them will come a "more solid foundation of permanence and public respect," in the opinion of Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Commenting upon current developments Mr. Hays pointed out that the standard of product quality has improved, thus "widening the market for entertainment of the better kind," while studio costs were being changed to the necessitated lower scale.

"Our trouble today," he said, "is a sharply reduced rate of attendance, not a largely reduced public," and a revamping of the business to the conditions "fastened on it by the international depression."

To Discuss Receivership Effects on Independents

The effect of receiverships on independent exhibitors will be discussed at a meeting in New York next week of the heads of all unaffiliated circuits in the metropolitan area, according to Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the T. O. C. C.

Local independents are determined to take whatever action is necessary to guard their investments, Mr. O'Reilly said this week.

Former MPTO Head Dies

Ed P. Smith, Des Moines theatre owner, for many years president of the Iowa MPTO, died this week. Mr. Smith organized the Iowa Theatre Owners' Association, first organization of its kind in the state.

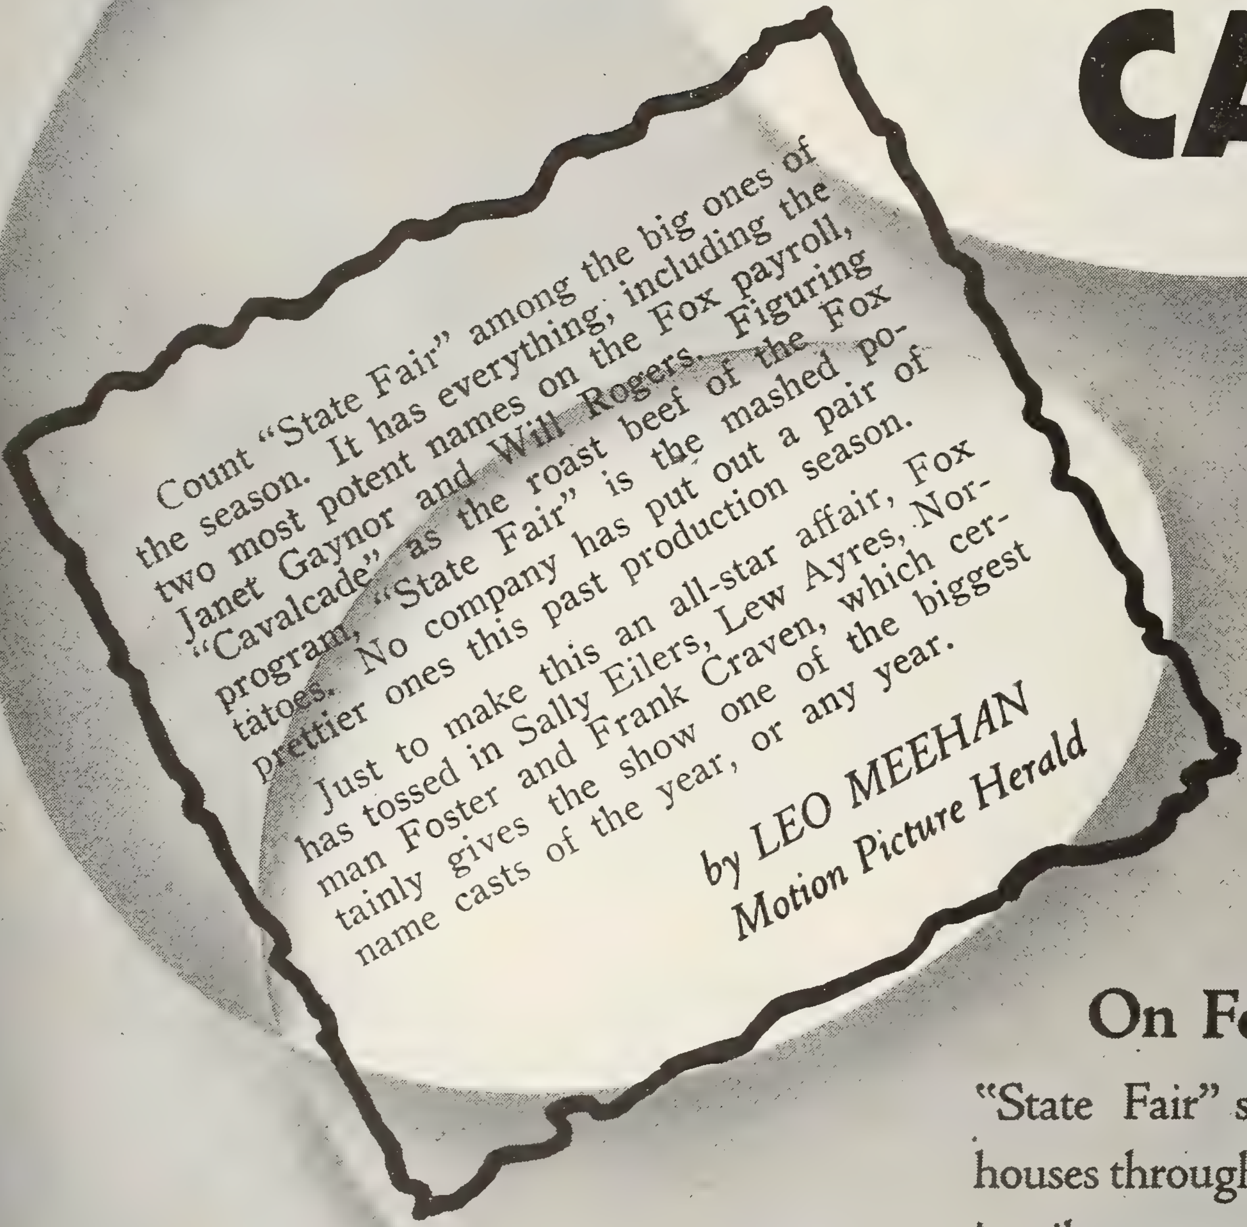
SEASON'S GREATEST CAST



Count "State Fair" among the big ones of the season. It has everything, including the two most potent names on the Fox payroll, Janet Gaynor and Will Rogers. Figuring "Cavalcade" as the roast beef of the Fox program, "State Fair" is the mashed potatoes. No company has put out a pair of prettier ones this past production season.

Just to make this an all-star affair, Fox has tossed in Sally Eilers, Lew Ayres, Norman Foster and Frank Craven, which certainly gives the show one of the biggest name casts of the year, or any year.

DIX AND BARRYMORE

Meehan Finds Top Characterizations in "The Great Jasper" and "Topaze," Both from RKO Radio

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

With everyone on the lot wondering what is to happen to them, who is production boss, what next year's program is to be, RKO-Radio in the past week has turned out two of the most interesting pictures the studio has made this season. One stars Richard Dix, the other John Barrymore. Both stress the laughs, which indicates that in show business you've got to make 'em laugh, or cry, no matter what your personal frame of mind may be. And coming up next, Radio has "King Kong," which the production staff to a man believes will be one of the year's sensations.

In "The Great Jasper" Dix once more travels life from youth to old age, dying comfortably with the assurance to his wife that when he is among the angels at least she will know he is being true to her. For Jasper was a man who took his fun where he could find it, and he managed to find it anywhere—especially with the ladies. The Dix fans should be pleased with the excellent characterization he gives, and there is plenty of lively interest maintained throughout his amazing career as a fourflusher. Florence Eldridge, who is Mrs. Fredric March, appears as the long-suffering wife, and Wera Engels, Radio's new importation from Germany, is the wife of the street railway president. Mostly, however, it is a Dix picture.

John Barrymore at His Best

"Topaze" presents John Barrymore in one of the most delightful comedy characterizations of his entire film career. Just as "The Great Jasper" is almost entirely Richard Dix, so this one is mostly Barrymore, and at his best. It is from a French comedy, and Barrymore plays a simple-minded school teacher who believes all the copybook maxims about honesty being the best policy, until he loses his job for being honest, makes a fortune by unwittingly lending himself to a shady promotion scheme. The picture is altogether too light and frothy to give you an adequate idea of the fun Barrymore creates, but there are plenty of amusing situations and clever dialogue. It is beautifully mounted and photographed, and there is Myrna Loy for decorative purposes. Jackie Searl, screen bad bad, contributes effectively to the merriment, and so does Jobyna Howland as his aristocratic mother. "Topaze" is inclined to sophistication but it is most effectively done.

Critics' raves of the week go to a British Gaumont picture, "Be Mine Tonight," which is to be released in America by Universal. As a musifilm it is one of the best ever produced by consensus of the Hollywood writing fraternity, including Edwin Schallert of the Los Angeles Times, who is an important West Coast music critic as well as motion picture paragrapher. It seems to overcome most all of the objections to combinations of singing and story telling, and the vocal genius of one—lookout for your jaw!—Jan Kiepura, a Polish grand opera star, never has been equalled in the films with the possible exception of Lawrence Tibbett. "Be Mine Tonight" is a happy combination of grand opera, light opera, comic opera, and in addition to all this its scenic backgrounds in the Alps on the Italian-Swiss border are indescribably beautiful. Smartly the director, Anatol Litwak, gives them to you to look at instead of the singer's tonsils. The musical numbers are introduced as a part of the story in such a manner as to become a logical part of the action, obviating the usual slowing down.

MGM First with Beer Story

MGM is to the finish line first with a beer story, out of the several which are in the offing. It features Jimmy Durante and Buster Keaton under the title of "What, No Beer?" No need to preview it for your local W. C. T. U., but if your town voted for the return of suds there should be some customers for this number. Mostly, it is a lote of farce comedy, though the last reel, as it was previewed, goes pretty strong on the beer propaganda.

It is Keaton's last picture under his MGM contract, by the way, and he intends touring South America, or is it South Africa, before deciding who gets his funereal hilarity next. I note Gus McCarthy suggests you might fix your lobby to resemble a bar for this one. If you serve the real McCoy let Gus and me know in time, will ya? I don't see why, though, Gus didn't suggest the possibilities of a tieup with the bootleggers.

Busy week for one Lee Tracy, the boy whose mother must have rocked him in an electric chair. Universal presented him in "Private Jones" and MGM, where he now draws his more or less modest weekly stipend after cutting up variously for Warners, Universal, Radio and Columbia, introduces him under the Lion banner in "Clear All Wires."

"Private Jones" and his philosophy may get a cheer from the bonus army and from those who believe that making the world safe for the Democrats back there in 1917-18 was just a lot of hooey. If Junior Laemmle had made it in 1918 he would have been shot for treason, which probably proves that treason is all a state of mind, or emotions, because Private Jones' razzing of his superiors and the Government that drafts him excites no visions of a firing squad in these breadline times.

In "Clear All Wires" for Metro, Tracy appears as a sort of Floyd Gibbons type of foreign correspondent, a headline hunter who wants his name included in the headlines at all costs. Tracy manufactures news so lurid as to insure he will become world famous. Not that we would accuse the famous Mr. Gibbons of resorting to fictionized news—of course not—the similarity is in the "high-powered" type of character rather than the technique used. Well, anyhow, be that as it may, Tracy is more amusing for your money than Gibbons. Benita Hume, another recent British importation, makes her first American appearance.

TOOTHPASTE AND THE OLD ROXY

The Seventh Avenue Roxy, by means of a 35-cent top admission price and two-for-one giveaways in the form of toothpaste cartons, is slowly pulling itself out of the red, according to Howard S. Cullman, the receiver.

Every person presenting an empty Kolynos toothpaste carton is given a free ticket, except for the 10-cent tax attached. There were 158,000 admissions for the week ended February 4, out of which 56,000 were let in free.

"The week before, the number of paid admissions was considerably less," said Mr. Cullman. "This week shows that people are really more interested in the low top price than in the idea of getting in for nothing."

The toothpaste carton policy will end this week.

Architect Criticizes Radio City Theatres

Criticism of the three-mezzanine scheme employed in the designs of both the Music Hall and the RKO Roxy in Radio City, is voiced by Ben Schlanger, theatre architect, in an article in Better Theatres, published with this issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. In general Mr. Schlanger is critical of the designs of the two theatres, both of which now present motion pictures, contending that neither is architecturally adapted to screen entertainment.

Among other features in this issue of Better Theatres, S. Charles Lee, prominent theatre architect of Los Angeles, begins a series of three articles on his recent observations of theatres and show business in Europe.

Universal to Offer Contract by March 1

Universal has begun final preparation for placing in effect the new optional standard licensing agreement between February 15 and March 1. Fox made the agreement available last week. Also by March 1 are expected to be settled Universal's exceptions to the national appeals board.

Fox initiated the new contract in forms especially for "State Fair" and "Cavalcade," offered as specials. Regular forms will be available to exhibitors desiring them within a few weeks, according to Felix Jenkins, Fox counsel.

One of New York's better known process servers hunted unsuccessfully for days for an executive of Educational-KBS, who was wanted as a witness in the case of an exhibitor against another distributor. Finally, last Saturday, he stormed the official's office in the Paramount building and demanded information as to his whereabouts. "Sorry," replied a secretary, "but we have just finished physical merging with Fox, and they're all out celebrating."

During his days of service in the classified advertising department of Portland's Oregonian, Clark Gable, who was then known as plain "Bill," had occasion at one time to help a wealthy Portland matron search the "lost and found" columns for trace of a valuable object she had lost. The search was successful, and the matron, who still resides in Portland, rewarded the future screen hero with a nice, crisp $5 bill. Gable dashed to the cashier and asked whether The Oregonian permitted employes to accept tips. She told him to keep it. The cashier, Miss Alice Noe, is still in the classified department. February 7th was the posthumous birthday of Charles Dickens. On that day an airplane zoomed into the environs of John Nance Garner's Texas home, carrying as its sole passenger an English bull pup named "Oliver Twist," sent by Trem Carr, of Monogram Pictures, which just completed a talker version of Charles Dickens' masterpiece, "Oliver Twist." This gesture in no way invalidates the "Buy American" campaign. The pup came as a gift.

WILLIAM FOX PHILOSOPHIZES

This is the time of year when philosophers and industrialists bask in the warm sun of Miami Beach. One philosopher, industriously gathering health under Florida's ultra rays, was smiling the other day as he talked to Al Jolson. The smiling one is William Fox, whom we all know in connection with some early motion picture activities.

Said he, "They absolutely kicked me out of the moving picture business, FORCED ME to take twenty million dollars in cash and $500,000 a year salary for a good many years. I had no choice in the matter, they just FORCED ME."

William Hearst's Arthur Brisbane, who reported the incident, said that Mr. Fox's smile was absolutely genuine.

MERLIN HALL AYLESWORTH governs the destinies of two highly competitive organizations, which in itself is a rarity in American industry. Mr. Aylesworth's NBC seeks to keep entertainment lovers at home by the fireside a-dialing; RKO tries to pull 'em out to the box office. Both hope to do a good job. In this connection, President Aylesworth frequently appears publicly extolling the merits of one company to the exclusion of the other.

Early Friday evening, Mr. Aylesworth appeared on the speakers' platform at the swanky Waldorf-Astoria on Park Avenue, to tell 700 dignified and distinguished members of the National Institute of Social Sciences how great and how many are the social effects of broadcasting. Owen D. Young sat on the sidelines. It was an impressive tribute to the air.

Caesar offered as a reward to his victorious legions the glory of Roman citizenship; Napoleon compensated those whom he conquered with the privilege of becoming citizens of France. Without firing a gun, Mr. Aylesworth said his radio is making of the sheep herders on the Western Plains and the dweller in the crowded city, enlightened citizens of the world.

That's what exhibitors are complaining about.

Topaze

(RKO Radio)

Comedy

A delightful comedy, finely acted, artistically directed, complete in the necessary production details to insure story coherence and audience understanding, "Topaze" features John Barrymore in his most pleasing comedy role in many moons. It's one of those shows so expertly handled in every angle that it gripped the preview audience. Alive with a different brand of human interest comedy, it tends to the dramatic occasionally, and continually stimulates curiosity, but its tempo and construction are such that the story never becomes other than it is intended to be—a comedy. In short, while the Barrymore personality and artistry predominate, it's entertainment that will permit plenty of enthusiastic boasting.

The locale is Paris. The time is the present. Barrymore, cast in the role of teacher in a boys' school, is given to the philosophy that the old copy book platitude provides the best policy for his juvenile charges. "Honesty is the best policy" is his chief fetish, but he is bedevilled by his class, of which the impish Charlemagne is the most brazen rascal. Losing his position, when he marks Charlemagne as he should be marked with a raft of zeros—an interlude which allows the Baroness to indulge in more of her Shakespearean dramatics, Topaze gets a lucky break when summoned to the apartment of Coco (the mistress of the Baron), he meets the high pressure health water promoter, the Baron, who is trying to foist a phony temperance-health drink on the nation.

Returning the following morning, he is again a credulous victim of the Baron's rapid-fire talk, but following his ceremonious presentation with the badge of the "Double Palms" the fuzzy caterpillar emerges from the cocoon a gaudy moth, with a headful of ultra modern business ideas for his own personal advancement.

The kind of fun that causes people to laugh at the misfortunes of others is the highlight of "Topaze." The realism is made potent by Barrymore's skillful handling of his role that caused the audience to interrupt the picture several times with hearty applause. In this connection, while there is plenty of showmanship advertising suggested by the theme of the show, its action and dialogue, it would seem that a healthy shouting of the Barrymore name based on the idea that it's a long time since he has been seen in such a charming part should be the main exploitation angle. This in view of the "What The Picture Did For Me" reports which indicate that the name has not been such a powerful draw in some places recently. In "Topaze," Barrymore is the character that his "fans" like.

"Topaze" has the elements that will intrigue both the youths and the grown-ups.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Great Jasper

(RKO Radio)

Domestic Drama

This domestic drama, whose story covers a period of 20-odd years, held the attention of the preview audience. Once the crowd caught the drift of its theme, which presents Jasper Horn in the paradoxical role of a handsome, philandering libertine, who while enjoying his wild-oats life to the fullest also was thoroughly friendly to his wife and little son, the patrons followed his gad-about career from horse-car drivers to world famous fortune teller, who read for "ladies only" with interest.

Human interest, which generates a rather broad comedy twist, is the keynote. The audience is let in on the fact that Jasper likes the gay things in life. Also it knows that his wife, Jenny, is wise to as well as disgusted with his carryings on and fearful of what they will lead to. It's evident from the moment he first meets Norma, wife of his aged boss, that she is going to be another lady added to his string.

Then the story veers. Unable to effect an understanding with his wife after an indiscretion which informs the audience that Jasper is the father of Norma's eleven year old son, he takes his own boy to Atlantic City. There he clicks with Madam Talma, a fortuneteller, who, when she dies, leaves her business to him. His wife joins him, but when she learns what kind of career he is following, she quits for good and takes Andrew with her. They both prosper, Jennie running a restaurant and Jasper, as Jasper the Great, peer of all fortune tellers.

The children grow up. Andrew is in love with Sylvia. Roger returns to America as a great orchestra leader and after a gay evening which sees Jasper and Norma together again, Roger takes Sylvia to the old country home, where he tries to put on the same kind of an act that characterized all his father's relations with women. Jasper vainly tries to tell the boy not to follow in his footsteps, but then suffers a stroke. The climax is a reunion of Jasper, Jenny and Andrew, with the father issuing a warning to the boy and consoling him on his loss of Sylvia by proclaiming that "it's all for the best." Then his death.

The story is glamorous and quite exciting. Without being too evident, there is a vein of suspense that can be counted upon to maintain continued interest. Dix, heretofore identified with he-man roles, is cast as a virile ladies' man, a feature which will permit some unusual advertising copy. Also it presents a new player, Wera Engels, which may answer partly the demand for new faces. While the story is somewhat episodic, the manner in which its main theme is built around Horn and his family gives it a coherence that will be readily understood. Likewise, this treatment gives it an appeal that should interest both men and women.

The fortune telling angle permits of some catchy exploitation, and this should be combined with the name of Dix. The picture should be good for strong matinee business by making heavy appeal to the feminine element. The sexy theme, however, lifts it out of the class of children's entertainment.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

What, No Beer?

(MGM)

Comedy

As a ribald comedy, dealing with such a timely subject as the return of beer, the picture somehow fails to capture all the hilarious sparkle that its title and the subject of its theme ordinarily would suggest. True, it is funny enough and foolish enough, as one would gather from a combination of Keaton and Durante in the leading roles, and it is plenty lively, confined to the antics of this pair and their immediate associates as brewers who enthusiastically take the results of the recent elections as mandates for breweries to supply a thirsty nation with foaming schooners. The climax, however, assumes an anticipated realization air that may not make such a hit with patrons in the smaller towns and more rural sections. It shows Butts and Potts as the proprietors of a gorgeous legitimately operated beer garden, where everybody is happy and glad that the eighteenth Amendment and Volstead Act are no more.

Here's how the story goes. On Potts' urging, Elmer buys an old brewery. They make beer with homebrew recipes, with hilarious and laugh provoking results. They're arrested, but when the evidence against them turns out to be anything but beer, they are released; after which the duo gets mixed up in the affairs of a couple of beer gangs, which serves as an opportunity for Elmer to fall in love with Hortense, the moll of the head racketeer (Lorado).

Naturally a picture of this type calls for a circus style of campaign that accentuates fun and frivolity. Caricature advertising combining art of the leading players and the title, plus catch lines of strong local significance, are necessary. Erecting replica bars in lobbies and foyers and piling beer kegs on the sidewalk will be okay in spots where the anti-prohibition sentiment is strong or in places where you can convince your patrons that it's all in fun. This also with the kindred gags of loading trucks with kegs, properly bannering them and send them around the streets, the serving of free near-beer and so on. In the pro-dry areas, capitalize on the comedy angle and the strength of the cast names. Forestall any objections by driving home the idea that the whole thing is just a hokum farce.

Handled properly, the picture should find its greatest popularity in the larger cities and in other communities where the populace is liberal minded.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Man Braucht Kein Geld

His Majesty, King Ballyhoo

(Capital)

Comedy-Drama

An occasionally amusing satire on the unlimited possibilities of selling the public on an idea, this all-German film must necessarily rely for its selling value on those communities where the exhibitor is in a position to draw upon a German-speaking patronage. The situations in themselves are hardly sufficiently amusing, much of the humor being dependent upon the dialogue and its rendition.

Furthermore, the film makes no use of superimposed English translation of dialogue, to aid the person lacking a knowledge of the language in appreciation of the story. For these reasons, then, the picture becomes limited in appeal.

A family is penniless due to the failure of certain oil wells, and as a consequence also the local bank has failed and unemployment has struck the community severely. The family thinks of an uncle in America, supposed to be a millionaire, and he is invited to visit his German relatives. The young bank clerk spends his last money on what is to be a royal welcome for the uncle, but it is discovered on his arrival that he has only a $10 gold piece as his fortune. The bank clerk conceives of a brilliant idea, to have the uncle pose as a millionaire. It works and the uncle, under the tutelage of the smart young clerk, is put up at the town's best hotel, accorded unlimited credit. The community hits a boon stride, the wells work again and the town grows astonishingly into a thriving city.

Suddenly the ruse is discovered, the uncle's conspicuous lack of millions is unearthed, and there is talk of jail proceedings by the mayor. But the clerk again saves the day, pointing out that the results attained through the hoax make it absurd to indicate generally that the uncle was not a millionaire.

Best performances are from Hans Moser as the uncle, Heinz Ruehmann as the clerk. Hedy Kiesler, as the daughter, is not only capable, but extremely attractive. This is an amusing, well-handled film for those who can understand the language.—AARONSON, New York.

They Just Had To Get Married

(Universal)

Comedy

In this typical Pitts-Summerville comedy audiences will find most of its entertainment confined to the first half of the picture. To that point it's the hilarious delineation of the romance between a parlor maid and a butler, whose wealthy employer dies and leaves them his entire estate, much to the chagrin and disappointment of the assembled relatives.

The preview audience with high glee greeted the situation in the second reel as the newly wed couple prepare to retire on their nuptial night, with their pantomimed embarrassment as each tries to get the other to start undressing first.

Then the picture takes on a society tinge into which is injected a jealous husband angle as Lola Montrose seeks to vamp Sam, while her husband confides in the ex-butler what he will do if he can only find the man who is breaking up his home.

After removing Lola's stockings, which scene is witnessed by Molly in shadowgraph, Sam is put on the spot later when, during a speech, he takes the hosiery out of his pocket to wipe his worried brow. Unable to make up with Molly, he leaves home and is missing for months until Lola finds him working as a waiter in a cafe. Then comes the explanation and the reconciliation.

While there are some clever comedy scenes interspersed throughout the second half of the picture, the audience took especially to the second reel.

Probably the best way to create interest is through liberal display of the two lead names, backed up by the outstanding personalities that appear in the cast—Roland Young, Veree Teesdale, Robert Greig (the fat butler), Fifi Dorsay, C. Aubrey Smith and David Landau.

One novel twist is explained in a subtitle permitting the characters to speak their real thoughts after they have voiced their formal dialogue. This gag clicked well.

While the title is rather lengthy, it can be used cleverly in many ways in conjunction with the established reputations of Zasu Pitts and Slim Summerville.

Hardly of the strength to make much of an impression in the larger first-run houses, it will be necessary for operators of neighborhood and smaller town theatres to concoct original but not too expensive campaigns to make "They Just Had to Get Married" get over average program picture figures.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Big Stampede

(Warner)

Outdoor Melodrama

New Mexico and cattle rustling, there's the combination of setting and theme for a vigorous production into which John Wayne's drawl and deliberate style of movement are fitted to effect a likable picture, made-to-order for theatres that draw upon folk from and near the so-called open spaces. It is primarily masculine, but there is something of romance for the women in Mae Madison's part as the daughter of the settler, and as for the children—they yelled their unqualified endorsement at the Saturday afternoon showing. The impression that lasted longest was the bawling of the cattle during the stampede—an evidence of how realistically that phase was recorded.

There is more than this realism. Luis Alberni supplies a richness of comedy in his role as Sonora Joe, the more or less small-time and romantic rustler whom John Wayne drafts as a deputy to snare the larger fry, Sam Crew, whom Noah Beery portrays with sufficient boldness. Indeed, throughout the new director, Tenny Wright, had injected a strain of comedy that saves the villainy of the melodrama from boiling over into unintended burlesque.

Of the leading names, Wayne's should carry some weight in the billing, in recollection of "The Big Trail," "Arizona," "Ride Him, Cowboy," and others. So, too, with Beery. And you may promise your patrons something new, and pleasing, in the Alberni role.

In assuring the community that the production is chockful of action you will not be overstating your case, for there's a generous quantity of it right down to the capture of Arizona (Paul Hurst), bad man for Beery. Likewise the picture is good fare for the youngsters.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Your Technocracy and Mine

(Ward Productions)

Better Comedy

First of a new series of six short subjects, planned by a company headed by Edward F. Stevenson, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York. The story is a clever and timely burlesque of technocracy and presents Bob Benchley, who commits himself commendably in adding a few more words to the general confusion. The dialogue is good. A sub-caption introduces "Bob" as "an expert" on technocracy "who isn't quite sure what it's all about himself." Various meaningless charts and cleverly inserted stock shots of unrelated subjects add considerably to the merriment, which an unsuspecting audience at a trial theatre screening appeared to enjoy. Benchley probably will star in the others of the series. It's quite different. Running time, 9½ minutes.

I Know Everybody

Fair

The tabloidly popular Walter Winchell, columnist, makes a motion picture appearance, the chief distinction of which is the fact that he is Walter Winchell. Along the line that he "knows everybody and everybody's racket," Winchell introduces to a young girl of chance acquaintance Paul Whiteman, Ruth Etting, Arthur Tracy, Nick Kenny, Irene Taylor and several others. The fact that the girl is a notorious crook turns the laugh on Winchell and his "I know everybody" boast. That stock phrase of the subject is repeated a tiresome number of times.—Running time, 21 minutes.

TOM SPRY—VETERAN

Started Distribution with Mayer 19 Years Ago; No Film Man in New England Is Better Known

Twenty-eight years ago Thomas B. Spry traveled to Boston to marry. That was the beginning of his becoming a New Englander. The reason why he is still in New England is that he has turned down any business propositions which would, or might, take him away from the northeast corner of Uncle Sam's domains.

Nineteen years ago he became identified with the motion picture industry in New England. He has been a fixture, and a leader, in Boston's film district ever since. He has been feted at many gatherings of film celebrities from all parts of the world. No man is better known in New England film circles and no man is a bigger booster for New England, its people and its theatres, than Tom Spry.

Before the days of motion pictures, Mr. Spry was on the road with Murray & Mack, Klaw & Erlanger, and as manager for many of the leading vaudeville teams of the time. He never played before the footlights but he told the world in advance the best acts that were coming to town. For a quarter of a century his home was where he hung his hat at night.

When Mr. Spry decided to settle down and have a place of abode of his own he became associated with Louis B. Mayer and they opened a distributing agency for motion pictures in Boston, first under the name of Louis B. Mayer and later as the American Feature Film Company. The film district has grown around that original exchange.

Messrs. Mayer and Spry had a small office in those early days. Mr. Mayer had charge of the office and of the purchase of pictures. Mr. Spry was the salesman and disposed of the product to the then few motion picture theatres in all sections of New England.

The principles which Mayer and Spry laid down for the handling and distribution of films are still followed in New England. They have grown far beyond the fondest dreams of these two men; they have expanded until a small army is now engaged in the business of distribution, but the same system used at that time is in use today.

As the business grew Mr. Spry became the New England manager of the exchange and Mr. Mayer's righthand man, and the association continued until Mr. Mayer entered the producing field and left Boston in charge of Mr. Spry.

For some years they held the Metro franchise for New England. Then Nathan Gordon, owner of the first New England circuit of theatres, 17 or 18 in number, with Boston as the nucleus, became associated with Mr. Mayer under the name of Gordon & Mayer Film Company. Later came the early mergers and First National was formed, and Gordon & Mayer merged with it. Mr. Gordon was one of the original twenty-six franchise holders in First National and had the entire New England territory.

Mr. Spry became the active manager for First National at that time and he since has followed the fortunes of that company. First National was the first of the big distributors to build its own exchange in Boston, at Church and Piedmont. It is the geographical center of the Film District. Here Mr. Spry held sway until Warner Brothers—First National and Vitaphone amalgamated, when larger quarters were required and the present exchange was built at 131 Arlington street.

Thomas B. Spry is one of the probably very few long-time exchange managers who never has attempted to own or operate a theatre of his own. He never had any desire to do so, but he has preferred to "stick to his last" in the distribution phase of the business. He has turned down many offers to enter larger fields in New York and in other parts of the country—he is a keen student of human nature and he loves New England.

Now, as manager of the New England territory for Warner, Mr. Spry has the distinction of being the oldest in point of service in the group holding managerial positions in Boston. He has watched the development of the exhibitor end of the business from the independent to the circuit, and is now witnessing the decentralizing of the circuit with the independents again in the ascendancy.

Michigan Owners Consider Establishment of New MPTO

The establishment of an organization of motion picture theatre owners is being considered in Michigan, with W. S. Butterfield, president of the Michigan circuit bearing his name, concerned in its formation. According to Mr. Butterfield the undertaking is being considered on the solicitation of 50 independent Michigan exhibitors.

The organization will aim to function in harmony with all MPTO units and with the Michigan Allied group. The intention of the organization will be to attempt to iron out difficulties existing between independent exhibitors and the producers. Exhibitors of Michigan are currently being canvassed for membership.

MPTOA Board To Choose Lightman Successor March 1

The board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will meet March 1 at either Chicago or Milwaukee to select a successor to M. A. Lightman, president, who will resign shortly.

Mr. Lightman, in Memphis last week, prior to leaving for a tour of his Arkansas theatres, said he would be ready to step out of his post in 60 days, which would cause his successor to become active immediately following election. M. E. Comerford, theatre circuit executive, has been prominently mentioned as Mr. Lightman's successor.

Independent Distribution Arranged for Pathe Films

Independent distribution of 10 pictures of Pathe Exchange, Inc., said to have been produced prior to 1930, has been arranged by independent exchangemen. Thomas W. Brady and Herbert L. Taylor have secured rights for Cleveland, Buffalo and Philadelphia; Arena Attractions for New Haven and Boston, and American Film Exchange for New York and Albany.

The pictures are: "Strange Cargo," "Flying Fool," "The Sophomore," "Sailor's Holiday," "Racketeer," "High Voltage," "Awful Truth," "Big News," "Oh, Yeah" and "Red Hot Rhythm." It is understood that distribution will be handled by independents on a percentage basis.

Poli Negotiating for Fox New England Operation

S. Z. Poli, former owner of the Poli theatres, is negotiating with Halsey, Stuart & Company for a new operating setup of the Fox New England Theatres. A. C. Blumenthal, Si Fabian and William Small are among 14 men negotiating with bankers and Poli interests.

While negotiations progress, Harry Arthus continues as head of the 17 theatres. Fox Theatres Corporation defaulted bond interest of approximately $300,000 on the theatres on February 1.

Film Rents Must Be Reduced, Allied Told

Drastic reductions of film rentals must be made to enable exhibitors to readjust themselves, Julius Charnow, vice-president of New Jersey Allied, told members at the bi-monthly meeting this week in New York.

"Unless these reductions are made, we will not be able to continue in business," he said.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

Looking at it, as we have, from Pennsylvania, North Dakota, Idaho, California, Texas and intermediate points, we have arrived at the conclusion that the less people know about the picture business and how it should be run, the more apt they are to give expression to their views.

There are so many things about this picture business that we don't know that it makes what we do know stand out pretty prominently in our own estimation. For instance, we believe that the title of a picture should be representative of the story upon which it is supposed to be based. If we pick up a morning paper and see the headlines, "Today's Doings in Congress," we would hardly expect to read a treatise on the Cliff Dwellers in Arizona.

We once saw "Follow Thru." The title suggested a golf story and so we went in to see it. The picture stressed a bath-house scene with a lot of questionable dialogue. We went out disgusted. Fox made "Cavalcade" and in commenting on this picture in a recent issue of Hollywood Herald "Observer" had this to say: "The man in the driver's seat, who has roamed the world, did nothing to the Noel Coward epic except to carefully, reverently, intelligently translate to terms of the cinema. He pulled away the proscenium arch and substituted a camera. Down to the most minute detail he insisted upon accuracy. 'Cavalcade' is the 'Cavalcade' that Noel Coward conceived and created. He himself has said, 'the whole story has been adapted, directed and played with such sensitive adherence to text and spirit of my play. Neither has the title been changed.' Fox acquired a property, a tremendous property, and proceeded not to tinker with it, but to translate it, painstakingly, to terms of the screen."

And then there is another thing we think we know. We think we know what thousands of audiences like in picture entertainment, since we have gotten the reaction of thousands of them to that many pictures. If we don't, then our egotism has slopped over and we have been pulling a fast one on the exhibitors.

Had we been the director of "If I Had a Million" we no doubt would have spoiled the picture, for we would have saved out about twenty-five thousand dollars to build a big log cabin up on some lake in northern Minnesota close to the Canadian line where we could entertain a lot of our friends during the open season on bass and northern pike, but the director was not a fisherman and so he handled the picture as it should have been handled. He was given a couple of dozen good ideas for a picture and a cast that is not to be sneezed at, for when they sneeze at Richard Bennett, May Robson, Charlie Ruggles (dear old Charlie, how we love to see him play), W. C. Fields and a number more of equal ability, they certainly must be coming down with hay fever. This picture starts out on a big scale and keeps expanding all the way through, and you no more than get out of one convulsion until you are into another. Paramount did the picture business a real service when they made this picture, and those of you exhibitors who have not yet played the picture better go get it, and if it does not make you money and satisfy your people you can call us anything from a liar to a lunatic, or both, and it will be Jake with us.

While you are about it, it might be well for you to get Stuart Irwin and Joan Blondell in "Make Me a Star." You won't find it as big a picture as "If I Had a Million," but it will be plenty big enough to satisfy the public's curiosity as to how pictures are made and what it takes to make a star. Since seeing the picture we have given up the idea of trying to be a star ourself, an ambition that has stood in our way of becoming a good blacksmith for years. We have seen some stars who should have stifled that ambition in its early stages, but Stuart Irwin and Joan Blondell are not to be catalogued in that group.

We hear a lot of talk these days about "Technocracy." What the Sam Hill is technocracy? There are enough words in the English language now that we don't know the meaning of without ringing this in on us.

We studied Einstein's theory of "Relativity"—or something like that—until we just about went bughouse, and now they load us down with this "Technocracy" stuff, and there's no durn sense in it. We wonder if that's what's the matter with this country. Maybe we've got too much Technocracy. We had a girl once and every time we went to call on her she would go to sleep and snore. We never could figure out just what ailed her, but it all comes to us now. We will betcha she was full of Technocracy.

Some girls are full of hypocrisy
And they never seem quite real,
While others are full of democracy
And some have sex appeal.

While some incline to autocracy—
A thing we dislike to tell—
But the girl who's got technocracy
Will snore in spite of ......

We sometimes wonder what's going to become of this country. The North Dakota senate voted to secede from the Union; the farmers throughout the corn belt are organizing "Farmers' Holidays" and attempting to prevent the orderly operation of the law; some want to give us 3.2 per cent and others don't want us to have anything, and the other evening "Baron Munchausen" cut down a million trees and couldn't make "Sharley" believe it. It begins to look like we are up agin it, but we have stood for the Non-Partisan League, the Populist Party and Huey Long, and Al Capone will be out in nine more years, so why worry.

Our Nebraska legislature pulled the prize boner when they put in 10 days discussing whether or not to pay $30,000 for a voting machine so they could sit at their desks and vote and not have to get up on their dogs and vote "yes" or "no" when a question came up. Personally we are in favor of the machine, because occasionally a representative might make a mistake and press the wrong button and vote right.

Uncle 'Leazer Biggs says there's one thing in favor of a congress and legislature: it gives a lot of fellows a chance to prove just how little sense they've got. We sometimes think Uncle 'Leazer is too radical.

In the January 28 issue of Hollywood Herald it says that Rob Wagner reports that in "The Sign of the Cross" Claudette Colbert takes a bath in real goat's milk and the goats are shown to prove it. In commenting on this, "Observer" says: "They made asses of the goats we saw, Rob."

Then again, in commenting on the speeches that stars made at previews, he suggests that their speeches be written for them in advance, that this "I know-it-will-be-grand" drivel is older than Balaam's, and just as asinine. Why, for gosh sake, where is "Observer's" mind running to? Suppose we'd use that kind of language in this column, what would Ernie Rovelstad say? We shudder to contemplate. Oh, well, maybe it's all right.

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

THE BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck—Just like the other Columbia pictures, a darn fine picture but no box office. Columbia deserves a better break with such good product as they make. Played Jan. 17-18.—J. A. Blatt, Rex Theatre, Corry, Pa. General patronage.

FIGHTING JUSTICE: Tim McCoy—Good western. Played Jan. 7.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING SHERIFF: Buck Jones—One of the best westerns I have ever run. It has lots of good clean comedy. The old man steals the show. Played Jan. 18-19.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FINAL EDITION: Pat O'Brien, Mae Clarke—Better than average but did not draw for me at box office. Played Dec. 21-22.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—A dandy show enjoyed by all. Played on bargain night and did good business. Running time, 67 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HIGH SPEED: Buck Jones—Well liked by the usual Friday and Saturday crowd. Lots of fast action and Jones pleased them. Not a western but they did not mind that. Played Jan. 27-28. Six reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Good picture. Played Dec. 27-28.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

MAN AGAINST WOMAN: Jack Holt—Slow and flopped. Holt, as the Law who carries no gun hardly convincing. Played Jan. 22-23-24. Running time, 68 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Royal Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

THE NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolphe Menjou—Murder mystery with the suspense maintained to the last. No romance unless you figure Thatcher Colt and Kelly, his lady assistant cop, are that way. Played Jan. 17-18.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

THE NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—Here is one released late on last year's group that deserves playing because of Tracy's popularity, and because it is a good show on its own. A very good cast put this over for a better than average entertainment, and we were very happy to have picked it up.—Charles Lee, Lyric Theatre, Eureka, S. D. Small town patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—Plenty audience appeal to this one. Our audience was pleased. Played Jan. 5-6.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard, Lyle Talbot—A very god picture. Will please and make money for the exhibitor. Played Jan. 15-16-17. Running time, 74 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Royal Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

PLATINUM BLONDE: Jean Harlow, Loretta Young—One fine little picture that got extra money at the box office. Plenty good clean comedy and wise cracks.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SPEED DEMON: William Collier, Jr.—Better than program. Well liked and stood them up. Something different and well done. Played Jan. 17. Running time, 68 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell—One of the best football pictures of this season. Pleased every one. A good Saturday show. Played Jan. 13. Running time, 71 minutes.—William F. Kneller, Auditorium Theatre, Manhein, Pa. Small town patronage.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt—A fair program picture. No drawing power for us.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

VANITY STREET: Charles Bickford—Good picture. Drew fair. Adult fare. Too deep for children. Played Jan. 18-19. Running time, 67 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Royal Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy—This is just what they want these days, and created a lot of interest from a new group of people, who ordinarily are not interested in movies. Splendidly produced, and an indication of showmanship on the part of Columbia. Bill it big, it deserves exploitation of a special character.—Charles Lee, Lyric Theatre, Eureka, S. D. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—One fine picture. Only the best of comments on this. Everybody pleased and told their friends. Played Dec. 29-31.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—A mighty sweet picture for the box office. As a rule Barthelmess is a poor draw for us, but we placed a little extra advertising on this. Got a good first night and those who saw it sent their friends and gave us a fine second night's business. Matinee business was 50 per cent better than usual, the women attending the matinee in groups. I have my doubts about this picture going so good down South, but up here we all thought it good entertainment. By all means give it an extra boost in advertising. Played Jan. 25-26. Running time, 79 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess, Bette Davis—This is a very fine entertainment. Stars great. Story interesting. 100 per cent satisfaction here. Played Jan. 24-25.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DOCTOR X: Lionel Atwill—Gruesome murder mystery melodrama, made startlingly effective by color photography. Swell cast and great acting and direction. Keep the kids away from this or you'll have to take them all home and sit up with them all night. Played Jan. 14-15.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—This won't come under the class of "sweet little pictures." It's plenty rough most of the way, but Ruth Chatterton does a swell bit of acting. The best picture she has had for a long time. Don't play it on your Sunday program. Played Jan. 30-31. Running time, 72 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

HATCHET MAN: Edward G. Robinson—Played this one several weeks ago and had terrible weather, so got it back again and did a nice business. It is an extra good show. Played Jan. 15-16.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THE LAST FLIGHT: Richard Barthelmess—People sat in the audience and laughed at this ridiculous sheet of celluloid. Absolutely the silliest picture I ever saw in my life. Patrons' opinion seemed to be the same. Played Dec. 30-31.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—Picture fair but some of my patrons did not care for it. Played Jan. 23-24. Running time, 82 minutes.—William F. Kneller, Auditorium Theatre, Manheim, Pa. Small town patronage.

STRANGE LOVE OF MOLLY LOUVAIN: Ann Dvorak, Lee Tracy—This picture is not worth running and one that would be better left unrun in the small towns. The old story of the fallen woman of many loves and we have not less than ten of them in the last six months that did not differ except in producer and stars. Let it lay if you can get out from under it. It will not please and it will not do your house any good. There are too many of this type of pictures made. They seem to be cut over the same pattern.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

THE TENDERFOOT: Joe E. Brown—Very amusing and interesting comedy drama. Used this for a midnight show and did a good business. Joe E. Brown well liked here. Played Jan. 1-2.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young—An excellent production that caused many comments from the patrons. Played Jan. 18-19. Running time, 65 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Warren William, Ann Dvorak, Joan Blondell—Another one from Warners that was well liked, and the kid, Buster Phelps, is great. Played Jan. 9-10. Running time, 75 minutes. —H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—This picture was good the first half, and due to depressing situations in last part, it was not liked. My guess is that Bow should have lighter material to work with. Played Jan. 16-17. Running time, 76 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—This drew extra Sunday business and Bow looks and acts better than ever, but we say as we said of Constance Bennett's "Rockabye," better stories or they are on their way out. "Call Her Savage" had plenty of angles that should have called for cuts. Played Jan. 22-23. Running time, 83 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT: Sally Eilers, Spencer Tracy, El Brendel—A fine story dealing with police and crooks but done with a little out of the ordinary style. Drew good at box office. Played Dec. 25-26.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—While this is a preachment on the depression, it is also packed with real entertainment. The episodes with the Duke, both when Will meets him in Chicago as a doorman and later when the Duke is introduced at the Grand Reception in the gorgeous uniform of a doorman, are a delight to see. Business above present day averages. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

FIRST YEAR: Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor—Usual business, nothing extra. And these stars have done better stories also. Running time, 80 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—Better liked by the women than the usual run of westerns but the usual Friday and Saturday crowd, consisting mostly of children and men, liked it about the same as any week-end program. Played Jan. 20-21.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—This is a splendid program picture. Stars fine. Battle of three, and a great cast. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOT PEPPER: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen —"Cock-eyed World," "What Price Glory," etc., all rolled into one. The picture isn't as hot as the producers would have you to believe. Have heard a number of exhibitors say they wouldn't run this picture because it was substituted for "What Price Glory." Hardly think that would make much difference in box office receipts. I believe, if the picture is exploited properly, it will draw some extra business. It's a bit hot for Sunday showing, and not so good for children. Played Jan. 26-27. Running time, 90 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy—A dandy little picture. Had them holding their sides.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY RANCH: George O'Brien—Very good mystery western to good business. The print was so bad could hardly get it through my machines. Played Jan. 6-7.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

A PASSPORT TO HELL: Elissa Landi, Paul Lukas—Clever picture with lots of good acting. Packed them in the first night and repeated fairly well the next, rained. If your patrons like Landi, book this picture. She does some fine acting. Played Jan. 19-20. Running time, 70 minutes.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers—A ladies' picture 100%. Written by a lady for the ladies and by the ladies. It's worth the price of admission to hear little Karol Kay play the violin. She is simply wonderful, both as a musician and as a junior star. You'll hear more of this little lady later on. Give us more music and singing in pictures. Just a word regarding the supporting cast in this picture. Helen Vinson does excellent work, as does Esther Howard and other members of the cast. Play up to the ladies on this one, it will please them. Beautiful gowns, beautiful sets, dialogue, sound and photography great. Congratulations to Charles Clark for his work as an expert photographer. Some of the scenes are truly marvelous.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—A good detective story. Splendid cast. Did not draw any business, but no fault of the picture. Played Jan. 26-27.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. Town and country patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter—I nominate this one to head the list of the ten worst pictures made during the past year. Baxter did the best he could with an impossible story. We had plenty of walkouts on this before the finish of the first showing and, of course, it did a very poor business. Run it on your weakest night. Played Jan. 20. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SIX HOURS TO LIVE: Warner Baxter, John Boles—A very fine picture of an unusual type. Don't believe the rural patrons would care for it. Played Jan. 16-18. Running time, 80 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—Very good picture. Should please all types of audiences. Good for Sundays. Played Jan. 15-16.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—It seems to be paying to run our better drawing cards on midweek. Two nights of this film beat our usually largest night, Sunday. Played Jan. 24-25-26.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—A very good Rogers show. The patrons liked it, bought the tickets, so it must be good. Family entertainment. Played Jan. 15-16.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers, Marion Nixon—Pleased most all. Personally thought it splendid, perhaps a little slow moving, but a nice, clean picture with comedy and pathos. Played Jan. 26-28. Running time, 70 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

TRIAL OF VIVIENNE WARE: Joan Blondell—Fair courtroom type of story that did better than average to the box office. Print terrible. Played Jan. 8-9.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Freuler

THE PENAL CODE: Regis Toomey, Helen Cohan—A real prison picture with a new angle. Photography and sound very good. Direction and performance really a treat. Business was very good. Book this one for any week-end dates and it will click.—O. L. Meister, Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. General patronage.

THE SAVAGE GIRL: Rochelle Hudson, Walter Byron—Something new and different from the usual, with plenty of comedy relief which is just what the public wants. Photography and sound very good. We ballyhooed this one and did a very splendid business. Picture good for week-end booking.—O. L. Meister, Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis. General patronage.

Mayfair

DYNAMITE DENNY: Jay Wilsie—Not so good. Played Jan. 3-4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

MGM

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Jackie Cooper, Lewis Stone, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson—Excellent entertainment but failed to do the business it should, due I think largely to the weather conditions. Boost it big. Played Dec. 16-17.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert, Virginia Bruce—A flop for us, so guess there are no Gilbert fans left as receipts proved only a few folks invested in the chance of John's comeback. Played Jan. 17-18. Running time, 75 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—One of Haines' best. Should please every type audience. Played Dec. 29-20.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—A fast moving picture that pleased.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—A good picture that failed to do business.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: All star—Opening night good business, then took a beautiful nose dive. Personally liked the picture but eventually my folks didn't.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston, Lupe Velez—Heard nobody say they liked it and it did no business. Gruesome. Played Jan. 4-5. Running time, 88 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

KONGO: Walter Huston—Awful. Most demoralizing picture I have run to date. Tip me off if there are any more like this and I will pay for them and leave them. Played Jan. 25-26. Running time, 86 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Royal Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler—A good box office tonic that brought out all classes and was hugely enjoyed by all who saw it. Dressler—long may she wave. Played Jan. 23-24-25. Running time, 76 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

SPEAK EASILY: Buster Keaton, Jimmy Durante—Okey comedy but ordinary business. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 80 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Marvelous, is my personal opinion. Why do they make characters look so old after a lapse of 20 years. Instead of looking 40 or 45, Miss Shearer looks to be 80. Not a small town picture where majority like such pictures as Laurel-Hardy, Wheeler-Woolsey, etc. Personally think Gable miscast. Does not have the voice of a doctor. Too harsh. Played Jan. 29-30.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Monogram

THIRTEENTH GUEST: Ginger Rogers—A very good, entertaining picture. The star fine, story interesting. Gave satisfaction. Played Jan. 28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. Town and country patronage.

THIRTEENTH GUEST: Ginger Rogers—A very good mystery picture. As good as anything in this line that has been turned out by the larger producers in the past year. It pleased and did average business. Only one fault with this one, the recording is not so good in spots and I have found this to be true with the last few Monogram pictures. They need to find out what is wrong and do something about it quick. Patrons will not stand for poor sound these days. Played Jan. 24. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Bing Crosby—A fine picture. Our bank closed just a short time before I played this picture and it hurt business considerably. However, it drew a fairly good crowd and pleased everyone. Running time, 80 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Loew, Wynne Gibson—This is a good picture dealing with the automobile stealing racket as handled by organized big city criminals. Cast is good and it will fit into any program.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—Picked up on Monday. Truly a four star picture. Will go over for anyone that gets behind it. Push this one, you won't be disappointed. Played Jan. 22-23. Running time, 78 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe, Richard Arlen—Clean, entertaining mystery drama with comedy enough to break the monotony when became too dramatic. Enjoyed by all. Little extra business even. Played Jan. 20-21. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth—Very much overrated as a comedy. There are not many laughs. The story develops slowly and there is too much dialogue. The audience was restless all the way through and they did not go for it. Just an average picture that will not build up on succeeding days. Your audience will not give you much credit for it. There is no action to it. It depends upon the supposedly clever situations but they missed fire. I do not think it will get money in the small towns. Not on the succeeding days. Played Jan. 29-30.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Not so hot as the title indicates, but a pretty fair show. Carroll means nothing here any more. Played Jan. 20-21. Running time, 74 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Richard Bennett—A good show but failed to do any business. A different story than most pictures but was enjoyed by all. Running time, 95 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson—The reviews were good on this but I don't know why—the poorest Paramount picture of the year. Did not please 30%. Which goes to show that some of the critics don't know a good picture after all. Played Dec. 25-26-27. Running time, 95 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton, Bela Lugosi—We ran this at midnight. Is on a par with other socalled horror pictures. Played Jan. 28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie—Very good. No one will go out disappointed after seeing this picture and word-to-mouth will help a lot. Best action picture in some time. Paramount releases have all been good of late. Better than average gross. Played Jan. 28. Running time, 74 minutes.—V. C. Wenkler, Colonel Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronange.

MAN FROM YESTERDAY: Claudette Colbert, Clive Brook—Not very many folks seemed interested in this after-the-war story and we took the licking at the box office. Running time, 70 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Better than the last two Lloyds but did not pull for the reason that he does not keep before the public and their memories are short. The story has been done many times in the last two years. The same old hooey of the country boy who makes good in Hollywood. The picture has plenty of gags and in some spots there are some laughs. But the picture seemed to drag in the middle and then picked up at the end. If they like Lloyd it will do business, but did not for us and we played it Sunday and Monday. There is one star in this picture and that's Louise Closser Hale. She had a swell role in "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and the audience remembered her comedy in that picture. You will see more of her in the future for she has a flair for comedy on the line of Marie Dressler.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—Real class production that pleased everyone. Cummings is a comer and Mae West—well, she has something, I don't know what it is—and she'll go places if she gets a break. Played Jan. 11-12. Running time, 71 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13th: Clive Brook, Frances Dee—Starts slow, but winds up with bang. Paramount is getting better. More power to Paramount—the pioneers. Played Dec. 26.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta. Small town patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13th: Clive Brook, Lila Lee—Good picture of small town type, but poor draw. Liked by all, but appeal was limited.—B. C. Talley, Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—They just wouldn't come out to see this one and I can't blame them. It certainly was a box office flop for me. Did not please 50% of those who saw it and I am still hearing about how it was disliked. Too draggy and nothing to hold interest. Lots of film wasted, could have been put in two reels. I have found that a little action along with the dialogue has a better chance of drawing in the small towns. Running time, 85 minutes.—M. A. Edwards, Ritz Theatre, Phillipsburg, N. J. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis—One of the finest directed and timed pictures we have ever run. Swell show. Pretty high class. But the exhibitors will like it anyway. This is one of those shows that you know yourself is good, but darned hard to make the farmers and plain folks think that way. Also the best looking clock that was ever in pictures is in this. Look for it. It's a pip. Kay Francis is a "Honey."—Walt Bradley, Moon Theatre, Neligh, Neb. High class patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Just a pip of a show. This boy Raft is a comer and a real actor. Good supporting cast and good story. It didn't cost much to make this picture but it has more real entertainment than many of the million dollar class. This just shows what a good story means. You don't have to spend much money to make a good picture if you've got a good story and a fair cast. Every person that saw this picture liked it. Nancy Carroll and the other members of the cast are excellent. Played January 18.—S. H.

Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft—Excellent. Deserves exploiting in a big way. Played January 22-23.—Charles W. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Another fine Western, but it doesn't go over in my town. They have made too many cheap Westerns with illogical plots to enable one to sell any western.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Entertaining out-of-order picture made from this Zane Grey tale, which followed book a bit closer than some of the others. Pleased. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 60 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—Excellent western. Played Jan. 28.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RKO

AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Wilson—Advertised this not suitable for children and only had nine kids, but had to put folding chairs down the aisles to accommodate the crowds, and had a school play for competition first night; one woman who superintends a Sunday School came and when she left she told my wife it was not so bad as if she was disappointed, she was not shocked. Picture only fair.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding—A very good picture and drew a little extra business. Advertised it as the picture Roxy used to open the new RKO Roxy. Played Jan. 20-21.—J. A. Blatt, Rex Theatre, Corry, Pa. General patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—One swell picture. Just enough native stuff to be interesting and the tragic ending is not unduly stressed. Played Jan. 21-22.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—This is a great picture and should show in every theatre. It is entertainment and history and gives your patrons something to take home and think about. It is well done and has a great cast.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Played this one Friday and Saturday, our action days, and it pleased a better than average week-end crowd. Step on this one, it's okay.—E. C. Talley, Carolina Theatre, Lumberton, N. C. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Another timely production dealing with our depression and will do much to stimulate confidence on the part of the people who are wondering if we will ever come out of it. Guy Kibbee contributes much of the entertainment value. Played January 18-19.—Charles W. Proctor, Sultana Theatre, Williams, Ariz. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix—Very good picture, but not as good as "Cimarron." Played Dec. 25-26. — Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bel Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—Pleased 99% and it's impossible to please the other 1% with anything. People like pictures like this nowadays and will come to see them. It will bear all the advertising you can give it. Played December 29-30.—T. Thompson, Palace and Princess Theatres, Cedartown, Ga. Small town patronage.

THE HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy, Lupe Velez—A knockout for small towns. This boy Tracy is a great favorite. Understand he is a problem for the producers. After all it's time they had a few. However, pictures of this type are a great tonic for a sick box office. Played December 27.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

THE HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy gets better in every picture. This is just a good hokum story but it gets by and they like it. Business a little better than ordinary on a Friday and Saturday date. Played Jan. 13-14.—J. A. Blatt, Rex Theatre, Corry, Pa. General patronage.

HELL'S HIGHWAY: Good picture of its kind. Drew better than average business. Acting fine.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Wheeler and Woolsey—Drew better than average and pleased everybody. A good comedy that you shouldn't pass up. Running time, 60 minutes.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

LADIES OF THE JURY: Edna May Oliver—Very good comedy of the court room type. Used it for a take-a-chance show and had better than average attendance. Played Jan. 4-5.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

AIRPLANE BUSINESS, OXCART METHODS

Whereupon S. H. Rich, of the Rich Theatre at Montpelier, Idaho, says this:

"This company has made a fine record this season. If the balance of the pictures are as good as those released up to date, Paramount will have nothing to worry about. The recent changes have been a good thing for the company. New conditions must be met and met right. Many are trying to run an airplane business with ox-cart methods. Paramount is getting new faces into pictures and new men as department heads, and thus far are making good. Let us hope that under the new organization more attention will be paid to production and that a picture will not be released that is not up to a certain standard. There never was a time when we needed good pictures more than now, and even under present conditions, good pictures will do a good business."

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green—Used this as a "Family Night" offering to pleased audiences. A clever picture with lots of human interest. Played Jan. 30.-Feb. 1. Running time, 60 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

MEN ARE SUCH FOOLS: Leo Carrillo, Una Merkel—Terrible flop at box office—and just another picture. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1. Running time, 64 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Richard Dix—Ordinary Dix action picture. Good for Saturdays. Not so hot for Sunday. Played Jan. 20-21.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—Plenty of laughs. Weak story but a good picture. Played Jan. 10-11.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez, Karen Morley—A very interesting mystery picture. Splendid cast. Pleased all that saw it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RENEGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Good western. Played Jan. 14.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett—Our audience said that this is about the best Bennett they had seen. Played Jan. 1-2.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE SPORT PARADE: Joel McCrea—Very good program picture. Played Jan. 3-4.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

Tiffany

TEXAS GUN FIGHTER: Ken Maynard—Another western. Everybody pans them but they usually pay out. Played Jan. 7-8.—Roy C. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

United Artists

CONGRESS DANCES: Lilian Harvey, Conrad Veidt—Pulled it after midnight show. Terrible. More kicks and walkouts than we have had in ages. Played Jan. 1. Running time, 80 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

THE GREEKS HAD A WORD FOR THEM: Ina Claire, Joan Blondell—Was afraid of this because of press comments, but it is a clever comedy. Played Jan. 23-25. Running time, 80 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—Hard to realize that a star of Crawford's caliber means so little at the box office even in a poor vehicle. Paid plenty for the Crawford name but had to pull it before the end of the run. Audience reaction very bad and this picture hurt the star. Played Jan. 14. Running time, 93 minutes.—V. C. Wenkler, Colonel Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

MR. ROBINSON CRUSOE: Douglas Fairbanks—Very good picture. A rest from the overdone type of story romances. Our folks liked it and some stayed for a second show. Said it was refreshing. Played Jan. 8-9.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

SKY DEVILS: Spencer Tracy, Ann Dvorak—Good rowdy farce comedy but priced too high for my town. Lost money on it. Played Dec. 31-Jan. 1.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—Played to a slightly smaller Sunday and Monday crowd, due probably to severe weather rather than an inferior picture. However, it didn't bring out the long absent faces. Played Jan. 22-23.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Ore. Small town patronage.

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden—Just an ordinary picture. Played Jan. 19.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy, Pat O'Brien—Air pictures draw and please if done on large scale and this is done as the public thinks it should be done. Played Jan. 18-19. Running time, 83 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy—The best air picture that has been along in some time. Swell flying, comedy, drama, thrills, and a little of everything. Family entertainment. Played Jan. 17-18.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Ralph Bellamy, Pat O'Brien—This is one of the most highly praised and generally satisfactory pictures we have had in a long time. Brought our midweek crowd up considerably. Played Jan. 17-18-19. Running time, 83 minutes.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—A very nice football picture that drew good business. Running time, 78 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—A good mystery picture. Not very gruesome. Played Dec. 31.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Starved on this one. Karloff worth nothing to the picture and didn't please anyone. Far from being another "Frankenstein."—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. Small town patronage.

OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—Usual crowds, not a draw. Most patrons thought it more horror stuff than anything previously shown. Played Jan. 24-25. Running time, 72 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie—After having seen the picture previewed, was afraid to show it, but it clicked 100% and showed it two days without a knock, to a capacity house too.—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zazu Pitts, Slim Summerville—This picture is positively the outstanding comedy drama of all time. Have never shown a picture that received so much comment. Don't fail to boost it and play it. Half my customers came back the second night for another laugh. It's it.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Gerber, Okla. Small town patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Zazu Pitts, Slim Summerville—One of our "Paid" reporters gave this an awful panning, but fortunately I found out different before playdate and changed my booking from a playdown (bargain day) date to a Sunday-Monday date and "am I glad?" Title and star draw sure pulled them in. Best Sunday business in a long long time. Call it "hokum" if you want to, but it satisfies, so let's forget the sophistication and give 'em what they want and enjoy. Played January 22-23. Running time, 70 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zazu Pitts—Here, gentlemen, seems to be the answer to a showman's prayer. An absolute clean up. To my regret played only one day. Ran three performances to capacity business. Picture well gagged and audience ate it up. Don't let this slip by you. Played January 10.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill. Rural patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—This is a super comedy. Will appeal to all classes and types of audiences. Good for any day of the week. Played Jan. 12-13.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—An exceptionally good picture that drew above average business. Brown is a new one for me and he made a lot of friends. Running time, 70 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Warner

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Tense, gripping picture that is essentially men's entertainment that they will never forget. Business above average. Played Jan. 30-31. Running time, 90 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—Best draw we've had in a long time. Drew many more men than ladies. Quite sure the ladies didn't find it very pleasant entertainment as several walked out. Rouses your sympathy for Muni to point of real excitement. Should get real business anywhere. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 93 minutes. —Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Par excellent. This picture will cause your audience to grow weak with laughter. Played Jan. 17-18.—Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre, Rochester, Ind. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—One of the cleverest and most appreciated films shown in some time. Every wisecrack a laugh. Drew splendidly.—O. H. Miller, Alamo Theatre, Pine Bluff, Ark. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Good western with enough mystery to change the type and a negro, Blue Washington, steals the show. That's the first time I ever saw a negro cowboy. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 58 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: William Powell—Played one day only and didn't do enough business to pay expenses. Good picture with just ordinary drawing power would be my opinion. Played Jan. 26.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Ky. Small town patronage.

JEWEL ROBBERY: William Powell, Kay Francis —Light society comedy melodrama. It seemed to please. The moral seems to be that if you're smooth enough to get away with it you can steal all the jewels in Vienna and have all the pretty ladies leaving their husbands to run away with you. Played Jan. 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell, Joan Blondell—Just a fair little program picture that may do for a one night showing—nothing big, but will prove entertaining to the average picture fan. Joan Blondell has practically nothing to do, so better leave her off the billing. Played Jan. 25. Running time, 72 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young—When you play this one, would advise playing it for all those sixteen years or over—no children admitted unless with parents. We did this and the picture drew 50% above average business for two days and seemed to please all of them. Advertise it strong as a strong picture for adults only and you'll do business. The Follies blonde that presents her husband with twins will give your patrons plenty of good laughs. She steals the picture. Played Jan. 18-19. Running time, 72 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE MOUTHPIECE: Warren William, Sidney Fox —An excellent picture and well liked by all. You can tell them that William is good and you will not misrepresent him. Did a good business and this will do the same for many others. Very good sound. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 75 minutes.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: A good Saturday night picture. Contains a lot of thrills and excitement. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is not much of a draw at the box office. Played Jan. 28.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill.

RIDE HIM, COWBOY: John Wayne, Ruth Hall—A splendid western. Star is extra good. More of a story than most of the westerns. Played Jan. 28.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan. Town and country patronage.

SCARLET DAWN: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Nancy Carroll—Somebody slipped on this. It is only film wasted and nobody liked it. Played Jan. 2-3. Running time, 60 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

SO BIG: Barbara Stanwyck—Used this on my bargain night and it went over very nicely. Not as good a picture as I expected but it drew good business and seemed to please.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—Good picture and made to order for Arliss. Ran it for the Lions Club and they were satisfied. Did fair business and it showed a profit. One of the month's miracles. Played Jan. 16-17.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—This one didn't get film rental first night, but the second night more than made up for it, so they must have liked it to do that in this town. Played Jan. 13-14.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

World Wide

CROOKED CIRCLE: Zasu Pitts, James Gleason—Get a crowd in on this one and you have a riot on your hands. For once Pitts and Gleason start doing their stuff in the haunted house, the crowd roars, and how they roar. This is not a great picture, but as a mystery drama it ranks as high as any we have had. It drew well at the box office, doing as much business as a socalled special did ahead of it two days. Played Jan. 17. Running time, 76 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

THE GROCERY BOY AND BARNYARD OLYMPICS: Mickey Mouse—Two very entertaining cartoon comedies.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

LAMBS' GAMBOLS: These are good, containing quite a bit of music and dancing, and that seems to please people nowadays. Two reels.—Charles Lee, Lyric Theatre, Eureka, S. D. Small town patronage.

SCRAPPY CARTOONS: Here is a series that has been improved very much since its inception, and in our opinion now ranks with the best of the animated single reelers. In addition a rather unusual campaign has been put behind these, through cartoon lessons offered in schools, that has created a lot of child interest. Well done, and getting better.—Charles Lee, Lyric Theatre, Eureka, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUNDAY CLOTHES: Cartoon—Better than average cartoon—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Educational

THE ACID TEST: Tom Howard—As usual, Howard gave us plenty of laughs in this one. It's the best he has made in some time. Spot it on a night when you will have a house full and hear them roar. Running time, 10 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

SUNKISSED SWEETIES: Andy Clyde — Good comedy. Better than the average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan.

TORCHY'S BUSY DAY: Ray Cooke—A very good comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan.

Fox

BIG GAME OF THE SEA: All about a whale fisherman and how they take care of the big ones that they catch. Interesting. You've seen it done before. —Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KASHMIR TO KHYBER: Magic Carpet—Would be 75% better if description was given by announcer. Fell below other travelogues on this account. Fox will have to come to it.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MAGIC CARPET SERIES: These are all good. But like everything else, some better than others.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

TOM TOM TRAIL: Consider these Magic Carpets a good one reeler.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MGM

ALUM AND EVE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Good slapstick comedy. Not quite as good as some of their others.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BIRTHDAY BLUES: Our Gang—The best gang comedy for quite a spell.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE BULLY: Flip the Frog—Good cartoon—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

COLOR SCALES: Fisherman's Paradise—Very interesting one-reeler in color.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

GIRL GRIEF: Charley Chase—A good comedy and Chase always gets some laughs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOAL RUSH: Flip the Frog—Fair cartoon subject. Not as good as some.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TOBASCO KID: Charley Chase—Here's as funny a comedy as Charlie has made in a long time. Action is with cowboys on a ranch and Charlie plays both the bandit and the hero. Running time, 19 minutes. —Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

YOUNG IRONSIDES: Charley Chase—Very good —Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

Paramount

AIN'T SHE SWEET: Lillian Roth—Very good screen song. Roth puts her song over nice.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SINGAPORE SUE: Anna Chang and Company—A musical comedette. Good filler for any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE SINGING PLUMBER: Donald Novis, Farrell Macdonald—The first of the new two reelers from Paramount, and what comedy. In my opinion, this is the best comedy I have had this or last year. Novis has a wonderful voice and should stick with the old favorite songs that everyone knows. Macdonald and other members of the cast do all the acting, and they are swell. Novis can't act, but boy, how that bird can sing. Don't fail to mention Novis and Macdonald in your ad, as many people will like this subject better than the feature. People are hungry for musicals and singing again. Played Jan. 20.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH: Good screen song but I can't get them to sing. How do you do it?—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

RKO

THE GOLF CHUMP: Ed Kennedy—A very funny two-reel comedy. Running time, two reels.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Michigan.

HOKUM HOTEL: Fables—Good on any program. —D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

JITTERS THE BUTLER: Bobby Clark, Paul McCullough—For good slapstick, this team is good, and the customers like it.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

PENCIL MANIA: The best of this series to date. Will fit anywhere a good musical cartoon is needed. —J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE RINK: Charlie Chaplin—This has plenty of laughs and you do not notice that there is no talking. The orchestra does an excellent job on this picture. Would advise any exhibitor to run these Chaplins on Saturday night. The kids go for them strong and the adults seem to like them. Running time, 19 minutes. —S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Universal

HOTTER THAN HAITI: Slim Summerville—Extra good comedy—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MORTON DOWNEY AND VINCENT LOPEZ: Number two of the Universal radio series and much better than the first one. In fact, this one gave satisfaction. Believe they would have enjoyed a good two-reel comedy much better than they did this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE STREET SINGER: Nick Kenny—If all the Universal radio stories are like this one, I am sorry I bought them. This was the first one of the sixteen and it's very poor effort. Got a lot of razzing from the patrons. Hope the other fifteen are better. Running time, 20 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

THE BAND WAGON: Jimmy Caruso's Band—Another clever Melody Master. And a piano duet in it that'll wake everybody up. Running time, 9 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

POOR LITTLE RICH BOY: Broadway Brevity—A dandy two-reeler with songs, music, beautiful girls, gorgeous sets and costumes. Full of wisecracks that keep you good-natured. These subjects could be made into three-reelers and take the place of a double bill. —S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

Serials

Universal

HEROES OF THE WEST: Noah Beery, Jr.—Good action. Well done building up. Running time, 18 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Royal Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

JUNGLE MYSTERY: Tom Tyler—Pleasing the kids and a few of the old folks. Average type serial of wild animal thrills. Average running time, 18 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb.

Admission Return For December Is Under November

Another $1,871,243.12 went into the coffers of the United States Treasury in December to represent the tax on admissions to places of amusement in November, it is reported by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Compared with November, when $1,952,379.32 was collected, the December receipts evince a falling off, but in this respect apparently but followed the usual seasonal trend with the decline markedly less severe than that of 1931 when collections dropped from $240,635.25 to $169,829.82. All possibilities of tax legislation during the present session of Congress were killed January 20 when the House ways and means committee, by a strictly party vote, rejected all proposals for tax measures at this time. The result of this action will be to throw the whole question of taxes into the special session which will convene under President Roosevelt's call, shortly after April 15.

With the treasury deficit showing no signs of abating, with business showing little or no improvement—its general level is probably much lower than a year ago when the 1932 revenue bill was under consideration—there is no likelihood that the special session of Congress will move to relax any of the present levies.

In all probability, most of the present taxes will be retained, those that are eliminated being consumption taxes which will be replaced by the general manufacturers' sales tax which is expected to be the backbone of any new revenue legislation. This will mean that the admission tax exemption will not be increased, although it is not to be taken as promising that it may not be further reduced.

Interworld To Distribute For Chesterfield, Invincible

Interworld Production, Inc., recently organized, will supervise domestic sales and distribution of all product of Chesterfield and Invincible, according to George R. Batcheller, president of Chesterfield. Budd Rogers, of Interworld, will direct the sales.

The action was taken, according to Mr. Batcheller, so that he might concentrate his attention exclusively on production. He plans nine Chesterfield and nine Invincible productions for 1933-34, an increase of six over 1932-33.

Asks Trailer Time Be Cut

Robert F. Sisk, director of advertising and publicity for RKO and Radio, has instituted a campaign with a view to reducing the length of trailers. Mr. Sisk believes trailers should be limited to four and one-half minutes, since patrons are forced to sit through them and they lose their effectiveness if permitted to run too long.

Freuler Sales Increase

Freuler Film Associates, Inc., reports an average weekly increase in contracts of 12½ per cent since the beginning of the year. An additional production unit has been placed in action.

COMMUNITY TO RULE NEW THEATRE GROUP

Civic and Social Leaders Determine Policy of Town House at Scarsdale, N. Y., First of Group; Public To Select Films

Community control over and responsibility for motion picture theatre policies is the newest idea in exhibition. Civic and social leaders of Scarsdale, in Westchester County, New York, met last week to determine the policy and operating methods of the Town House, a new theatre which will open this week. The theatre is the first of a circuit to be operated by the National Association of Community Theatres, Inc., New York.

The sponsors say that the Scarsdale venture is one of the first wherein lay members of a community have been allowed such scope in determining operating policy. In conjunction with NACT, they will decide upon the type of feature pictures, based upon their quality and local conditions, a study of the population and recommendations of the various national previewing groups. The objective is concentration on specialized film entertainment to meet local demands, an appeal to diversified social or civic groups as a class instead of the cross section of picture goers. The company is headed by Michael Freedman, who has been in the industry since 1915, and Marguerite Benson, well known in women's business and social circles.

Plans Number of Units

The organization plans to establish such units as the Scarsdale house in strategic spots, limited for the time being to the eastern section of the country.

Attending the meeting in Scarsdale were representatives of the churches, schools, local civic units, women's clubs, and several nationally known organizations.

Mrs. Benson, speaking at the meeting, said, "For some time past, just such organizations as you represent have been criticizing Hollywood, its methods, and the product it turns out, but when highly recommended pictures have been shown in this and other localities, you have not turned out to support them as you should have done.

"In promoting a new plan of theatre operation, the NACT is trying to serve everyone in the community. Few people will agree in their tastes or demands in the field of entertainment, and it is with this thought that we must cooperate in basing our selection of films upon a careful study of the population."

Mrs. Benson said that one of the most important factors to be taken into consideration was that of quality, and that a policy of merchandising would be emphasized.

"This does mean that we are going to hold ourselves up as censors," she said. "We are going to give our patrons what they want, but our merchandising policy simply means an avoidance of clashes in taste insofar as such a thing is possible, and we want to serve individual demands. Above all, we will give complete truth in advertising."

Of the Scarsdale meeting, Mrs. Benson declared that she had received the unqualified support of the various groups which attended. Among other things accomplished was the removal of a ban on Sunday performances which has existed for many years. The NACT plan of operation for the Town House, endorsed at the meeting, is as follows:

There will be flexibility in programs according to the success of each picture. If the audiences demand it a film will be run as long as it is remunerative, otherwise there probably will be three changes of program each week and two matinees, on Saturday and Sunday.

Special Forenoon Shows

Evening performances will start at 7, and matinees at 2 p.m. The Saturday matinee will be strictly for children, but no special effort will be made in that direction on Sunday, although attempts will be made to show pictures suitable also for them. If this is not possible, the picture will be advertised as being "for adults only." On specified children's matinee days there will be no adult fare, and the house will be cleared of children before the evening performance.

There will be no trailers or any form of exploitation other than newspaper advertising.

There will probably be a membership policy which will consist of the sale of books of tickets, at slightly reduced prices, which will entitle the bearer to see certain films on certain dates, advertised in advance.

If groups make requests for specialized films, they will be shown at special performances in the forenoon.

Generally, pictures to be shown for children will be those endorsed by the national previewing groups. Admissions will be flexible.

Would Reopen Dark Houses

"It is absolutely essential to the success of the plan that we have the support of these organizations," said Mrs. Benson. "If they had supported several recommended pictures in the past which turned out to be 'flops' because of non-support, Hollywood would have turned them out so fast that there would not have been enough time to see them all. The success of any project stands or falls according to the support given it. If these groups do not stick with us and back us up, they will have no right to criticize Hollywood in the future." She further told them that those who condemn Hollywood the most loudly are the poorest supporters of the box office.

NACT will not attempt to give its audiences only first runs. Mrs. Benson expressed a belief that the community theatre could educate patrons to the idea of quality as against first-run.

The Town House has been taken on a lease by NACT, which, as the project progresses, will reopen dark houses and actively engage in all phases of theatre operation. The Town House has been completely renovated, done in old English style. A large restaurant is one of the features.

HOLQUIST

State Line Gets Selected Films

Marguerite Benson, executive of National Association of Community Theatres, has completed a deal with the State Line, operating between Oregon and the Orient, for the showing of feature films and short subjects, product to be split between Paramount and Warner-First National. Mrs. Benson will have charge of building the programs. The deal was made by Mrs. Benson independent of NACT. She said she will discard all films having to do with sea or land catastrophes, and that because the State Line carries many Oriental passengers, pictures that might in any way be construed as derogatory to Oriental countries, will be excluded.

Mrs. Benson said that for the most part programs would be made up of comedies, travel films, westerns, and straight dramas. The round trip on the State Line takes 58 days, and for each trip nine features and 18 short subjects will be booked.

Grainger Leave Extended; Contract Settlement Due

The leave of absence of James R. Grainger, vice-president in charge of distribution for Fox Film has been extended for 30 days. Saul Rogers, Mr. Grainger's attorney, is negotiating a settlement of his contract with Fox.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

HELPING EACH OTHER!

WITH THE WEALTH OF fine material submitted for publication in this section from Club members all over the world, it requires more than ordinary tact to select for particular praise some one contributor without slighting the other few thousand.

Yet, we cannot possibly refrain from expressing our gratification and appreciation to Ira Glucksman for the unusually fine articles he has been writing especially for this department. His first, which appeared in the issue of January 21st, dealt particularly with "Radio Tie-ups" and how they could be made profitable for the theatre. His second, which appeared last week, was vitally important at this time since it set forth sensible methods for cutting the overhead — a topic, incidentally, of major importance to those many exhibitors who are trying so hard to balance their receipts and expenses so as to remain in business.

His third, and we have just finished reading the original copy, will appear next week and gives you, in plain, understandable, showman language, a complete layout of dozens of ways of offsetting the coming Lent period. Every conceivable avenue to stimulate box office revenue has been carefully covered, and those already familiar with Glucksman's previous articles need not be told that they are being written by a showman who knows what he is talking about.

WE HASTEN TO ASSURE our ramblin' reporter, J. C. Jenkins, that we acknowledge his superiority as First Colonel of the Quigley organization . . . in fact . . we are quite content with being the second or even the third . . . because "J. C." has sort of shamed us by admitting to a Colonelcy that dates from active service (even if we can't pronounce the locations he mentioned to prove it). . . . But . . be that as it may . . . we are now catching up enough on back work to sit back and speculate on the possibilities of this Colonel title . . .

Already the boys in the field have adopted their own pet openings for their letters . . . in one they address me as "Col. Chick" . . in another, "Kurnel" . . (nuts, sez us) . . and at the A.M.P.A. luncheons here in New York I'd hate to admit to some of the other things they call me . . . but they can't dampen our spirits. . . . We're proud of our title and if there is ever a "Chick, Jr.", he's going to inherit it . . .

THE LOCAL MANAGER CAN do more to help get a rent reduction for his theatre than all the high-powered home office officials that can be rolled into one . . . and the reason is quite simple. . . . The local manager knows the owners and can approach them in a warmer and more friendly manner than the h.o. official who must make his approach a cold-blooded business affair . . .

In conversation with a certain well known h.o.o., he admitted that the best rent reductions secured to date were those negotiated through the local managers . . . but he also admitted that for swinging this very important bit of business for his company they had overlooked that idea of perhaps rewarding him with a little bonus check. . . . Not that we are suggesting that the h.o. ought to reward the l.m. for getting a nice, juicy reduction in rent . . (not much) . . but if this happens to catch the eye of the h.o. execs they might try thinking it over . . .

THIS IS AS GOOD A TIME as any to clear up a point brought out by many of our members and readers. They have advanced the thought that the material in the Club section makes its appearance too late for use in connection with the particular picture being discussed.

Here is the way it sizes up: Since the picture must play the theatre before said theatre can send us their campaign, and, since the campaigns are not always sent in by the houses running the picture on national release date, then, it stands to reason that we can only get the campaign into print after the picture has been generally released.

But here is the solution: It is our contention that the meat of any Club story is the merchandising idea itself, rather than its application to the picture in which it was used. To further illustrate: If you put over an excellent stunt on "Five Star Final," is it not practical to assume that most any other newspaper or tabloid picture would lend itself to similar treatment?

That's our argument. Read over what the other fellow has been doing and then file the idea away for use on the next picture that lends itself to the particular type of exploitation or advertising as described in the story. Don't put it aside on the theory that you have already played that picture and so the idea is worthless. Don't sit still and wait for absolutely original ideas to present themselves. You'll die of old age waiting. "CHICK"

RALPH PHILLIPS IS STILL GRABBING OFF A LOT OF FREE SPACE

The last time we reported on the activities of Ralph E. Phillips, manager of the State Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., he had just reopened his house for the new season and, incidentally, grabbed a whale of a lot of free space from a local newspaper, which welcomed Phillips' return and the opening of the State to the tune of a large display.

Looking through a recent copy of his newspaper, we see that he used another free space stunt on "Air Mail." The diagram of a plane, with all parts numbered, was published and air-minded youngsters were invited to correctly name the parts and participate in an award and guest tickets to the picture. A considerable amount of free display space was given this stunt by tying up with the newspaper, which handled receipt of all replies. He was also able to banner 12 mail trucks and secure permission to place still boards and copy in the post office. Thirty newsboys wore Air Mail caps two days before the picture opened.

We note in another issue of the same paper (a leading sheet, by the way) that Phillips obtained a nice break on publicity for "Little Orphan Annie" by virtue of a tie-up made with the paper to run a series or Orphan Annie cartoons for the kiddies to color. Guest tickets were awarded for best efforts.

Considering the hard-boiled attitude generally displayed by the newspaper in question as regards publicity breaks for theatres, Phillips certainly deserves full credit for getting away with a large amount of valuable free space. More power to him! We'll be looking for further word.

McCUTCHEN'S DISPLAY!

Photo above is proof that O. W. McCutchen, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Blytheville, Ark., didn't have to use any fake cotton for his lobby display on "Cabin in the Cotton." He had real bales and stalks that came right from Arkansas fields, and even a little colored lad to lend additional atmosphere. We believe that's Mack and a member of his staff standing by.

Meyerberg Is Smart!

Harry Meyerburg, manager of the Warner-U. S. Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., recently evolved a scheme whereby the local merchants pay his advertising bills. He devotes about one-fifth of his one-sheet space to mention of the merchant singled out for this purpose, who, in turn, pays the entire bill. He also works the stunt with a 24-sheet ballyhoo truck, sent about town with copy on show and theatre and a couple of lines for the merchant. The idea has worked out so well that Harry is generally booked about two months ahead.

LEWELLAN IS USING PLAY-MONEY GAG TO BUILD HIS MATINEES

Not long ago this department made reference to a "Play-Money" stunt, patterned somewhat after the "play-money" cartoon strips appearing in certain newspapers. Now we note that W. C. Lewellan, manager of the Egyptian Theatre, Denver, Colo., can also be credited with using practically the same scheme as a gag to build attendance at Saturday kiddie matinees.

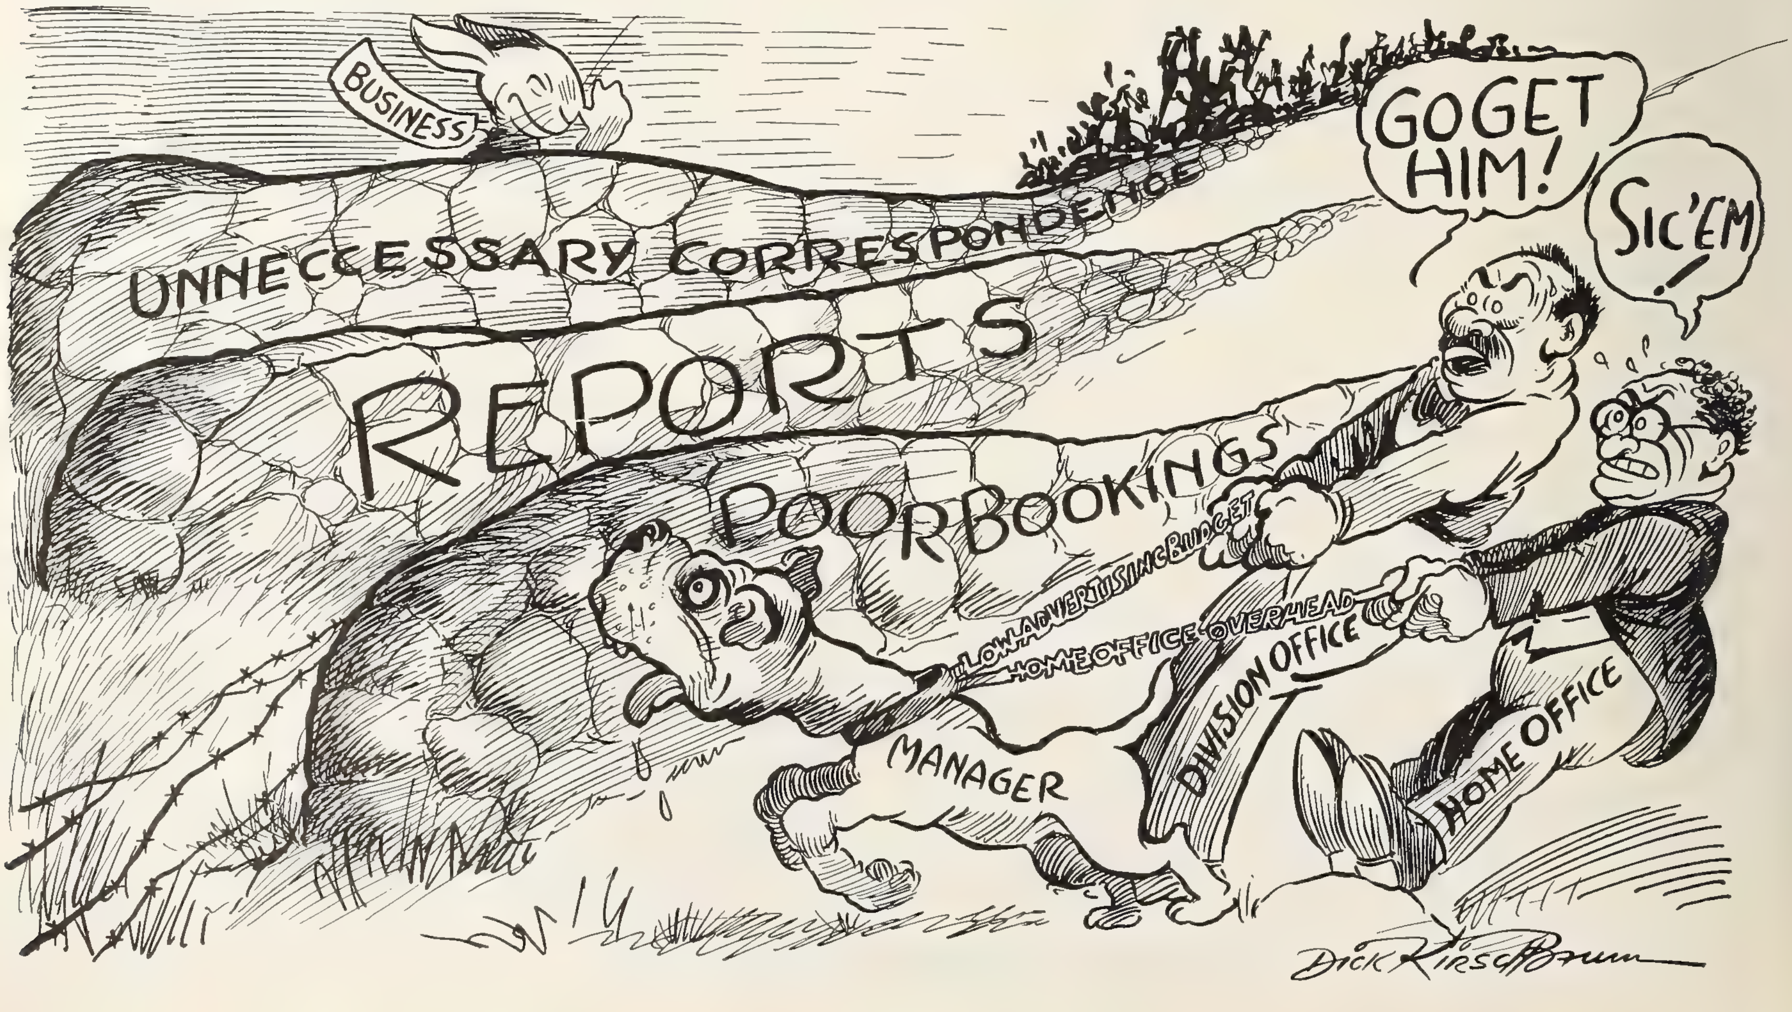
He holds his club meetings every Saturday at 2 P. M., with a program of kiddie vaudeville, stunts and various contests and gives each child patron "One Buck" in play-money. When any of them have saved "10 Bucks" they become entitled to a free admission. The play-money is issued in five and one-buck denominations, with the "five-buck" bills passed out about every sixth week instead of giving the kids a five-cent matinee.

Not only do the kids save this play-money to obtain a free admission to the show, Lewellan has found, but they barter it back and forth in much the same fashion as the original cartoon play-money. His "bills" are inscribed: "For Rinkydinkers and Their Friends—Rinkydink Club Dough—Redeemable As Stated On the Other Side at the Fox-Egyptian Theatre."

With the popular trend toward wooden money and script in various parts of the country these days, it's easy to see how Lewellan's gag finds much interest among the kiddies in these troublous times. Moreover, it undoubtedly acts as a means to keeping up attendance at kiddie matinees. This is Lewellan's first contribution to his Club since he became a member and we'll be looking for many others.

WHY CIRCUITS GO BROKE!

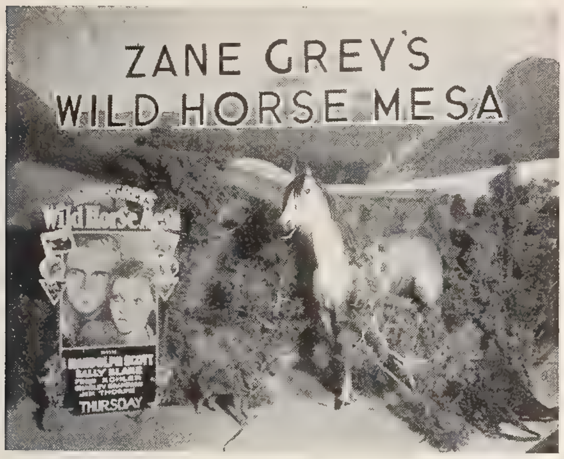
By DICK KIRSCHBAUM

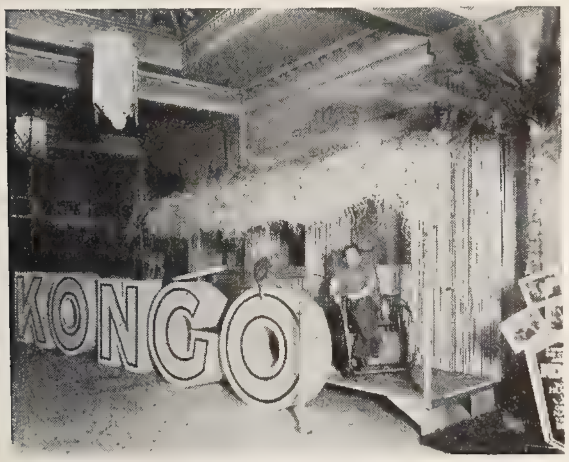


MANAGER OLDER HAS BEEN TURNING OUT STRIKING DISPLAYS

Here is some photographic evidence of what Dick Older, manager of the well known Victory Theatre, Salt Lake City, has been undertaking in the way of lobby displays.

The one on the Zane Grey film presents quite an elaborate scenic effect on the out-of-door theme. The mountain background was obtained with a Western drop, while real trees and sage brush, model horse and live coyote were used to fill out the general scheme in the foreground. A cloud effect machine was adjusted to make the clouds hit just over the mountain peaks on the back drop. The extent of complimentary remarks by patrons on this display classes it as one of the best ever turned out in the city.





The other inner lobby display made for "Kongo" featured the exterior of a thatched, bamboo house, live man and a real monkey, and it, too, was most effective. Note the large, well made compo-board title letters, blocked and flittered. Other accessories consisted of frames and stills.

We're glad to present these fine displays of Older's and feel sure both will be of interest to Dick's army of fellow members when constructing sets for the same pictures or those with similar themes. News from the Victory and Older has been missing for some little time and now that he's back on the active list we'll look for further evidence of his work.

Tony Williams Now D. M.

Tony Williams, former manager of the De Witt Theatre, Bayonne, N. J., recently received a well earned promotion to the post of district manager for Warner theatres in Hudson County, comprising eight theatres. He has been with Warners for the past five years, the last two of which were spent in Bayonne. Tony will make his headquarters at Newark.

HERE'S A COUPLE OF BUSINESS BUILDING GAGS FROM SULLIVAN

Here's a couple of show-selling gags recently used to good effect by George W. Sullivan, manager of the Cathaum Theatre, State College, Pa.

For a trade booster at the start of the New Year he put on a January Movie Month and arranged his program in the form of a monthly calendar on the inside spread. All attractions for the month were boxed-off like the dates on a calendar and reaction on part of patrons after distribution was splendid, many commenting to the management on quality of the line-up. Although readers were cautioned in a note at the top portion that changes might have to be made, it was only necessary to make a few substitutions at the close of the month; which is a pretty good showing in view of the fact that it's difficult to set more than 20 pictures that far in advance.

As an additional plug among a selected class of women on a mailing list, an attractive form letter, set up in dignified type style, was sent out on two pictures on the list for the month. One was "Strange Interlude" and the other "Animal Kingdom." It was pointed out that the former ran for six months at a $2 top in New York City and that the other had the distinction of opening Radio City.

We're sure the above will be interesting to George's fellow Club members and hope he will be able to find time to shoot along some more of his ideas, even though we know for a fact that most of his hours are devoted to the arduous task of producing results at the box office. At any rate, here's hoping.

HOW TECHNOCRACY WILL AFFECT THEATRE MANAGEMENT

C. WOLF FOUND THIS PLAN EFFECTIVE FOR SATURDAY MAT. TRADE

In addition to the many plans already detailed in this department for the building of kiddie patronage, we are privileged to submit one used to excellent results in Indiana by C. J. Wolf, president of the Young Amusement Company, Marion, Ohio, and recently put over to equal advantage as a means of increasing Saturday trade at the Marion, his "B" house.

When he first arrived in the city he found business at the Marion in an unsatisfactory condition, with practically no kiddie patronage. Following the same plan he tried out in an Indiana house, he tied up with one of the leading boys' stores in town, which has a very large mailing list. A card was sent to every name on this list, together with special copy in the store advertisement every night and similar copy in the theatre ad, both announcing formation of a Kiddie Club.

Feeling that he could hold their interest if the youngsters could be sold the idea of attending the first chapter of a serial, Wolf arranged to give them a free party at the Palace, his company's "A" house. Over 2,700 kiddies came to the theatre and were presented with a membership card. During the performance Wolf spoke to them from the stage, outlining rules of the organization and explaining that they would be admitted to the Marion every third day for five cents and that if cards signified perfect attendance they would be awarded a prize.

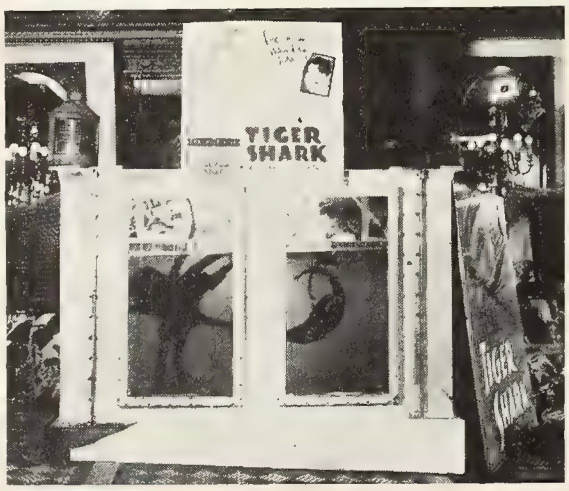
As the result of this move the "B" house is doing excellent business and between the two houses Wolf has about all the kiddie trade in town. They take decided interest in their membership cards and try their level best not to miss a chapter in order to participate in the awards which are given away at the conclusion of the 12th chapter.

After successfully trying his plan out for the second time Wolf is firmly convinced of its soundness as a means of building kiddie patronage and wants to pass it along for the benefit of other theatre men in this organization. Thanks to him for his contribution, and we'll hope for more show-selling information from this energetic Club member.

GOLD PROMOTED FISH TANK AND SPECIMENS TO EXPLOIT PICTURE

When playing "Tiger Shark," Erwin Gold, manager of the Walker Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and one of the supervisors on the Randforce Circuit, promoted a large tank and specimens of rare fish to create the illusion of an aquarium in the lobby of his theatre. Nets were stretched at either side of the tank and ship's lanterns were placed on the top corners.

We believe that the Club is indebted to Monty MacLevy, former publicity director of Randforce, for the accompanying photo. Now that Monty is hustling for another circuit out on Long Island, we'll have to depend upon the Randforce men direct for news of what's going on their firing line. Let's hear from you, Erwin, and your fellow showmen in Frisch and Rinzler houses.



HERMAN BAMBERGER GAVE INTELLIGENCE TEST TO MOVIEGOERS

Suggestions pertaining to same will be published if they merit such treatment.

Night after night we've been having our little huddle trying to figure out just how a very ordinary lady and gent could best convey to you the season's greetings. I thought we could get away with some simple expression like this. . . . "Just pack up your troubles and you'll come smilin' through 1933 with loads of happiness and prosperity," but that didn't sound so good to the Mrs. ——, so we wound up with a little trouble in paradise, and I felt guilty as Hell for having been the cause of a house divided.

Well, we didn't reach any agreement, and the Mrs. said "Horsefeathers, let me have just one hour with you tonight and we'll get this thing over with," so I replied, "You said a mouthful, it's about time!" So we started it all over again, and the Mrs., being a member of the wiser sex, called me some vile names, ranging all the way from a fake expert to a genuine menace to society. I knew this couldn't go on forever, the honor of the family was at stake, so I said, "Be a good sport and for once surrender gracefully," and she gave me the shock of my life by replying "Okay America!"

So after all this messin' around here 'tis! Just sit tight, are you listening?

We wish you a very merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year!

AD MAKE-UP AN IMPORTANT PART OF A SHOWMAN'S JOB!

To Better Understand Proper Procedure You Must Get Acquainted With the Workings of Local Composing Rooms!

Suggestions of Two Smart Admen Are Contained in This Valuable and Timely Article on Good Newspaper Ad'v'g!

by JOSEPH FELDMAN and KEN LONG

Here is a swell article on newspaper make-up crammed full of vital information on newspaper advertising. Joe Feldman, publicity director for Warner Theatres in Pittsburgh wrote the beginning. The second half is a reprint of Ken Long's important type article from last summer. Both are tied together by the particular subject under discussion.

NEWSPAPER advertising remains the backbone of successful campaigns in the selling of theatre merchandise.

Because of the fact that we use it day in and day out, we are often inclined to overlook its real value and become slip-shod and careless in our handling of it.

Newspaper advertising invariably reflects the character of the Manager running a theatre. If it is sloppy, hackneyed or lacks selling punch, you may count on it that the Manager of the theatre is failing to apply good showmanship to the rest of his show-selling activities as well as to the newspaper ads.

Yet the fundamentals of newspaper advertising are as simple as a child's first reader. A fairly intelligent individual can grasp these principles in a very short time and with but a few months' practice apply them effectively. The only excuse for a sloppy-looking ad is the carelessness or criminal ignorance of the individual preparing it and its lack of selling qualities reflect only the fact that no thought has gone into the weighing of the various angles that will appeal to the people likely to patronize that theatre.

This has been written with the thought that it may serve as a reference piece to refresh your memory on some of the fundamentals in the mechanical processes of setting-up an ad. The ad layouts included show you what can be done without the aid of an artist to make up attractive ads. These ads can be set by almost any Composing Room and have been used any number of times. They combine attractiveness, attention-getting qualities, simplicity and economy. They are easy to duplicate and by playing around a bit with pencil and paper you should be able to improve them. Try them out on your typewriter. If you think this article has proven useful after you have read it, let us know and we will start working on another one along similar lines.

In the Composing Room

The ad you send down to a newspaper is usually composed of both mats and type. The type may be set either by hand or by the Linotype machines, depending upon its size and kind. You will find type discussed on another page of this pamphlet.

While the type is being set by the compositors you mat is sent to the Stereotype Room, where it is first toasted to get all the moisture out of it so as to prevent its blistering when the hot lead is poured into it. It is then put into a stereotyping machine in which lead is poured into the mat. The resulting cast is as high as the body of the face of the type with which it will be surrounded. When the cast is cooled it is sent up to the Composing Room, where the compositors with saws and chisels cut it up in the manner you have indicated on your layout. The cast of your mat is then set into the body of the type as indicated in your layout and the entire layout is placed in the page form, which is nothing more or less than a steel frame which locks the entire page of type rigidly into place and does not permit it to fall out or move around. The page form is then laid on a flat slab over which a page mat, made of the same stuff of which your mat is made, is laid. Rollers are then passed over the mat, pressing it down onto the type cast or cuts on the page reproducing these on the page mat. This mat is sent through the same processes that your mat went through with the exception that the mat is cast in a semi-circle, thus enabling the pressmen to lay it on the cylinders of the rotary press.

When all of the casts for all of the pages of the paper are on the cylinders of the presses, the power is turned on and in a few moments the press is turning out thousands of papers, printed, folded and counted.

The most direct manner of getting a vivid impression and thorough knowledge of these processes is to go through the entire printing plant of your newspaper from top to bottom and follow your ad through from the time it reaches the Composing Room desk

The above ad sketches will serve to illustrate some of the points suggested by Joe Feldman.

SOME POINTERS ON AD. MAKE-UP!

to the time it appears in th epaper. It will be a couple of hours well spent.

You will note from the above that because of the fact that most modern newspapers are printed from casts and not from the original type or casts that you will jeopardize the chances of your ad getting a clear reproduction if you permit one newspaper to send its page mat over to the other newspaper for reproduction of your ad. The other newspaper will cut the mat of your ad out, cast it, make a new mat for the page mat and a re-cast for the page cast. Thus, you are some four or five processes removed from your original mat, and since every cast is necessarily a trifle shallower than the mat from which it is made, the succeeding mat is likely to be shallower still, the cast from your mat will be of insufficient depth to give a clear impression in high-speed printing.

The following was originally published in the Club section, issue of July 16, 1932, and was written and illustrated by Ken Long as part of an ad series he was writing for us.

The ad-writer should be a close student of type and type effects, for the broader his knowledge of this subject, the more effective and forceful will be his daily advertisement.

Let's start at the beginning and find out what type is all about. According to Webster, the definition of type is: a rectangular block, usually of metal, having its face so shaped as to produce by printing, a letter, figure, etc.

Explaining the Type!

In Figure 1 is illustrated the letter M and a diagram of the type used to produce it.

"A" is the body, which includes all the metal with the exception of the cut-in portion forming the letter.

"B" is the face, or the style or cut of the character on the type, such as bold face, light face, etc.

"C" is the shoulder which allows space for such letters as g, j and y.

"D" is the counter. It is the depression between the lines of the face.

"E" is the ceriph . . . the short fine line added as a finish at the top and bottom of unconnected lines. (There are no ceriphs on Gothic type and many modern types such as Futura.)

"F" is the stem . . . the thick line of the face.

"G" is the beard.......the slope between the outer edge of the face and the shoulder.

"H" is the nick. It is a shallow groove across the front of the body, used as a guide in composing. It also prevents mixing of different faces of the same body.

"I" is the feet . . . two small projections on which the body rests.

"J" is the groove . . . the hollow space between the feet.

There you have a graphic picture of type.

"Picas" and Other Phrases!

Now let's learn the meaning of such expressions as upper and lower case, pica, points, lead, etc.

The expression upper case means capital letters. Lower case means small letters. When copy is marked upper and lower case, capitals are used for the first letter in each word, or sentence, as the copy on the layout indicates.

The height of type is measured by points. One point equals approximately one-seventy-second of an inch. Therefore, when type is spoken of as 72 points, it means that the body, not the face, is approximately one inch high. The face of a 72-point capital letter is only about 54 points high, the remaining 18 points being taken up by the shoulder, as may be seen in Figure 1.

The pica is a unit using for measuring width. It is equal in size to 12-point type. Therefore, when a column is said to be 12 picas wide, it means approximately two inches. (Thirteen picas is the standard newspaper column width; however, many newspaper columns are 12½ picas wide . . . a difference of less than one-eighth of an inch.) While on the subject of measuring, a line is the term used by some newspapers in designating the depth of an ad. (There are 14 lines to an inch.) However, it is usually sufficient to dimension ads by columns wide and inches deep.

A lead is a thin strip of metal used to make space between lines of type. If the instruction specify type to be leaded, a regular two-point lead is used. If specified solid, no leads are used. It is not always necessary to specify whether or not body copy should be leaded, as the compositor will usually set it to take up the entire space allowed in the layout . . . leaded or solid. However, leaded copy is more readable and should be specified when space allows.

Display and Body Type!

Type is divided into two classes . . . display type and body type. Display type is a heavier face than body type and should be used (unless legible characteristic lettering is given in mat form in the press sheet) for catch-line, title, cast and all parts of the advertisement which should be emphasized. Body type is a light face type, and as its name implies, would be used for setting the body copy in the ad.

Most display type is made in sizes from six point to 72 point, and in three widths of faces . . . namely, condensed, standard and extended. Some type families also have an extra-condensed face.

The Type Families!

Every style, or family, of type has a name, such as Franklin Gothic, Cheltenham, Caslon, John Hancock, etc. When specifying type for an ad, it is spoken of as 10-point Franklin Gothic, 24-point Cheltenham Bold, etc. The face of a six-point letter of a certain family is exactly the same in style as the 72-point letter of that same family, the only difference being the size.

Of course, all display types are not adaptable to advertising. Some are too ornamental and hard to read. Others lack character, etc. Remember, there is no better way to keep the reader reading than by making it easy for him. Use type type that is legible and forceful.

Don't Use Too Many!

It is inadvisable to use more than three different type faces in one ad. In fact, it is unnecessary! For example, an excellent ad may be made using Cheltenham type only, as this family alone consists of Cheltenham Bold Extra Condensed, Cheltenham Bold Condensed, Cheltenham Bold, Cheltenham Bold Extended, Cheltenham Bold Italic, Cheltenham Old Style, Cheltenham Old Style Italic, Cheltenham Wide and others . . .over eight different characteristics in bold, light and italic faces and of course a variety of sizes.

In making my layouts here in New York, I use Cheltenham type quite frequently. The reason for this, aside from the fact that it is well adapted for newspaper work, is that I know most newspapers have this type in stock.

Body type is made in sizes from agate, or five points, to 18 point. A Roman face is most generally used in newspaper advertising.

Less than six point should never be used for body copy, and six point should be used sparingly. Of course, in small ads it is sometimes necessary to use six point, but it is advisable to avoid it if possible.

Eight point is probably the most popular size for the setting of body copy.

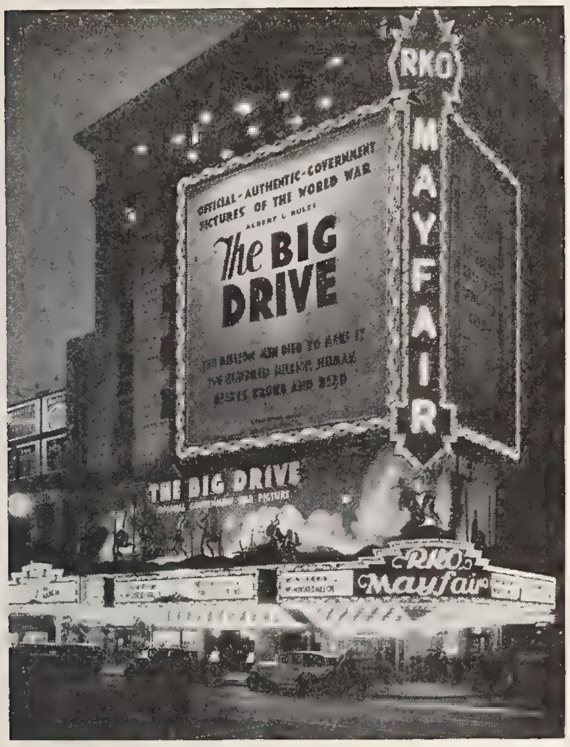
Ten point, of course, is excellent if the space allows.

As mentioned in a previous article, care should be taken not to set body copy too wide . . . 35 to 40 letters and spaces to a line is plenty. Also avoid setting it too narrow as this necessitates the dividing of too many words.

ATTRACTIVE FRONT HELPED SELL WAR FILM IN NEW YORK

Another striking front and lobby display was constructed for the Mayfair Theatre, New York City, when "The Big Drive," claimed to be authentic film records of the Great War from government archives of eight nations, filled its engagement.

The accompanying photo shows the usual, big flash on the Mayfair's facade and the war scenes atop the long marquee on the Seventh Avenue side, which depicted troops in action, bursting shells, etc. Note also the sales copy along the front of the marquee. The entrance was dressed with enlarged scene stills and cut-outs and a scene of "no man's land," with barbed-wire entanglements.



Aside from reports that this picture has been doing exceptionally well in various key spots, its subject matter apparently offers great opportunities for exploitation among veteran's organizations, newspapers, all military units (including government agencies) and, on account of its scope, among people of all nationalities. We will touch upon these phases further as additional reports reach Club headquarters.

Changes at Asheville

Thomas L. Sterling, former manager of the Paramount Theatre, Asheville, N. C., has replaced William Byers as manager of the Plaza Theatre in that city as the result of the latter's move to Norton, Va., to become general manager of the new Bolling Theatre.

Cecil Young, formerly assistant manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, has been promoted to the post of manager of the Paramount. Frank LaBar, Jr., manager of the Imperial, retains his position.

Chairman Goldberg!

Aaron Goldberg, chief of the Aaron Goldberg Theatres, operating five houses in San Francisco, Calif., was recently named chairman of the considerably publicized and important Entertainment and Public Morals Committee of the new San Francisco County Grand Jury.

SPOTLIGHT! PLEASE!

Most of you know there is a little town in Ohio called Hamilton. Most of you don't know that a big percentage of the population comes to Cincinnati over the week-end to visit our theatres.

Last week at the Albee Theatre the following episode occurred and featured a man, woman and child from Hamilton and one of our usherettes. The mother and child started for the rest room and in descending the steps the heel broke from the mother's shoe and she fell down the marble steps. Immediately an usherette rushed to the aid of the patron. The shoe was sent out and fixed. The husband was called from the theatre. A cab was called for the party and they were sent to the garage where their own car was parked. The woman in question happened to be "somebody" in Hamilton. This attention that was showered so lavishly on an Albee patron has today become the talk of Hamilton. This is not exaggeration, either. It was told me by a man who knows many, many people in Hamilton and who states that he has heard the story at least 20 times.

The patron usually winds up the story by saying: "Even my own mother couldn't have paid me more attention than the Albee usherette. She seemed more concerned about my injury than I. She wanted to call a doctor and certainly did everything in her power to help me. I never knew that an accident could be actually made pleasant and I never knew that people in public places could be so attentive and so sympathetic."

Boys and girls, that's service. Service without bunk. Service that was real, because it came from the heart. The Albee management and staff have shown that while there may be many ways to handle an accident . . . there is . . . after all . . . one correct way and that is the way they used. I'm sorry I don't know the name of the usherette because I would like to personally thank her for using her brains. It is such things as this that makes me personally proud of our personnel, and glad to be a part of this RKO organization. My appreciation to all concerned in this affair.

OLSON SOLD CO-OP BY FEATURING JIG SAW PUZZLE STUNT

In line with his practice of promoting cooperative business building schemes between merchants and theatres, O. B. Olson, general manager of Alger's Theatres, Peru, Ill., recently put over a unique full page co-op ad which featured a jig-saw puzzle gag.

Among a number of ads on the page were portions of an illustration from "Washington Merry-Go-Round," depicting the "ripling of the lid" off the Capitol. Judging from the number of solutions submitted and quality of several we have at hand, the stunt went over like a house-afire with both young and old jig-saw enthusiasts.

Here is a new slant on co-ops and one which can be applied to most any picture. All necessary, it appears, is to line up your merchants and newspaper (which, we admit takes some work these days), pick out some suitable illustration and let nature take its course.

NEW MEMBER HYNES GIVES CLUB A SLANT ON WHAT HE'S DOING

Just as a starter, Jack W. Hynes, manager of Shea's and the Grand Theatres, Bradford, Pa., and one of the Club's recently elected members, gives us a slant on the campaign he waged on "Prosperity."

For one thing, he promoted two corking co-op pages in two different newspapers in his city, both of which were entirely paid for by merchants. Other efforts included distribution of "Prosperity Money" among school children; special lobby display of pennants, banners, snipes and burgees; placing of signs in all local busses; use of "Prosperity Stickers" on all packages handed out in five local stores one week prior to playdate; placing of 50 snipes in prominent Main Street windows; posting of 25 one-sheets in other prominent spots in town, and a lobby display of an attractive three-sheet comedy cut-out of Dressler and Moran. Numerous readers and five two-column cuts on Dressler and Moran were obtained gratis in the papers.

The above ought to give Jack's fellow Round Tablers some idea of the ground he covers when campaigning, which, it seems to us, is considerable. We're mighty glad to list this new Club member among the active contributors and will hope to tell the rest of the gang a lot more about his work in the future.

STEFFEY'S PRIZE WINNER!

Costless Exploitation Played an Important Part in This Showman's Bid for Prize Money!

ASIDE from extensive billing and a variety of effective tie-ups, the campaign of Frank Steffey, manager of the State Theatre, Minneapolis, which took second award in the exploitation contest sponsored by M-G-M, was dominated by direct appeal to adult patronage.

When preparing his newspaper advertising, he regarded the figures of Harlow portrayed in the press book as rather sensuous in appearance and played them up. Parents were advised not to bring their children and this copy was added to the regular screen trailer and stressed in other mediums. Extra newspaper space was used throughout the campaign, including some corking publicity stories from the press sheet planted in the amusement sections of leading papers one week in advance. Currently, he received some excellent breaks on the amusement pages of all three local papers. One local critic gave the picture a 4-A rating.

Two-Weeks Teaser!

Two weeks in advance special teaser trailers of one frame, following various units of the program, read as follows: "Beware—Red Headed Woman Is Coming—Wives—Husbands—Look Out! The Red Headed Woman Is Coming." The regular screen trailer was run a full week in advance, in conjunction with special trailers run on the screens of all other Publix houses in downtown Minneapolis.

To somewhat tone down the suggestive note in the newspaper ads, art in the lobby and on front was carried out in a dignified manner, most of the displays being made up in gold frame borders and black velour background. The regular exchange six-sheet, with a bit more sexy expression, and a special, full length still of Harlow dressed in an evening gown, were both effectively used. In another instance the figure of Harlow was taken from the regular 24-sheet and mounted in a 12-foot velour circle, enhanced with indirect lighting and spots. This flash was used in the foyer one week in advance and spotted currently in front of the box office of another Publix house closed for the time being.

Feeling that the exchange 24-sheet carried plenty of selling power it was posted on 46 boards in General Outdoor locations, properly filled out with name of theatre and play dates. This move was followed up with the tacking of 500 lithographed 22x28 cards throughout the loop district and adjacent neighborhoods. The color scheme of the posters was red and white. A special six-sheet was also successfully spotted across the street from an athletic field that attracts 50,000 people weekly.

Red-Head Matinee!

The Matinee for Red Heads gag was used for opening day and created a vast amount of comment. The management provided for guest-attendance of 50 red headed women and at least 200 were in line two hours ahead of opening. This stunt acted as a bally to the passers-by. Special plugs over radio the day before opening and announcements via trailer and newspaper ads, helped put it over in a big way. The radio was also used for daily announcements during the entire engagement.

With the bathing season still on, Steffey succeeded in selling a newspaper the idea of having a photographer patrol the beaches each day for group shots of bathers. Five heads of people in the photos were circled when run and those so designated were awarded a pair of guest tickets to see the show. This stunt netted the theatre a three-column cut two days in advance and every day throughout the engagement.

Chain-Store Tie-Up!

A tie-up already in effect between theatre and a large chain grocery concern, up to the time carried out along institutional lines, developed into a corking advertising stunt. Not only was the name of theatre, attraction and dates inserted in the concern's large newspaper display ads, but similar copy was circulated through the medium of 40,000 cards handed out by the clerks of all stores. In addition, the company was sold the idea of spotting special one-sheets prepared by the theatre art department in all stores.

Another tie-up with a leading local beauty parlor operator was considered a highlight of the campaign. The proprietress provided the theatre with three good looking red headed girls, attractively attired in evening gowns, to distribute tickets in the lobby one week in advance. Aside from creating a lot of worthwhile publicity, the girls succeeded in getting rid of 22,000 tickets.

In conjunction with the above tie-up, Steffey arranged to address a special meeting of the 52 operators employed by the beauty parlor in order to sell them on the attraction and start word-of-mouth comment among 2,500 patrons who patronized the shop each week. The proprietress also gave the picture a break during the regular weekly broadcast she made over the local radio station.

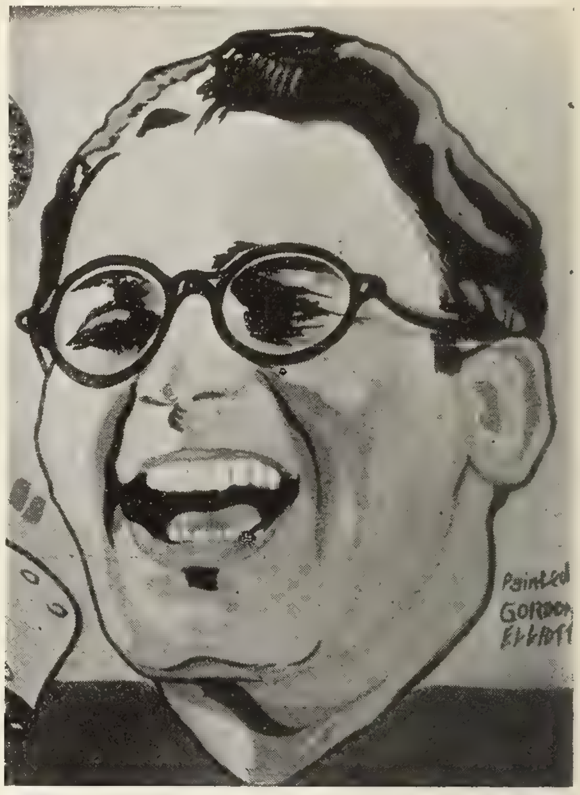
Radio Activity!

Another radio stunt that did its share to arouse interest in the picture was an announcement that a "Red Headed Woman was in circulation throughout the loop district." She was said to resemble the star in the picture and those who identified her were entitled to apply at the box office for a pair of guest tickets. Ten pair were actually given out.

Additional effort included the spotting of special quarter-sheet cards in various downtown circulating libraries located in office buildings and department stores; the spotting of 22x28's in downtown hotels and gratis ads in local publications in return for guest tickets.

ELLIOTT TURNED OUT THIS PIECE OF WORK FOR MANAGER SMITH

Here is a sample of the art work being turned out by Gordon Elliott, of the Art Sign Service, Lawrenceville, Ill., in this instance used by George Smith, manager of the Avalon Theatre in that city. The head of Harold Lloyd was painted on the right hand side of a large poster made by Elliott for "Movie Crazy."



Another photo we have at hand, too faint to reproduce, shows the attractive poster he made of "Big Broadcast," which featured the head of the star, title in large staggered letters and a circular design in keeping with radio theme of the picture.

Elliott is a newcomer to the ranks of the Round Table army and we are glad to show his fellow members the kind of work he's turning out. We will be glad to receive additional photos which will reproduce clearly.

STAGE WEDDINGS GOOD AT THIS TIME!

An old reliable, but one that rarely fails to deliver at the box office and all along the line of good showmanship. The early winter months of the new year are the best times to get behind a stunt of this sort and work it successfully, but, it differs from many other stunts in this respect: unless it is well planned far in advance, carefully engineered and closely watched, it may have a disastrous effect.

While most every type of stunt calls for care and good judgment, the stage wedding more than most others require diplomacy and tact. The reason is simple. You have too many slants that must be handled with care, and unless you do your advance planning and promoting in the proper manner you are apt to run up against many obstacles and sometimes local disfavor.

We hesitate to emphasize these points because it is apt to discourage some from trying to put over a good Stage Wedding, but we have witnessed several unforgivable blunders last winter and thought that a word of caution would be worth while at this time.

Details of successfully handled stage weddings have appeared time and again on the Club pages. If you cannot locate the particular issue just drop us a line and we'll post you or maybe dig up a reprint or two.

YES, MONTY MAC LEVY IS BUSY! CLUB SLEUTH HOLDS HIM FOR FACTS

Anyone familiar with the movements of one Monty MacLevy, general manager of the Round Table Circuit, Queens, L. I., can fully appreciate what a difficult task it is for anyone, not excepting newspapermen, to make him stand still long enough to extract a few notes on what has beeen going on in showbusiness in the Long Island communities he operates in. However, the Club's Roving Reporter succeeded in getting a firm hold on his coat-tail the other day, manoeuvred him into a corner and, from the following data, reached the conclusion that he has been making things hum since he left his old Randforce stronghold in Brooklyn.

First let's put the spot on the St. Albans Theatre, St. Albans, where the energetic Monty makes his headquarters. We have his word for it that a Benefit campaign was recently brought to a most successful finish with the cooperation of local welfare organizations and aid of trailers, form letters and program announcements used in the several houses.

Junior Orchestra!

He also recently announced formation of a Junior Orchestra, whereby aspiring junior musicians may now have opportunities to obtain actual orchestra instruction and experience by applying to Musical Director Jacob Worth. Practice is held every Saturday morning at 10:30.

In addition to the Benefit show held under the auspices of welfare committees, he tied in with the local Lions Club to sponsor a free food matinee, which also turned out to the gratification of all concerned.

Another stunt, and one that has scored an outstanding hit, was the inauguration of showings of a German picture at approximately 11 P. M. each Saturday night, when patrons see both regular show and the German film for one admission. There is a considerable portion of German-Americans in and around St. Albans and they've gone for the idea like wild-fire. This should be a great gag for any other manager similarly situated.

His Buck Jones Rangers Club, which was mentioned in these columns some time ago, is in a flourishing condition. Meetings are held every Saturday at 12:30 and the youngsters are entertained with a good show, contests and games. The largest newspaper in Queens is sponsoring this move, due to MacLevy's good salesmanship when he called on the newspaper management with the idea.

Request Features!

In addition to holding a "Request-Feature" balloting campaign, which was recently brought to a conclusion, Monty has under way a corking "Buy American" campaign among the merchants at the present time. We'll tell you more about this one just as soon as we receive full details.

Now let's take off for Springfield Gardens, another Queens community and where Charlie Sheerin manages the Garden Theatre. This village has been rather hard hit by the business depression, which, of course, does not make promotion of free give-aways from merchants an easy matter. Despite this condition, however, Sheerin featured his anniversary Week with the gifts of $400 worth of coal, electrical apparatus, food, etc. Twenty thousand tickets were distributed in the usual fashion by theatre and merchants and a very attractive lobby display was made of the different articles. The theatre's cost of the campaign was confined to $20 for printing of tickets. In connection with Anniversary Week the theatre front was decorated with flags and a large four-foot cake was placed in the lobby. An added attraction of a "Mystery Man" (magician) also helped Saturday trade along.

Other recent activities of Sheerin at the Garden include a Free Food Matinee held with the cooperation of all local churches, which netted the theatre a large amount of good will; toy matinees; meeting of the Buck Jones Club every Saturday, with opportunity contests for the youngsters, and other good will moves.

Big Gift Nights!

Goodwill is also an important factor in the affairs of the State Theatre, located over on Rockaway Boulevard and managed by Jesse T. Bonney. In addition to Kiddie Club toy matinees, held every Saturday, he has been running special Gift Nights of merchandise amounting to $75 on one night each week. Tickets are given merchants for distribution and the deal has worked out to excellent advantage for both theatre and merchants. Here, again, the policy of showing a German picture after the regular performance Saturday nights has made a decided hit with the German-American element.

The same Junior Orchestra scheme, described in foregoing paragraphs dealing with the St. Albans Theatre, has turned out equally well for the State. Another move which Bonney recently executed in a particularly effective manner was handling of the propaganda dealing with the announcement of a price reduction, a move made necessary because of a new competitive situation in his neighborhood.

So with Monty MacLevy at the helm and Russell Cohen taking an active part in the important phase of booking, these two and and their house managers are building up a smooth running theatre organization. The answer to this is that every man is taking a keen interest in his work, which, after all, is the keynote of success in any business. More about these Round Tablers in forthcoming issues.

"MICROBES" FOR THE BOX OFFICE!

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is now offering, free of all costs, including transportation charges, a most interesting one-reel subject, entitled "Man Against Microbe."

As the official information bureau for some four thousand members of the Round Table Club, we would have you know that this subject is absolutely free of all advertising and is as beneficial to every other insurance company as it is to Metropolitan.

From the box office point of view it affords you a swell opportunity to tie up with some twenty-five thousand insurance agents of the sponsoring company and through them the various child and health organizations and groups, local health authorities, newspapers, doctors and countless others, all good medicine for your box office.

"Man Against Microbe," as far as we are concerned, is one of the most interesting and entertaining subjects ever screened. It was produced in a strictly professional manner, and the photography, recording and direction leave nothing to be desired.

Also furnished free of charge with each play date are posters for store window and sniping purposes and a snappy little press book chock-full of foolproof suggestions for merchandising a free subject that will get you more dough-re-mi at the box office than most of those expensive percentage pictures you have to play.

By all means write to the Metropolitan at One Madison Avenue, New York City, and arrange for the showing of this picture. Then get in touch with your local Met. agent and work out a campaign that will give you one of the best publicity and tie-up breaks that you ever had. "CHICK"

BRAWARSKY GETTING OUT A NICE PROGRAM FOR BELLEVUE HOUSE

A very neat looking program is being published in the interests of the Bellevue Theatre, Bellevue, Pa., by Harry Brawarsky, manager of the house. It is called "Talkie Topics" and is edited by Howard Lichey, a well known publicity man in this business. While the program does not carry any advertising, nor have any merchants been solicited in this respect, space will be sold at a price in keeping with its class and the large mailing list of 3,000 weekly. The front page of the issue we have at hand is devoted to a sketch of Clara Bow; there is a page for editorial comment; the back cover carries programs two weeks in advance and the remaining six pages are filled with interesting notes for the fan, small boxes of institutional copy and scene and star cuts.

Incidentally, the Bellevue is located in one of Pittsburgh's choice suburban sections and caters to a wealthy clientele; that is, as Lichey points out, if there are still people left with bank accounts a good proportion of them live in the Bellevue's neighborhood. The house is therefore operated in keeping with this class of patronage, a fair price of admission is maintained and pictures are selected with utmost care. We can add that the program follows out the general scheme, as to appearance, care in editing, etc.

NAT WOLF AND SID DANNENBERG WAGED EFFECTIVE CAMPAIGN

Once again we receive word of Sid Dannenberg and Nat Wolf's activities out in Cleveland, and as usual they still are doing big things. When "Silver Dollar" played the Lake, Variety and Uptown theatres in Cleveland, Dannenberg and Wolf tied up with the Cleveland Public Library. They distributed 10,000 book marks and plastered the entire branch with stills and displays on the picture. A special screening was held for the leading members of the city's women's clubs who later went out and did plenty of talking for the picture.

All people celebrating their Silver Anniversary during the week the film was shown were invited to the theatre. They had to show their marriage certificates at the door. A special want ad was placed in all three Cleveland papers one week in advance of playdate: "Have You an Old Silver Dollar? In conjunction with the playing of Edward G. Robinson in SILVER DOLLAR, Warner Bros. Theatres are searching for the oldest Silver Dollar in greater Cleveland. Apply now with your coin either at the Lake, Variety or Uptown Theatres." When the people came with their coins, their name, address and the date of the coins were recorded and at the end of the week a swell feature story was used in the papers on the stunt.

A tie-up was effected with a large bakery company in which they distributed 10,000 Edward G. Robinson pictures in their cakes and 1,000 window cards in the finest grocery stores through greater Cleveland. Another tie-up was with the Bailey Company's three department stores on a "Silver Dollar Guessing Contest" in their store windows. Candy silver dollars were distributed in the stores and theatres. Bailey's took a lot of space in the newspapers to merchandise this tie-up and also gave the theatre plenty of space in the best windows of their stores.

Five thousand music wrappers were distributed by McCrory's and over 300 Street Car Cards were used. A Magic Square contest was used in the Cleveland Plain Dealer and proved to be the most sensational newspaper-theatre hook-up that has ever happened. Answers just poured in by the carload. Here is the story that ran in the Plain Dealer:

"You've heard of cross-word puzzles, word games and jigsaw puzzles—but have you ever heard of the 'Magic Square'? Maybe not. Well, 'Magic Square' is something in a new game in which a complete sentence is hidden within a square resembling a cross-word puzzle.

"Warner Bros. Lake and the Plain Dealer introduce this new craze to Cleveland in conjunction with the showing of Edward G. Robinson's latest vehicle, 'Silver Dollar,' which starts next Saturday at the Lake Theatre. Hidden in the magic square is an eleven word sentence which has to do with the plot of 'Silver Dollar.' This is the way you go about solving it: Begin with the square which is circled. Move one square up, down, right or left (not diagonally) and spell out the sentence which is descriptive of the hero of 'Silver Dollar.' End at the square which had a period in it."

Cash awards and guest tickets were given for correct solutions.

One of the biggest tie-ups in the campaign was with the Postal Telegraph for insertion of 25,000 midget telegrams in all wires throughout greater Cleveland and using ten displays on their counters. A popular restaurant featured a special "Silver Dollar" dinner. All patrons that gave cashiers of all three theatres five dollar bills for tickets received a silver dollar in their change.

FRANK BOUCHER WAGED GREAT CAMPAIGN FOR GREATER SHOW SEASON

It's taken us quite some time to get around to setting down a brief account of the fine campaign worked out on Greater Show Season by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., and we'll just have to fall back on the old alibi of "better late than never."

He lined up merchants and newspapers solidly behind the idea by selling them the Prosperity, or Trade Revival idea. A merchants' section in the paper was promoted and generously supported with a large amount of free space, even to the point of editorial mention on several occasions. A full page Warner ad also appeared at this time.

Additional advertising and exploitation included a variety of special heralds; special trailers; other co-operative advertising; listing and advertising of special attractions during Greater Show Season; window cards; door knob hangers; special programs; front and lobby especially decorated for the occasion; tie-up with certain merchants for distribution of autographed prints of star's photos with tie-up ad on back; lavish use of pennants and burgees; use of special posters; wide circulation of messages by bannered trucks, and a big parade on opening night.

Any one who has followed Frank Boucher's work will at once recognize from the above that he went about Greater Show Season campaign with his customary thoroughness. While we haven't attempted to cover every detail, the plan of campaign is there and other Club members may find it helpful when mapping out similar moves.

Schwartz Check-Up!

As a means of checking up on a large weekly program mailing list in a city where people are constantly on the move, A. H. Schwartz, head of the Schwartz Theatre Circuit, Brooklyn, N. Y., recently mailed postal return cards to obtain information before a designated time as to whether continued mailing of the programs was desired by patrons.

Although quite an expensive item on account of its make-up and postage covering a vast circulation, it is generally conceded that the Schwartz type of weekly program is a most valuable advertising medium in that it lays out the weekly changes of all houses in the various neighborhoods. The check-up, however, is instrumental in killing off all dead timber.

It was recently announced on the screen at the Farragut Theatre, A. H. Schwartz house on Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, that "Jadite" night would be held one night (Wednesday) each week, on which ladies would be presented with one of a large assortment of useful kitchen articles, suitable either for culinary work or for use in electric refrigerators. No drawings or numbers are used in making the gifts. Eddie Lewis is manager of the Farragut.

Allison Honored!

George Allison, manager of the Warner-Ritz Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., was awarded 2nd Prize in the Christmas Drive made by managers in the Warner-Stanley-Fabian division. He was formerly associated with Lee Ochs' theatres in uptown New York City.

He and his partner, Elmer Amidon, teamed up late in '32 and took over operation of this house, one formerly managed by Fred Johnson, who is another member of the Round Table Club and now located in Reynoldsville, Pa. We are glad to have "Duke's" application for membership at hand and to note that he and Amidon have already found this department beneficial in the matter of getting under way. We will watch with interest their career and hope both will find time to keep their Club posted on what stunts are being used to develop trade.

is the house manager and assistant to George Delis, city manager for A. G. Constant, operator of the Palace Theatre, Canton, Ohio, and he's another new member in line for introduction to his host of fellow Club members. We're glad to acknowledge Keith's application and to list his name among the large army of Round Tablers. It's a foregone conclusion he is in sympathy with the aims of this organization and we'll be on the lookout for his contributions. Between Chambers and his chief the Club should be able to keep a line on what's going on among Constant houses.

is "Duke" King's partner in management of the Latonia Theatre, Oil City, Pa., and we're also mighty glad to acknowledge his application of Club membership. While "Duke" is in charge of the house proper, Elmer takes care of the office, does the booking, etc., and also takes a fling at display work. Both are licensed projectionists and divide time in the booth. Seems to us they've got a pretty strong combination and one which ought to work out to excellent advantage in these days when everyone is trying to reduce overhead. Between the two of these new Round Tablers, the Club ought to be kept informed.

hails from out in North Judson, Indiana, where he is managing director of the Gayble Theatre, and we're also glad to acknowledge his recent application for membership in the Round Table Club. Now that you're on the active list of contributors, John, let's see what you can do to help keep these pages full of interesting slants on what's going on in showbusiness. What was that last stunt you used to swell box office receipts? Shoot along an account of it.

manager of the Rialto Theatre, Gladstone, Mich., sent his application for membership in the Round Table Club along the way we like to see them come in—request for Club pin, an account of a recent campaign and approval of the good work being carried on by the rest of the fellows in this organization. Okay, Vogt, and we're mighty glad to have you with us to keep the ball rolling along. Now that you've started off on the right foot, let us know from time to time what you are doing to boost box office trade out your way.

J. KENNETH HENRY

hails from up in the Bronx section of New York City, where he manages the Park Plaza Theatre for the Skouras Brothers. "After all these years," as he states, he at last enters the fold and promises to become an active contributor to this department. He handles a big house, which is first run up in his neighborhood, and we certainly believe the Club is in line for some first class yarns on how showbusiness is handled in a large New York City neighborhood house. Shoot along your ideas, Ken.

HARRY PICKETT

has the job of helping Eddie Hough manage the Rivoli Theatre down South in Greenville, S. C., and his boss is sponsoring Harry's application for membership in this showmen's Club. According to Eddie, this newly elected Round Tabler has about everything it takes to make a theatre man, so with Hough's able coaching it probably won't be long before we'll be sending out another "framed certificate". At any rate, you're all familiar with Eddie Hough's brand of showmanship, so draw your own conclusions. Between the two of these Round Tablers the Club ought to be able to keep informed on showbusiness in Greenville.

is the manager of the Y. M. C. A. Theatre in what he terms the best "little town in the South"—Ware Shoals, S. C., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this ever-increasing organization of showmen. He admits he's been following Club doings for quite a long time and now wishes to repay his fellow Round Tablers by contributing some gags of his own. Okay, "Hank", and we'll be awaiting your next communication. Unless we're very much mistaken, we've heard of you before in showbusiness.

operates the Arcade Theatre up in the town of Sodus, N. Y., and since his application for membership in this Club doesn't state his official capacity, we'll set him down as owner-manager. Glad to have you with us, Mills, and we hope you will also do your full share to keep these columns full of show-selling tips for your fellow Round Tablers. What have you been doing of late to bring in patrons? Jot down an account of your operating plan and shoot it in to Club headquarters. We'll gamble you have some dope which will be appreciated by others in this organization. Let's hear from you.

GEORGE A. GOOKIN

is the advertising and publicity manager for the Majestic Theatre down in Johnson City, Tenn., and at this writing it is officially recorded that he is a full fledged member of the Round Table Club. This acknowledgment is really a little tardy in some respects, since George has already made a number of contributions to these columns, but he's in the army now and his "framed certificate" will shortly be on its way. He's a seasoned showman, having managed a number of houses before going into the advertising game on his own. At present he is acting as "all-around man," specializing as musical director and manager of vaudeville attractions, which he coaches and develops into acts that register with Majestic patrons. We'd like to have a special article from him on his complete plan of production.

ROBERT S. ROGERS, JR.

owns and manages the Carolina Theatre down South in Kingstree, S. C., and we're glad to report that he, too, has become a member of this organization. The Club is deeply indebted to many South Carolina showmen for a whole flock of interesting show-selling slants and we're going to take it for granted that Rogers fully intends to do his share toward keeping up the good work. When the opportunity comes along, Robert, jot down an account of what you're doing and shoot it along. We'll do the rest.

is located out in Oglesby, Ill., where he manages the Aida Theatre, and the Welcome sign is also out for this newly elected Round Tabler. Now that your application has been duly recorded, Adams, get the good, old Club spirit firmly intrenched in your mind and put your shoulder to the wheel of progress. What was that last stunt you used to such excellent effect at the box office? Shoot along an account of it so that we can pass the tip along to your brother managers.

operates the Princess Theatre down South in Selma, Louisiana, and Mrs. Fordyce is another lady-manager to join the ranks of the Round Table Army. The ladies certainly have a reputation for instilling new ideas in showbusiness and we will look forward with much interest to receipt of her next communication to Club headquarters, in which we hope she will let this department know what methods she is using to boost box office trade down in her section of the country.

is located over in Athol, Mass., where he has the job of helping T. H. Newton operate the Lyric Theatre. George not only functions as advertising manager but holds a projectionist's license as well. He's an old timer in this game, having operated a flock of one-night stands in the days of silent pictures, and we want him to know that we're very glad to list his name among this department's newly elected members. Let's hear what you, George, and your chief are doing to boost box office trade at the Lyric.

is the lessee and manager of the Blue Water Theatre, Kincardine, Ontario, Canada, and it's a pleasure to list his name among the many fellows in the Canadian contingent of this organization. He is thoroughly in accord with the work being carried out by this department and proposes to do his share to keep the old ball rolling along. Let the Club know your operating plan, Vernon, and if you have any good show-selling tricks up your sleeves, shoot them along.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 159:—(A) Give us your idea of the damage likely to be inflicted upon film if its rewinding and repairing be entrusted to an usher or other well meaning but incompetent man. (B) Name all those various things which may inflict damage upon film during the process of projection. (C) Name the various possibilities for damage to film in the process of rewinding.

Answer to Question No. 153

Bluebook School Question No. 153 was: "(A) Name the various things which will operate to increase resistance in a water pipe. In an electrical conductor. (B) What determines the necessary size of a water pipe or electrical conductor? (C) At what point does overload begin in an electrical conductor? Name the various reasons why an electric conductor should never be overloaded."

Wilbur Ostrum sent a most excellent answer to Question 152, too late for publication. We trust he will continue with the school. Judging by the excellence of his one letter, such continuance will be of real value. The following made acceptable answers to No. 153:

C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, Dale Danielson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, J. Cermak, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth, W. Ostrum, H. D. Schofield, H. Edwards, I. E. Rayner, W. Broadbent, J. B. Buckley and D. Singleton, Nic Granby, G. Harrison and F. Harlor, S. Howard and D. Kurts, A. Bailey, T. M. Vinson, H. B. Coates and D. Coates, D. Lalley and F. Ferguson, A. Wells, D. Holler and D. R. Peters, N. McGuire, W. R. Lemke, T. L. Danielson and H. Pilson, P. R. Fox, C. L. Cyrus and B. Olmsby, L. G. Gregeson and J. Hendershot, L. N. Traxler, F. F. Franks, H. Rogers, R. Wheeler and R. Schuler, M. R. Davidson and R. O. Tanner, D. L. Blinkendorfer, L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis, R. G. Patterson, L. D. Simmons, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, G. Tinlin, M. Henderson and K. L. Knight, B. Jones and D. K. Ormie, W. T. Granger and A. Wythe, J. B. Nalley and M. D. Olewon, E. Rymer, and B. L. Tanner, W. D. Love and W. Love, M. H. Lonberger, J. L. Hanson and F. Hanson, H. D. and B. L. Palmer, D. Haber and D. Breaston, D. U. Granger, U. L. Tipton, R. L. Mitchel, T. Turk, D. L. Sinklow, F. B. Klar and T. H. Morton, D. V. Peterson, L. Jones and B. L. Banning, L. M. Richards, L. Hutch and D. Goldberg, K. Griener, H. R. Baldwin, G. Thompson, A. R. Roseley, L. Thomas and D. D. Davis, F. L. Granby, J. Daniels, D. Michelson, M. Henderson, E. L. Richardson, T. McGruder, R. Geddings and L. Grant, R. Simms and O. L. Davis, P. L. Jensen, K. L. Hess, M. Gregg and L. D. Rubin, H. D. Tyler, G. H. Spencer, J. H. Rathburn and D Little, F. L. Granby, D. Emmerson, J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh, O. Allbright and J. Williams.

Only one man out of them all made a really complete answer to Section A. It was J. Wentworth, who says: "Those various things which will increase resistance in a water pipe are (1) decreased diameter of pipe (2) increased length of pipe, diameter unchanged, (3) increased roughness of interior wall of pipe, diameter remaining unchanged. (4) added impurities in water, (5) added pressure—though of the last I am not altogether certain, nor have I been able to find any citation of authority on the point. It seems reasonable to presume added pressure would not only increase internal friction of the water itself, but also would add to the resistance offered by the pipe walls."

That last is an interesting point. I have myself searched authoritative text books for light on this question, without result. I have also called up the office of the New York City water department without result, except that the engineer with whom I talked was "inclined to believe Wentworth to be correct in his assumption that increased pressure would increase resistance as stated."

Continuing Wentworth's reply: "Those things which would increase electrical resistance, assuming constant current flow, are decreased diameter or increased length of conductor, diameter remaining constant; use of conductor having lower conductivity because of different materials used in its making; and increased temperature, except in the case of carbon."

We will let T. Van Vaulkenburg tackle Section B, which he does as follows: "The necessary size or cross section of either a water pipe or electrical conductor is determined by the volume of water or current to be carried. If the volume of flow be too great, excessive resistance will result. The point where excessive friction is generated marks the point where normal capacity is reached. This point is determined by the National Board of Fire Underwriters in its wire capacity tables, though in them some slight allowance is made as a factor of safety. In other words the tables fix points slightly below the actual safe carrying capacity.

Section C also was completely answered by only one person, G. E. Doe. All but Doe neglected to note the fact that heating of wires would operate to increase resistance permanently. Doe says: "Overload in an electrical conductor begins when its temperature is increased above a certain figure fixed by the National Board of Fire Underwriters. The reasons for avoidance of overload are (a) waste of power dissipated in heat, (b) possible weakening of conductor through excessive heat, (c) possible injury to insulation through excessive heat, (d) possible permanent increase in resistance set up by excessive heat, (e) danger of fire through overheated conductors, (f) possible fusing of conductor through excessive heat (which item would include fuses), (g) possibility of trouble for the one permitting overload, especially if a licensed employee."

Government Opens Educational Unit

The motion picture activities of the United States Government have been expanded by a new service to the nontheatrical industry. Producers, distributors and users of educational films will be supplied with a monthly bulletin on current activities in this field. The information will be gathered by and issued through the Motion Picture Division of the Department, which is in charge of C. J. North and N. D. Golden. Eugene I. Way will have direct supervision of the new activities.

The department now is surveying the field with a view to ascertaining the extent of operations. Preliminary investigation indicated that approximately 500 concerns are engaged in some form of nontheatrical or educational motion picture endeavor.

By contacting church, school and university users of pictures, the department hopes to open wider the field for manufacturers of films and equipment.

One hundred and five million persons annually view nontheatrical films, according to the new bureau, which in its monthly bulletins will list data pertaining to new nontheatrical releases.

The Majority of the Country's Most Successful Theatres Use

ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

The Thalia, New York City, one of the many successful theatres using Alexander Smith carpet.

You can not put your finger on any one thing that accounts for the popularity of Alexander Smith Carpet with theatre owners in all parts of the country. Some like the way it stands up under even the heaviest traffic; some like the distinctive patterns; some the brilliant, clean-cut colors; others the luxurious "feel." All, of course, like the moderate prices. Let us send you samples and reproductions of best-selling patterns so that you can see how you like it. Also the name of our representative in your territory. W. & J. Sloane, 577 Fifth Ave., New York, sole wholesale selling agents.

because it is their paper, a publication which has grown up in and with the industry, a product of the same constructive process. Twenty-five years of showmanship and publication experience have gone into the making of the screen theatre since the nickelodeon age of 1907, and that was the year of the founding of the experience and traditions embodied in this journal of the industry.

The exhibitor turns to Motion Picture Herald each week knowing that in its pages the whole story will be told, that it will be the Herald's own story, recorded impartially for the reader, knowing that other people's stories are told between quotation marks so the reader is aware who is talking; that its pages are ever open to him and presentation of his problems; knowing that it is edited and administered with a continuous consciousness of responsibility to a good name, week after week, year after year. From the beginning it has been so.

Observations

¶ Of all the money spent by Americans for amusement in 1930—somewhat over ten billion dollars—a billion and a half was spent for motion picture entertainment. In fact, this nation averaged that amount yearly for motion picture entertainment during 1928, 1929 and 1930. And this billion and a half is by far the greatest portion of the $2,214,725,000 expended for commercial amusements of all kinds.

Since 1930, of course, there has been a sharp drop in the amount of money spent for amusement. But these figures, just released by the President's Research Committee on Social Trends, indicate what must still be the truth—that the motion picture is most emphatically the principal modern means of entertainment provided by institutions organized for profit.

These commercial institutions, moreover, are headed in recreational importance by only one activity, this being motoring and other forms of travel. "Travel and mobility," as the committee puts it, represented during the three years named, an annual cost to the American people of $6,492,151,000. Automobile touring alone cost $3,200,000,000. A total of 40,000,000 people regularly seek much of their recreation along the highways, but the committee found that 100 million people are regular patrons of motion picture theatres.

¶ The ways of the law makers are not generally pellucid, but sometimes they are more impenetrable than usual. For example, there has come to hand this ruling of the federal tax department regarding the admission tax:

"Where a ticket of admission is sold for the total sum of $1, including tax, the tickets should be printed so as to show 'admission price 91c, tax 10c, total $1.01, reduced price $1.' The tax of 10c must be paid on each admission ticket. If the admission price is shown as 90c, the tax is 9c, and it is not permissible to collect the tax of 10c on such admission."

Thus, by a most ingenious legislative contrivance, the cumbersome and psychologically adverse method of pricing admissions in odd pennies, is made unavoidable unless the theatre operator is willing to pocket a penny loss on each flat admission charge of $1. This is because the tax was put at 10%, and those elected to make our laws could not think around this rigid, elementary convention. It so happens, however, that the motion picture theatres are little affected, few of them daring to charge more than a half a dollar per admission.

¶ The past few weeks, introducing a new year, have as usual afforded occasions for the issuance of statements commenting on the state of the union and offering assorted prognostications concerning the coming months. In times like these such statements take on an extra degree of interest, but this writer, for one, has yet to be convinced that they mean anything at all.

No one, of course, should be censured for expressing hope for betterment, and there would be no point in referring to these annual messages of business leaders were it not for the fact that just now they seem to have significance not intended. So many of them show that our industrial and financial leadership is still inclined to believe that bad times are merely an inexplainable state of inertia which, by the action of some mystic force, will sooner or later be overcome, whereupon trade will begin to move, and by the accelerating action of his own vitality, gather momentum toward Normalcy — which is to say, toward a broad and lavish Prosperity.

Business is not likely to improve by the action of any dynamic spark within itself. Trade is in a condition of basic maladjustment, first within a domestic field, and secondly as domestic economics are involved in international relations. It is possible for certain efforts at artificial respiration to succeed to some extent, but it is extremely doubtful if the effect can be permanent and really constructive. Starvation prompts emergency measures. A moratorium on mortgages may prevent utter chaos. But absolutely nothing is thus accomplished toward giving the farmer, for example, a market, the lack of which caused his plight in the first place.

¶ Perhaps that suffices to illustrate the point here in mind, which is that the causes of the current maladjustment must be hunted out and removed. In the meantime, financial institutions and industrial organizations cannot draw within themselves, denying trade the stimulation they can afford to give and substituting for this positive material influence laboriously composed statements of belief that times are getting better. What is needed is a lot of truth and the willingness to do something actually about it.—G. S.

TWO LATE THEATRE FORMS: A CRITICISM

By BEN SCHLANGER

An examination of the theatre designs in Radio City, with special reference to their adaptability to motion picture exhibition as an art

THE MANNER in which entertainment will be presented in the future will probably not be at all affected by the newly opened theatres in Radio City of Rockefeller Center, but it is more than likely that these theatres will be affected by the progress made in the methods of delivering entertainment to theatre patrons. The two Radio City theatres were originally intended to be part of a great amusement center. But the question arises, "what is an amusement center?" Literally, it is a place which attracts to it masses of people for entertainment of a kind or in a quantity unobtainable elsewhere.

In the planning of the Radio City theatres—Music Hall and the Roxy—it was assumed that the spectacular stage show would be the strong attraction, so these houses were built to incorporate the best devices known for making the stage show truly spectacular. If in the future the public should be attracted to such entertainment more than to any other kind, then these theatres will have been properly conceived, will be correct in their functional design, and will therefore then serve their original purpose. But it is common knowledge that the motion picture has already become a very vital part of the policy of each of these theatres, while the importance of the stage show has been diminished, thus making the entertainment policy of this amusement center essentially no different from that of the many other deluxe theatres in New York City and elsewhere, of which there is at present a surplus. And like all of the deluxe houses, these Radio City theatres are now faced with the situation of having been designed for the stage performance while forced to depend largely upon the film to insure adequate income.

This lack of recognition of the importance of the film on the part of the sponsors of these two new theatres is demonstrated in the finished theatres themselves. They are incapable of presenting effectively the motion picture performance. In a scientifically planned motion picture theatre, the screen must predominate, and the auditorium must be made secondary to it. This should be so regardless of linear size or seating capacity. Such a condition, however, is unobtainable in the Radio City theatres because the size of the screen in either theatre is lost in the distracting volume of space surrounding it. (See Figure 4.) The screen in either theatre can be enlarged only at the expense of rendering a large part of the seating capacity undesirable for proper vision due to the fact that these theatres were not designed scientifically to accommodate an enlarged screen.

The smaller theatre, the Roxy, which was originally intended as Radio City's home for the motion picture, has a deep stage and an extremely wide auditorium and a general form which are mute evidence that it's conceivers still felt that the motion picture play would not be the star attraction. The Music Hall, however, was admittedly planned solely for the stage performance, although it has a fully equipped projection room. Both theatres opened up with elaborate stage shows, the smaller theatre having the motion picture performance added. Very soon, however, the larger theatre began to present the motion picture, and both theatres reduced their elaborate stage shows.

IF IT WERE more possible than it is to build a theatre that would function equally as well for the motion picture as it would for the stage show, then the situation would be quite different. However, either the motion picture or the stage performance must be favored as the principal influencing factors in determining the theatre form. It would be best if every consideration possible were given to one or to the other, admitting that the stage theatre cannot serve the motion picture. The sponsors of the Radio City theatres might have planned differently had they accepted the importance and position the motion picture has attained in relation to the stage performance.

Although the smaller theatre was supposed to be planned for the motion picture, and the larger theatre for the stage performance, yet both theatres are essentially alike in form and seating arrangement. The differences lie merely in the size and in the sheer architectural treatment. There is not a single bit of evidence to show that any special provision was made for the motion picture in the small theatre, as compared to the large theatre. As a matter of fact, it so happens that the angle of projection for motion pictures is better in the Music Hall than in the Roxy because of the longer throw from the projection room to the screen.

The auditorium seating plan in each theatre is that of a fan-shaped room which has too great a spread in width in comparison to its depth. Such a shape is not adaptable to a motion picture theatre plan because it produces a high percentage of undesirable seats at the sides, from which only a distorted view of the images on the screen is obtainable. (See Figure 1)

Both theatres have very large stages, which at the present time are utilized during the motion picture performance for preparation of stage presentations, thus forcing the screen much too close to the first row of seats. A screen large enough to accommodate the patrons farthest away from it must be kept as far from the first row of seats as possible, the minimum distances being approximately the width of the screen. The screens in both theatres, and especially that in the smaller theatre, are hardly large enough for the remote seats. Thus both the remote seats and the seats close to the screen are undesirable. Enlarging the screen for the sake of the remote seats would increase the undesirability of the front seats. In a properly planned cinema space is left between the screen and the first row of seats to overcome the difficulty of accommodating equally well those seats near to and remote from the screen. This space is as important to the cinema as the stage is to the stage show theatre.

EVEN WHEN the screen is kept sufficiently away from the first row of seats in most all of the existing theatres, a full view of the entire height of the screen is obtainable only by painfully keeping the head thrown back to see upward. Yet in both the Roxy and the Music Hall the screen is close enough to make this condition even worse than it usually is. A good many rows of seats in the front are affected in this way. This condition is especially noticeable in the Music Hall when the magnascopic screen (which is nearer than the regular screen to the size of screen needed for this theatre) is used during part of the performance.

Both the RKO Roxy and the Music Hall have three shallow shelf-like balconies hugging the real wall. These are called "mezzanines," a term which is somewhat misleading because it is usually associated with that part of the theatre containing the best seats. In both these theatres, the first or lowest mezzanine is the only mezzanine close enough to the screen and at a level near enough to the level of the performance to justify the term "mezzanine." Indeed, in the Music Hall, the first mezzanine is too far from the screen to be actually considered as lying within the most desirable seating area.

The second and third mezzanines in both theatres are too far from the screen and too high above the level of the performance to afford desirable seating positions. Especially is this true of the third mezzanines, which hold positions that are no better than the old-fashioned second balcony or than the top of a vast first balcony. In the Music Hall the second and third mezzanines are even less favorable than those in the Roxy, because they are even more critically remote from the screen and high above the performance.

Patrons viewing the motion picture performance from these mezzanines cannot in any way feel intimately connected with the screen performance—a psychological factor which is of great importance. The screen appears as a tiny focal area made insignificant by the tremendous surfaces which sur-

THE NEW 2,700-SEAT MIDWAY IN PHILADELPHIA

THE MIDWAY theatre in Philadelphia is a 2,700-seat neighborhood house in modern style, designed by Magaziner & Eberhard for the Keystone State Theatre Company of Philadelphia, and leased and operated by Stanley-Warner.

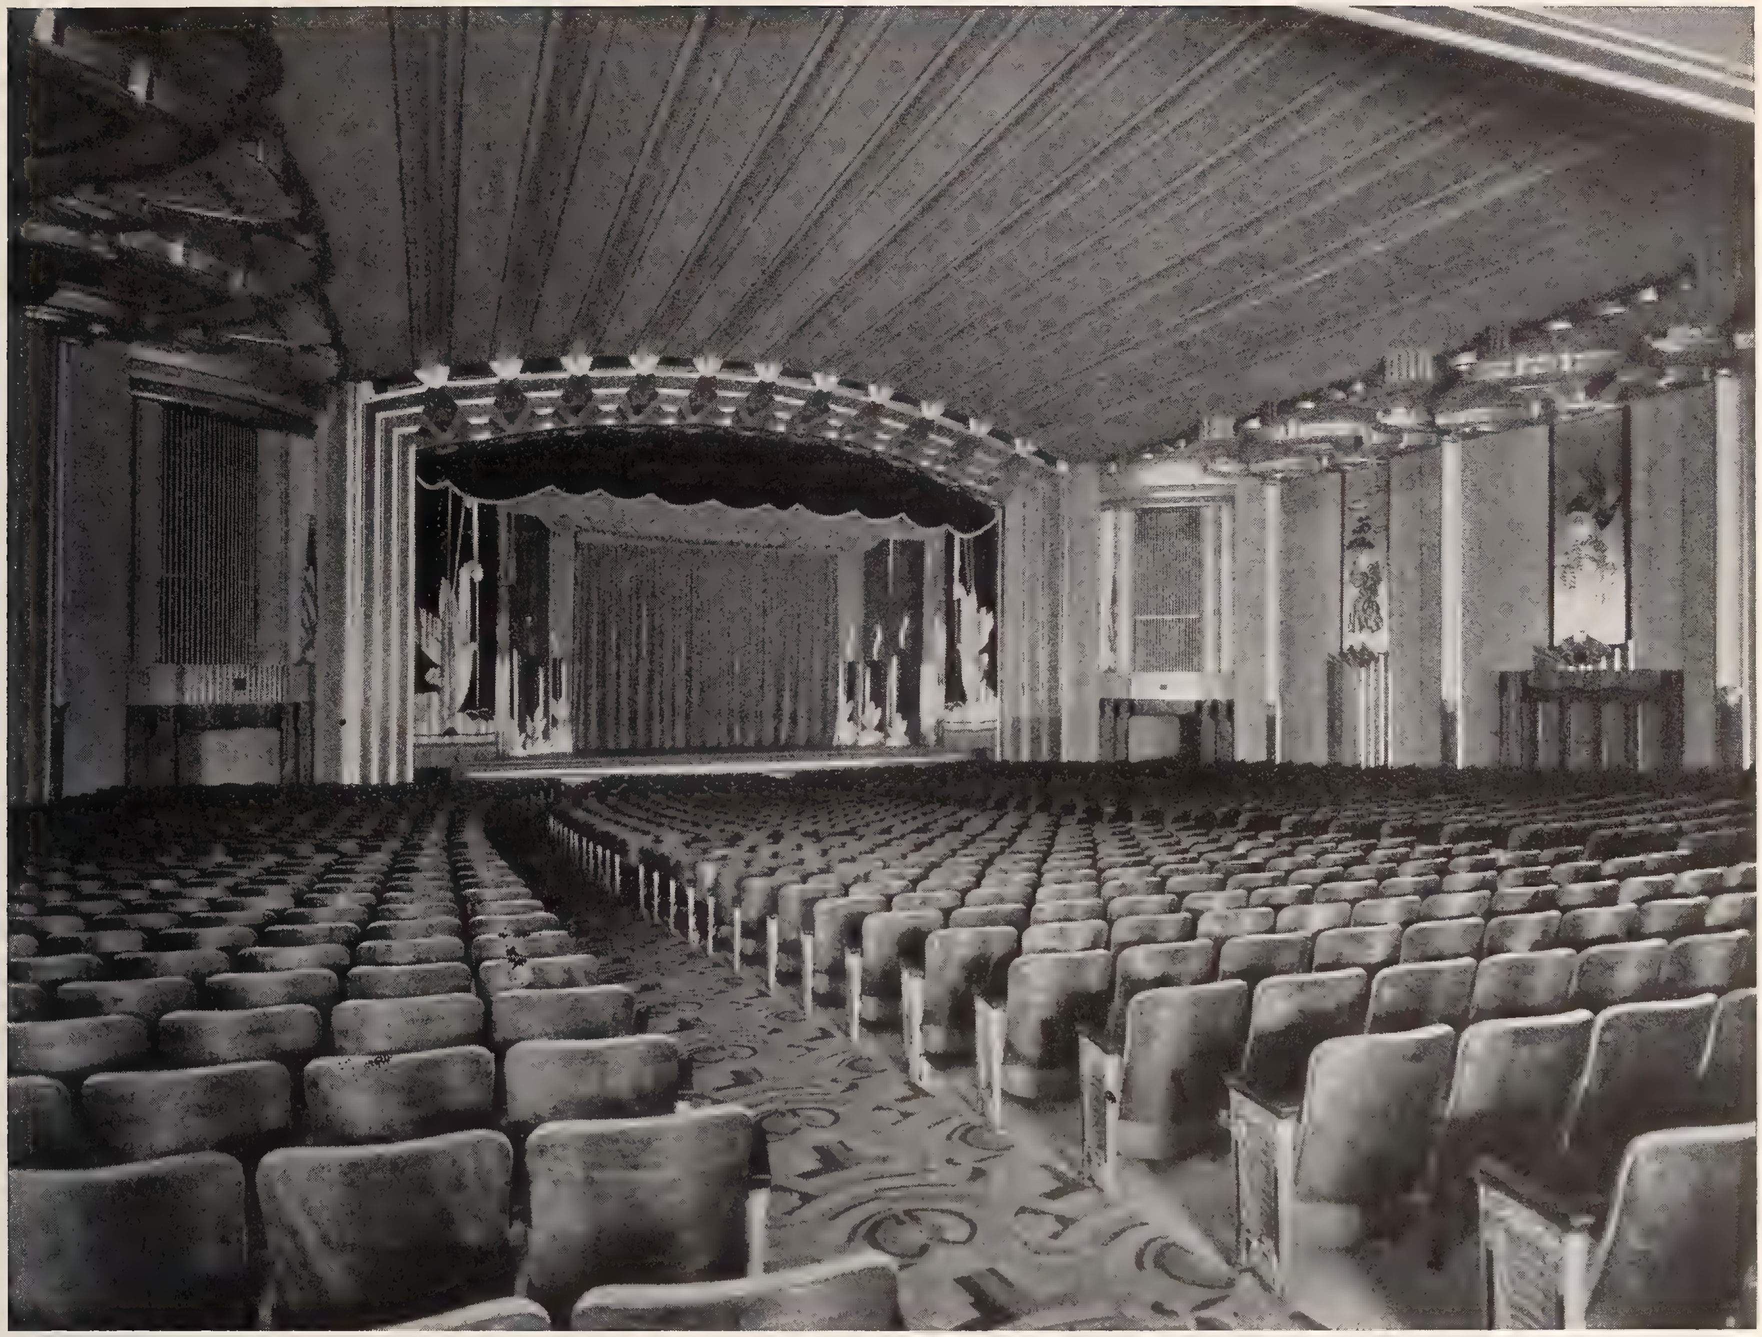
The overall dimensions are 202 feet, 6 inches in depth by 154 feet, 4 inches in width. It is faced in light buff brick with black and silver terra cotta trim and is fireproof throughout. An interesting feature of the exterior design is the 100 foot electric sign above the light-flooded marquee. The sign constitutes a conspicuous beacon to residents of the northeast section of Philadelphia.

Seating in the Midway is divided between two floors, 2,538 chairs being on the main level, and 200 in the balcony. The former are arranged in 49 rows, while the balcony has 5 rows. The seats, which are by the American Seating Company, are full-upholstered with coverings in harmony with the decorative scheme.

The projection room is 45 feet across and 12½ feet in depth. Equipment includes three Powers projectors, two spotlights and an effect machine. The projection room walls and ceilings are treated for sound absorption and are painted green. The generator is located in the boiler room in the basement.

The angle of projection in the Midway is 10°, and the distance from the first row of seats to the screen is 25 feet. "Kalite" is used for acoustical treatment of the walls and ceiling of the auditorium.

The heating system uses coal. The ventilation system is of the plenum type, with electrically-driven fans bringing washed, tempered and sterilized air to all parts of the building. Provisions have been made for summer cooling by a Typhoon refrigeration system.



View of the auditorium from beneath the balcony.

The entrance lobby is decorated in blue, gold and silver, with indirect lighting in plaster coves. The floor is of terrazzo with passage lanes of hard rubber inserts in light red.

The foyer extends for approximately 100 feet across the width of the auditorium and has walls and ceiling in tones of coral, oyster gray, lavender, silver and gold, ornamented with modeled plaster.

In order to eliminate any noise in the auditorium created by patrons waiting for seats, the auditorium is separated from the foyer and promenade by a solid masonry wall, opposite which is the grand stairway leading to the balcony promenade. The manager's office, toilet rooms and usher's rooms are located on the balcony. The stairway is finished in black and gold and is fitted with a machined handrail of aluminum, while on the stair landing is a mural entitled "Autumn," by Arthur Crisp. Over the middle entrance door of the auditorium is a complementary mural by the same artist entitled "Spring." Both of these murals reflect the spirit of the modern movement in technique, color and composition. There are also two murals by Neandross.

The promenade is in warm tones of brown, flamingo and coral red, with black and silver accents. The luxurious furnishings are in German modern style with covering of crushed velvet in harmonizing colors, lending a warm, rich atmosphere to the room.

The auditorium is modern in design and color harmony, the decorative treatment being combined with lighting and acoustic provisions. It is equipped with facilities for colored lighting. Tints of Italian red are used on the side walls, and an arched ceiling is in blue with silver longitudinal plastic beams. The whole is interwoven by a network of silver rays and stars, concealed lights playing on murals of silver satin in side wall recesses.

The richly decorated proscenium arch is 66x31 feet. It forms a frame for a colorful hand embroidered main curtain and side curtains. Dressing rooms are located in the gallery at the side of the stage.

The women's lounge is decorated in horizontal stripes of prismatic colors and silver, while the men's lounge is in subdued tones of brown.

The approximate cost of furniture and equipment was $75,000.

A THEATRE ARCHITECT VISITS EUROPE

By S. CHARLES LEE

The first of three genial reports on theatres and show business abroad by one of America's most eminent theatre designers

WHAT! You've never seen the Roman Forum?

Don't you know that the Germans are years ahead of us in everything they do?

My answer to these questions has always been, "No, I don't know, so you may speak freely."

However, I have been getting just the least bit fed up on the superiority of those people who have amassed such a tremendous amount of knowledge by making a Cook's tour, so that I felt the only way to combat such a situation was to take a look myself.

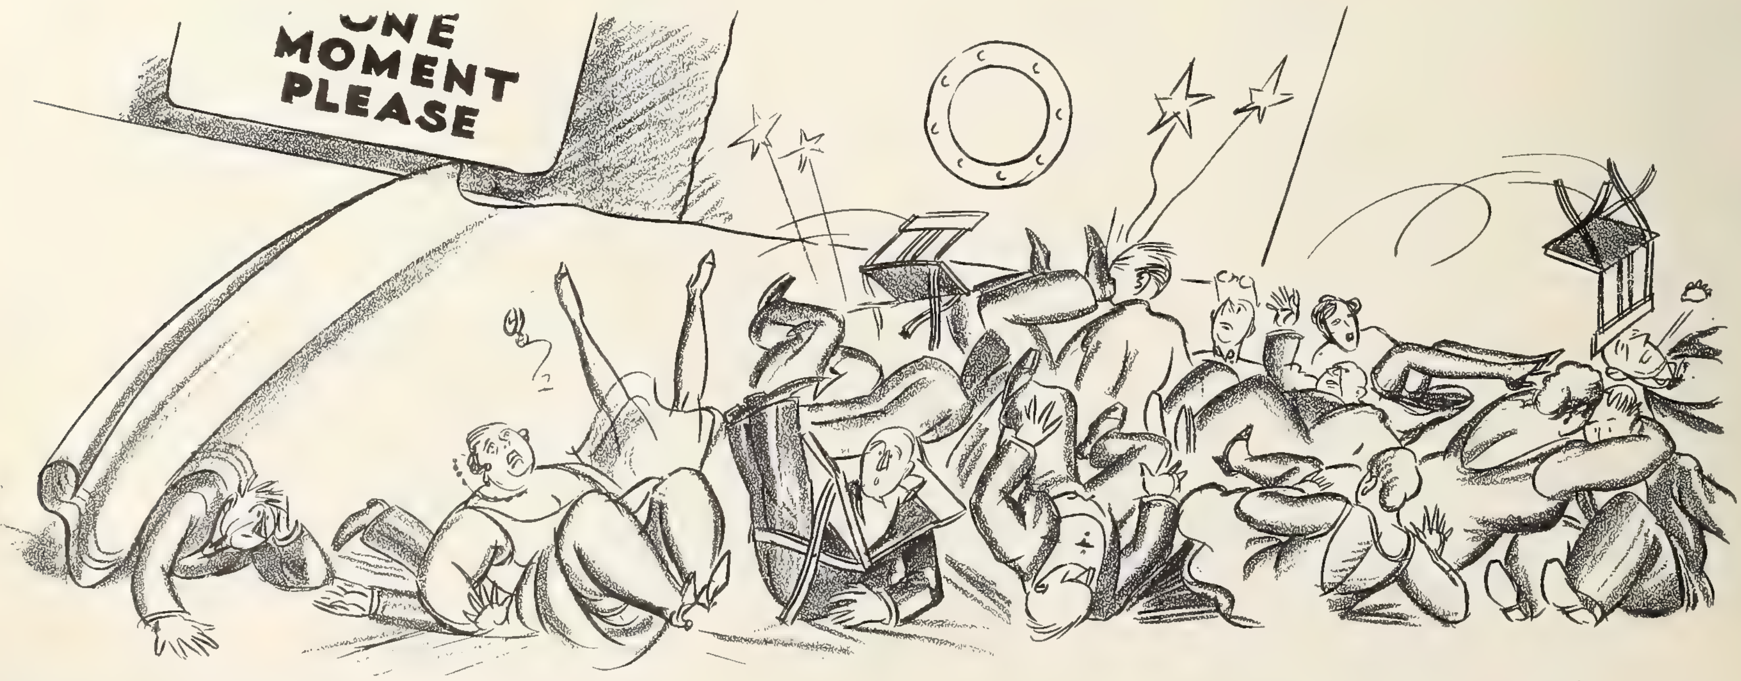
Armed with a knowledge that I would miss no business while away, and having in the back of my mind the dizzy recollection that all my past investments were "gone the way of all flesh," I figured I might just as well sell my $100,000 nest egg—invested in those gilt-edge securities that America blindly purchased in 1928—and doing so, I took the $3,000 that my investments liquidated at and decided to invest them in something I couldn't lose, which would be an attitude that I could assume when telling other people how ignorant they must be, never having been abroad.

Of course, this was going to be a business trip, which made it necessary for me to investigate all the ramifications of architecture and the entertainment "racket" outside of the U. S. A. Immediately, lots of parties had to be given, because I was then on the verge of becoming a "big shot." Anyone announcing their intentions to go to Europe is entitled to all the consideration of a "big shot," which includes dinner parties, stuffed shirts and bad liquor.

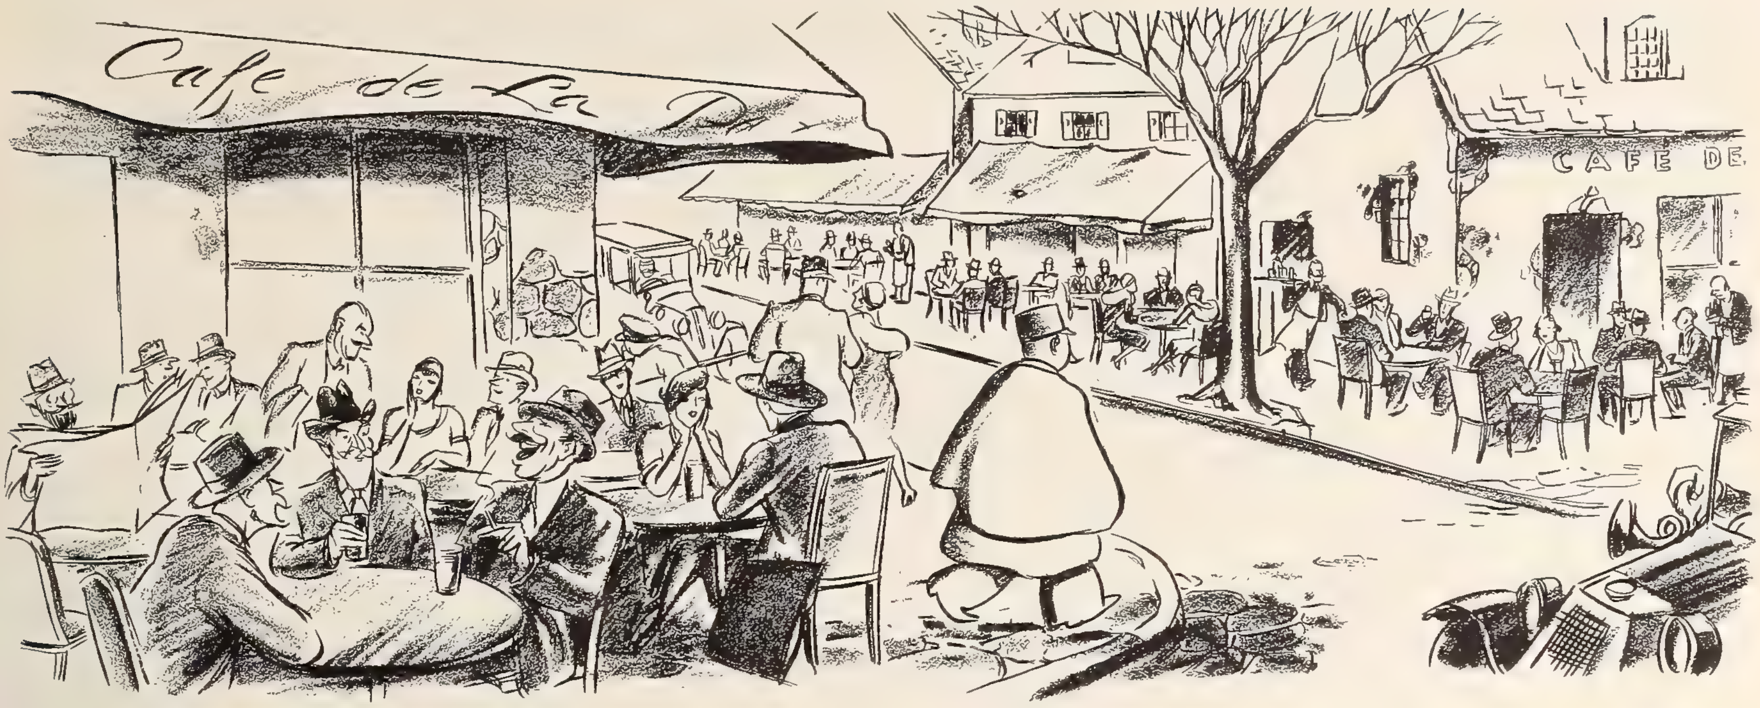
Finally the day of departure arrived. . . . We crossed the gangplank onto that famous new liner that boasts of all the comforts of home (plus the added convenience of not having to walk from your home to the curb to get into your car), and luxury and convenience are handed to you in such measure that it would make Roxy himself blush with shame. Being in league with the show business, I could see many improvements that could be made in the opening act of getting aboard. For instance, the captain and crew should all come down the deck doing an "off to Buffalo" routine, followed by the second line, which should be composed of stewards and cooks; then the black gang should form a third line and kneel before the passengers singing Mammy as the boat pulls away from its mooring.

The ushering system of the boat seemed however, to be quite parallel to our beloved show business. First a page boy takes you part way down the deck, turns you over to an older boy, who, seemingly having more experience, will direct you to your part of the boat, whereupon you are turned over to a steward and stewardess, whose business it will be to see that you do not fall out of bed for the next seven days. I often wondered how much the ship owners save on the food that never leaves the kitchen, paid for with your transportation. After the third day the passengers figure they have lost enough money by staying in their cabins, so they are going to eat if only just to get even with the management!

THE PASSENGERS must be entertained, so the afternoons are usually devoted to bridge or an inane form of horse-racing, which is one step ahead of the pari-mutuel machines: they throw the money up against the ceiling and the portion that sticks goes to the winning horse and the balance goes to the seamen's charities. This being a brand new boat on its maiden voyage, it boasts all the latest motion picture equipment, and as a special feature of this crossing, they are going to show a moving picture not more than four years old. This is an unusual event because most of the boats do not have talking picture equipment, and the pictures to be seen are the same ones that could have been seen on previous crossings six or seven years ago, the only difference being that the film, now being thoroughly scratched, has a slightly different appearance from that when formally projected. The rolling curtain is smooth—in certain spots.



There was more entertainment than they had announced. . . . The ship made one terrific leap and rolled to the starboard side.



This cafe business is a great competitor to the show business in Europe.

At 8 o'clock we are to be favored with this "show of shows," and 300 first-class passengers are allowed seats in the ballroom, which has been converted this night into a motion picture salon. The slick dance floor is carpeted over, and folding chairs are neatly arranged in rows. The first-class passengers come in, the men in their tuxedos and the women in décollete, their wraps and coats spoiling all their chances to show what the osteopath has been able to accomplish on their vetebrae. Second-class passengers occasionally wander into this exclusive exhibition, or are even invited, in which case they huddle like starving Armenians in the back of the hall and brace themselves against the paneling. After much fluttering around over the more wealthy passengers by the lounge steward and cabin boys, the lights are put out and a ten-minute period of darkness with an occasional flicker from the projection booth ensues. Finally the title to the picture is flashed on the screen, and with a lurch of the ship the film is broken and there are ten more minutes of darkness.

The sea is constantly getting rougher. In fact, as is always the case, the captain has never experienced a rougher crossing in his 30 years of traveling this particular lane. While the ship has all the scientific devices designed to prevent pitching and rolling, it seems to me that it would be better if we were on a flat-bottomed scow without so much science connected with it. At last the picture flashes on, and the first reel is projected without further mishap. As the projection booth contains only one machine, there is the old-time delay while reels are being changed. However, there was more entertainment this night than they had announced on their bulletin board, for the ship made one terrific leap and then rolled to the starboard side. Immediately the rug on the polished floor began to slip to starboard; in fact, it not only began to slip, but it continued to slip until all of the passengers were in a heap along one side of the salon. The ship righted itself and then rolled to the port side. Immediately everyone was thrown to that side of the boat, with the carpet rolling up over chairs and passengers as the ship continued its arc. This was a form of entertainment I had never experienced before, and whether it would be advisable to build auditorium floors so that they could be jacked up on one side and the other so as to give patrons the sensation we experienced, is still a question in my mind.

The unannounced feature ended the entertainment for the evening, to the satisfaction of all concerned with the exception of the ship's doctor. A few nights later the balance of the film was run off for the passengers who still had a desire to see it, but as everyone on the boat had seen the picture many years before, they continued to play bridge.

A FEW DAYS later finds us in Paris. Do not think that it is possible to get to Paris without excitement—the arguments start the moment you set foot in France. Money is the only thing that a Frenchman likes better than arguing, the two go hand in hand, and they are constantly arguing with you over money.

When you tip the boy who carries your bags from the boat, if the usual tip is 10c and you tip him 20c, he immediately asks you for 50c, but if you tip him 10c he is not quite so apt to argue with you. The taxi driver will give you your next argument, and you find yourself at your hotel desk quite educated as to the right attitude, and the sooner you make up your mind to fight back and enjoy it, the sooner you participate in the pleasures of Paris.

The newsreel business is the best bet.

Well, we came here to see things, so let's go out and march down "ze famous boulevard." The streets are truly beautiful, well laid out according to a particular plan. They converge in a very artistic manner, some intersections having as many as six fountains symmetrically arranged, making a most interesting vista. The buildings are only six stories in height, having a uniform cornice line, and the ratio of the width of the streets to the height of the buildings on the main thoroughfares is truly magnificent. Where a street terminates into a large concourse, it is flanked with buildings of uniform architecture and the monuments are well in scale with their background.

The city is alive with taxicabs, and the visitor always reports that they travel at a terrific rate of speed. I discovered, however, that this was an error, as these taxis are of only six to twelve horsepower and are, therefore, unable to travel at a great rate of speed. They seem to be moving very quickly because they pass so many horses drawing heavily loaded, clumsy two-wheeled wagons which move at a speed of about three miles an hour. The taxis are all equipped with trick horns like the one on Junior's automobile. The only time you notice them is when they keep you awake nights, not when you are crossing the street. They all sound alike and it seems as though there are millions of them.

The sidewalks are actually littered with restaurants. The seating capacity of the

RECENT LITIGATION INVOLVING THEATRES

By LEO T. PARKER

Another group of late court cases selected and analyzed for their interest to operators of motion picture theatres

A GREAT DEAL of controversy has arisen recently over the question of whether or not a motion picture theatre can be termed a legal nuisance when operated in violation of a Sunday closing law. Therefore, it is important to know that a legal nuisance is such an inconvenience or troublesome offense as annoys the whole community in general and not merely some particular person. For this reason a theatre cannot be held to be a public or legal nuisance on mere complaint of one or a few persons who may live in the immediate neighborhood.

Another important point of the law is that a city ordinance is not valid which endeavors to construe the meaning of a word or a phrase where the construed meaning differs from the meaning defined by a state law, or from the meaning interpreted by a higher court which has already rendered a decision on the subject.

For illustration, in the late case of State v. Barron Theatre (15 P. [2d] 456), it was disclosed that a city enacted an ordinance which prohibited operation on Sunday of any business "not for necessity or charity."

Legal action was filed against the owner of a motion picture theatre in which it was alleged that the theatre was operated continuously on Sundays for more than a year past in violation of the Sunday labor and Sunday laws. It was further alleged that the operation of the theatre openly, publicly, repeatedly, continuously, persistently, and intentionally in violation of the Sunday laws is a public or common nuisance.

Evidence was introduced during the trial showing that the theatre was open from 2 p. m. until 11 p. m. on Sunday, and persons entering paid 20 cents at the window and entered without tickets being issued, and that in front was a sign stating "Open today" and giving the name of the attraction. In holding the theatre not a public nuisance, the court stated the following important law:

"A public nuisance is one that injures the citizens generally who may be so circumstanced as to come within its influence. The test as to whether a nuisance is a public nuisance or not is not the number of persons annoyed, but the possibility of annoyance to the public by the invasion of its rights. . . . The rule, apparently well settled, that courts of equity will not interfere by injunction merely to prevent the commission of a crime, has been applied or approved in a number of cases involving alleged violation of Sunday laws, so that it is held, unless the acts complained of constitute a nuisance, or some other ground exists for granting the injunction than that a violation of the law will result unless the writ is granted, injunction will not lie."

ELIMINATION OF ANNOYANCE

THE OWNER of a theatre is bound to exercise care to operate it so that citizens will not be unreasonably annoyed. On the other hand, many courts have held that persons who live in a neighborhood where annoyances are to be expected are bound to adjust themselves to the ordinary discomfort of the circumstances. In other words, the courts will not as a rule grant an injunction against operation of a theatre unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the courts that the cause of the annoyance cannot be eliminated.

For instance, in the recent case of Reichle v. Senger (153 Atl. 263), it was shown that a citizen filed suit alleging that operation of a business was a legal nuisance.

During the trial it was shown that considerable money had been expended to eradicate or minimize the conditions objected to. Notwithstanding this expenditure the citizen contended that the injunction should be issued. However, the higher court refused to grant an injunction, and said:

"An injunction to restrain a lawful business as a nuisance should not be granted, unless the conduct of the business invades a clear legal right of another, resulting in serious and permanent injury, which cannot be adequately compensated at law. . . . Therefore, considering the fact that defendant has made, since last April, sincere and serious effort to satisfy objections at a large monetary cost . . . I am of the opinion that complainant has not established his right to an injunction, and that the bill of complaint should be dismissed."

Also, in the leading case of Hennessy v. Carmony (50 N. J. Eq. 616), the court said:

"There is a distinction between an action for a nuisance in respect of an act producing a material injury to property and one brought in respect of an act producing personal discomfort. As to the latter, a person must, in the interest of the public generally, submit to the discomfort of the circumstances of the place, and the trades carried on around him."

INJUNCTION AGAINST OPERATION

USUALLY the courts will issue an injunction to restrain a criminal prosecution, or where failure to issue the injunction will result in destruction of property or irreparable injury to the complaining party. However, the court will not grant an injunction to prevent municipal officials from interfering with operation of a theatre on Sunday, although the ordinance prohibiting conduction of amusement places on Sunday is invalid.

This rule is based on the fact that although municipal officials may arrest a theatre owner or his employes under an invalid ordinance, it is impossible to secure conviction and the theatre owner and his employes have adequate relief by suit and proof during the trial that the ordinance is void.

For example, in City v. Griffith Amusement Company (16 P. [2d] 233), it was shown that a theatre owner filed suit and requested the court to grant an injunction against the city, its mayor, chief of police, and the city commissioners, to enjoin them from enforcing an ordinance requiring theatre owners to close picture shows on Sunday, and to enjoin them from arresting and prosecuting its employes for operating the show on Sunday in violation of law.

The theatre owner alleged that he had invested large sums of money in the picture show business in the city and has made preparation for operating his show on Sunday; that he has a right under the state laws to so operate and that the city has enacted an invalid ordinance which prohibits him from operating his show on Sunday. However, the court refused to issue the injunction, saying:

"If the ordinance be invalid and the employes prosecuted thereunder the invalidity thereof would constitute a complete defense to the prosecution. . . . In the instant case, the showing as to destruction of property or the infliction of irreparable injury is insufficient to authorize the granting of the injunction."

MAYOR NOT LIABLE FOR REFUSING LICENSE

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a municipal official, such as a mayor, is not personally liable for refusal to issue a license for the conduction of a theatre or other place of amusement. This is particularly true if the mayor acted by authorization of a state law or city ordinance, although the refusal to issue the license was based upon bad faith, ignorance, or unfairness.

For illustration, in Jaffarian v. Murphy (183 N. E. 110), it was disclosed that a state law provides: "The mayor or selectmen may . . . grant, upon such terms and conditions as they deem reasonable, a license for theatrical exhibitions, public shows, public amusements and exhibitions of every description . . . and the mayor or selectman may revoke or suspend such license at their pleasure . . ."

The owner of a place of amusement filed an application with the mayor for a license to operate his place of business. The mayor refused to issue the license. The proprietor of the amusement place filed suit against the mayor to recover damages on the grounds that the refusal was based upon bad faith and with malicious intent to injure the proprietor. However, in view of the above mentioned state law the court refused to hold the mayor liable, and said:

"In passing upon applications under the statute the mayor is acting in a quasi judicial capacity and is bound to exercise his discretion impartially. . . . The defendant (mayor) is not shown to have acted in such way as to render him liable to this action. . . . The defendant was acting within his jurisdiction. . . . It is not always the unrighteous who are unfair, capricious and arbitrary. It is conceivable that an honest mayor, overzealous for the public welfare, might from entirely pure and upright motives take action in order to accomplish ends regarded by him as highly desirable which might be so described."

Price Fixing Held Illegal

AN IMPORTANT subject of law particularly interesting to theatre owners is price fixing. Various courts have held that price fixing agreements, when entered into by owners of competing theatres for the purpose of maintaining higher prices are illegal. The reason for this decision is that the public is entitled to have competition among individuals and corporations, irrespective whether the price fixing agreements are reasonable or unreasonable.

For instance, in the recent case of Buckelew v. Martens (156 Atl. 436), it was shown that a number of proprietors in the same county entered into a price fixing agreement providing for a minimum price to be charged. The contract provided for liquidated damages amounting to $1,000 in the event of breach of the price fixing agreement by any proprietor.

One of the owners violated the terms of the agreement and suit was filed by the other proprietors to recover the $1,000 liquidated damages specified in the contract. The owner against whom suit was filed defended the case on the grounds that the contract was void and unenforceable because it was intended to fix the prices. In upholding this contention and in holding the contract void, the court said:

"The question is whether this agreement, its effect, tended to put in the hands of the signers, the power to practically control prices and the trade to the detriment of the public. If it did, it is illegal. If it did not, it is legal. . . . The contract has no other purpose than the fixing of prices and the stifling of competition among signers."

What Is Unfair Competition?

THE LAW is well settled that a seller of theatre equipment or lessor of film plays may be liable for entering into contracts which are intended to restrain trade in violation to federal and other laws. However, it is important to know that a contract is not illegal by which a seller agrees not to sell or lease his product to other theatre owners in a specified territory. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Howle v. Mountain (165 S. E. 724).

In this case it was shown that two firms entered into contracts by the terms of which they agreed not to sell or lease their product in any town or territory occupied by the other. Suit was filed by certain purchasers on the grounds that the above contracts were invalid. However, after considering all phases of the case, the higher court refused to hold the firms liable, and stated the following important law:

"Transactions in connection therewith stand on the same basis as those in any other business of a purely private nature.

IS YOUR THEATRE LEGALLY SAFE?

By M. MARVIN BERGER

Member New York Bar

ASSUME, Mr. Exhibitor, that John Jones sustains an accident in your theatre by tripping in an aisle. He claims that you were at fault in failing to provide proper aisle lighting and he can prove as a matter of fact that you were using a 10-watt bulb in your aisle lights. Assume further that the Code of Ordinances of your city provides that all aisles in theatres be lighted by 15-watt aisle lights. Having proved that you were using 10-watt bulbs, all Mr. Jones need do is to call the court's attention to the above ordinance and he has won his case.

Now why should evidence of violation of an ordinance be sufficient to conclusively prove negligence? Before answering that let me first explain the nature of an ordinance. An ordinance is a law, made by your city's board of aldermen or town council and is effective only within the city or town limits. A law made by your state legislature is effective throughout the state and is known as a statute.

As a rule, the greater portion of law applicable to theatres is in the form of ordinances, which prescribe, for example, the methods and standards of theatre construction, lighting, heating and ventilating, and methods of safeguarding projection rooms. I am not going to deal here with such purely regulatory ordinances, familiar to every exhibitor, as provide for the time of opening and closing, age of children to be admitted without escort, etc., but rather with those ordinances directly designed for public safety.

To return to Mr. Jones' case: The ordinance providing for the use of 15-watt bulbs fixed a definite standard of care. In the absence of the ordinance, you might have very properly raised the point that you were not negligent in lighting your theatre aisles and that a 10-watt bulb, such as you used, provided sufficient aisle illumination. But the existence of the ordinance shut off that argument, and the ordinance became the last word on the subject of aisle lighting in your city.

When a statute or ordinance fixes a standard for the protection of the public, upon proof by an injured person that his injury arose as the direct result of the violation of that statute or ordinance, he has conclusively and unquestionably proved the negligence of the defendant. And the defendant's ignorance of that particular statute or ordinance will not avail to protect him from the consequences of its violation.

My example merely illustrates the possibility of sustaining civil liability as a consequence of failure to observe a statute or ordinance. But violation of statutes or ordinances, particularly those designed for fire protection, may also subject the exhibitor to criminal liability with a resulting fine or even jail sentence.

Discover what ordinances and statutes govern your theatre and familiarize yourself with them. If you have no local attorney, consult the city or town clerk, who will point them out to you. A letter to the Secretary of State of your State will probably bring forth the necessary information regarding the statutes applicable to theatres. Having found the law, study it.

It is possible that a particular law was enacted in the era of the nickelodeon and provides unnecessary restraints on the method of running your theatre. In that case you can combine with the other theatre owners of your city in a petition to the local lawmakers to have the burdensome ordinance repealed or changed. The complex ordinances covering the building and fireproofing of theatres had best be left to your architect. But as to the ordinances and statutes that cover the actual operation of your theatre, get to know them, get your subordinates to know them, and then observe them to the letter.

MUSICAL ACOUSTICS OF AUDITORIUMS

[The following article offers the unique suggestion that on account of the variation in the time between beats in music, more effective rendition of music could be accomplished by varying the time of reverberation of the auditorium or room in which the music is played. The discussion is reprinted from the Journal of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, February issue, to which it was contributed by Peter Caporale of the Electro-Acoustical Engineering Company of America, of Philadelphia.]

THE IMPORTANCE of increasing the usefulness of enclosures such as sound motion picture studios, recording studios, broadcasting studios, theatres, music halls, etc., by controlling the time of reverberation is being recognized more and more. In all these types of rooms music of some form is performed, and the control of reverberation may add considerably to the artistic presentation of such music. Thus, the effects of large tone or fine definition or articulation may both be achieved by suitable control. The following is a brief discussion of some of the important factors to be considered in controlling reverberation for musical purposes.

Music is a unique art in that a third person (or group of persons) is necessary to convey the composer's thought to his audience. In particular cases it may happen that the third person and the composer are one, as, for example, when Kreisler plays his own compositions. But even in these cases Kreisler the violinist is not the same as Kreisler the composer. In other words, composition and expression are neither the same nor are they simultaneous. To speak of this situation in more familiar engineering terms, we may think of the history of a musical composition as divided into four stages. The first, which we shall call A, is the conception of the composition in the mind of the composer. The second, B, is the transcribing of this concept into a form known as the score. The third, C, is the transference of the concept from the score to the mind of the player, or interpreter; and the fourth, D, the transmission of the concept, by means of sound, to the audience. It must be obvious that in such a complex transition it is rare that a listener will sense the same musical thought (i.e., the same physical sound as conceived originally) that the composer had in mind, and we may therefore speak (rather loosely, of course) of the efficiencies of the various stages of the transition. For example, there are some effects that can not be indicated by the usual musical notation; hence the efficiency of transition B is less than unity. Similarly, the score may be ambiguous in certain parts, or in some respects; therefore, the efficiency of transition C is also less than unity. Very little has been done to increase these various efficiencies. Reverberation control, however, offers the possibility of increasing the efficiencies of both transitions B and D.

The combinations of sound that reach the audience are determined not only by the nature of the source of the sound (orchestra, organ, violin, etc.) but also by the character of the enclosure within which the sound occurs and the audience is located. This fact has been known from the most ancient times, but no direct use was made of the knowledge. For instance, when Bach wrote the Mass in B-minor he was acquainted quite intimately with the acoustical properties of the Leipzig Thomaskirsche and could foresee the approximate effect of the music. It was obviously impossible for him to foretell the effect in some other church or auditorium. Recent progress in acoustics, particularly as regards reverberation, has made it possible to control the acoustical properties of an auditorium so that a musical composition may be rendered in such a manner as to accord very closely with the wishes of the interpreter. Furthermore, the control of the auditorium might be placed in the hands of the composer, so that not only is efficiency D increased, but also that of B; or, more specifically, the composer might indicate on the score just what the acoustical conditions should be for any particular passage.

The technical problem of controlling reverberation is this: given an auditorium having a certain volume and exposed wall surface, to vary the total sound absorption of the room so as to vary its period of reverberation. Several times the idea has been suggested, and in fact, a definite system has actually been proposed, whereby various surfaces of different coefficients of absorption could be exposed. None of these systems, however, could have been readily adaptable to the kind of control required for musical purposes.

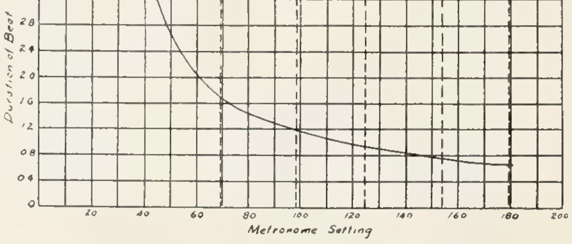

Fig. 1.—Chart showing duration of musical beats for metronome settings.

The realization of such a scheme, of course, would involve not only the designing of appropriate equipment by the engineer, but as well the training of the musician so that he might understand the full possibilities of the system. The latter problem is, of course, not of interest to us here. This discussion will be limited to the musical requirements from an engineering standpoint. It must be noted that in many cases it might not be practicable to vary the time of reverberation during the performance of a piece of music; but it might even then be practicable to vary it between successsive pieces.

In general, musical compositions may be very roughly divisible into two classes—solo and ensemble, each of which is further divisible into slow and fast music. The crudity of this classification is obvious, but it is at least indicative of the range of types of music. It is rare to find rapid, brilliant passages for one instrument in orchestral works (with the possible exception of solos for the first violin). Music is, moreover, characterized partly by rhythm, of which the elementary component is the beat. [The word "beat" must be distinguished from the common acoustical beat. As here used it has the more common musical meaning, indicating the instant of beginning a certain time interval in music. The rapidity or slowness of a passage depends upon the lapse of time between beats.] Figure 1 shows a curve indicating the duration in seconds, between beats produced by a standard metronome. For convenience the corresponding musical terms are also given. Now, since the deleterious effect of reverberation is to cause overlapping of successive sounds, the problem becomes that of reducing the time of reverberation sufficiently to avoid undesirable overlapping. But it must be remembered that not in all cases is overlapping to be completely avoided. If successive sounds pertain to the same harmony, some overlapping is in fact desirable. This, however, is a problem for the composer rather than the engineer.

It will be evident from Figure 1 that.

besides ease of control (a special member of the ensemble may be assigned to the control box with its own score), rapidity of control is an important factor in the design of reverberation control equipment. Another determining factor is range of control; and finally, the control must be silent in operation. These factors are determined by musical requirements. There are also the usual factors of economy of installation, operation, and maintenance, which determine to what extent the other requirements can be fulfilled.

(A) Ease of Control.—Several reverberation control systems have been proposed or tried, all of which have been manually operated devices. A notable example is the installation of the National Broadcasting Company in its Chicago studios. It is quite evident, however, that for our purpose we must have recourse to remote control, and by using flexible cables the control box might be one of the instruments of the ensemble. There would thus be a musician "playing the auditorium," under the supervision of the conductor. For organs this would mean additional buttons for its already complex control panel.

(B) Rapidity of Control.—To understand the problem fully, it will be necessary to consider briefly the musical forms giving rise to it. The required speed is a function, not of the rapidity of the music itself, but of the quickness with which the tempo changes.

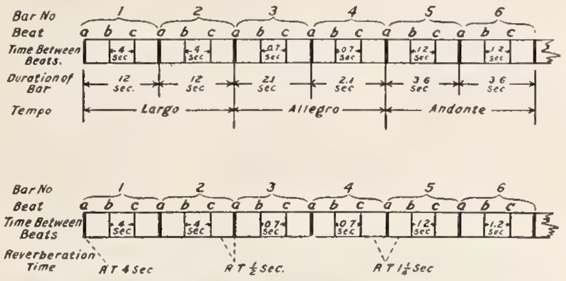

Fig. 2.—Upper chart: Showing the relation between the intervals between beats and the duration of the bar for different tempos. Lower chart: Indicating the manner of changing the time of reverberation when the tempo is changed.

As has already been indicated, music is characterized among other things by rhythm and a composition must for this reason be divided into beats, which are grouped into larger units called bars. It is the latter grouping that gives to a passage a large part of its rhythmic character. A waltz, for example, is distinguished by having three beats to a bar, etc. But also, and more important from our standpoint, the bar is the unit to be considered in the transition from a slow to a rapid tempo or vice versa; that is to say, the tempo changes from bar to bar rather from beat to beat, the first beat of a bar coming at the beginning of the bar. In other words, the tempo, or the rapidity of succession of beats, does not usually change within the bar, but between bars. For example, in Figure 2 (upper chart) which is a schematic indication of a sequence of bars, each having three beats a, b, and c, we have the first two bars marked largo. From Figure 1 we see that the time between successive beats for this tempo is four seconds, and hence the length of each bar is twelve seconds. The third and fourth bars being marked allegro, the time between beats is only 7/10 second, each bar representing, therefore, 2.1 seconds, or less than one-fourth the duration of each of the first two bars. Similarly the fifth and sixth bars are marked andante, with 1.2 seconds between beats and 3.6 seconds to each bar. Let us examine the conditions such a sequence would impose on reverberation control.

The first two bars (largo) being very slow, the music therein contained depends for its effect on largeness of tone rather than on rhythm. [Largeness of tone is concerned mainly with amplitude of sound as opposed to rhythm. A full definition would involve considerations of musical tradition and custom, as well as an analysis of psychological reaction to sound. Largeness of tone involves not only the amplitude of the sound, but the wave-form as well. Thus, we hardly speak of the largness of tone of the oboe, or tympani, or cymbals; but we do speak of the largeness of tone of a cello or bass viol, or of the viola, or violin, or of some of the wind instruments. The vernacular of music contains many terms that are perfectly clear to musicians, but yet defy simple and concise definition for the layman.] The time of reverberation should therefore be comparatively long. In such cases, the harmony also warrants long reverberation time. Certainly 3 or 4 seconds (usually a large value for an auditorium containing an audience) would not be too long for these bars. But as soon as we get to bar No. 3 (allegro) the bar duration becomes only 2.1 seconds, and the period of reverberation must be reduced to prevent the successive beats from overlapping. Actually, whether the indicated time of 3 or 4 seconds is too long or not, is determined by the music itself. For the case referred to, this time would cause two successive beats to overlap. This is permissible and even desirable in those cases where the successive beats form part of the same "harmony." In other cases, the time would naturally have to be shorter. The time mentioned, however, is intended only to indicate the possible range, and is not necessarily correct for all music marked largo. The actual value must be determined by the composer who has been taught reverberation control and its principles. In addition, it must be remembered that as the duration of a bar decreases, the music usually depends more and more on rhythm and definition. This requires a still shorter reverberation time, and for bars No. 3 and No. 4 its value will have to be of the order of 0.5 second for best effects. In bars No. 5 and No. 6 we are again permitted to increase the reverberation time, but in this case to about 1.25 seconds (the optimum in all cases will obviously depend upon the nature of the music itself). There is one difference between these two changes. In changing from bar No. 2 to bar No. 3 we had to make the change before the beginning of the third bar to avoid bad effects in the more rapid passage. This means that the end of bar No. 2 must be borrowed for this change, and if the change can be made in 2 seconds it will not be noticeable (the duration of the last beat of bar No. 2 being 4 seconds). In changing from bar No. 4 to bar No. 5 we should, analogously, borrow time from bar No. 5 which is slower; but it is a fact that most music is so arranged that the transition from a rapid to a slower tempo is never sudden, passing through a rallentando or gradual slowing up. Hence, the conditions imposed by this change are never severe, time being available from both bars. Since the power requirements of the control system are determined by the rapidity of the control, we may say that it is the change from slower to more rapid tempo that is the controlling factor. From a consideration of the musical literature we may state that the time of change from maximum to minimum reverberation should approach, as a working value, one second. It is evident that economic considerations will determine how closely this value may be approached; a slower control will not be a serious handicap except in certain special musical forms. Figure 2 (lower chart) shows the same sequence of bars of Figure 2, with the reverberation time indicated, and a possible way of indicating the interval over which the change may be effected.

(C) Range of Control and Silence of Operation.—This is a subject that always arouses comments due to the contradictory requirements of large tone and good articulation. The writer's experience with outdoor concerts, however, has shown beyond a doubt that maximum absorption is most desirable for passages requiring good articulation. In general such passages do not require large tone but only crispness and brilliance. The ill effects of open-air theatres are evident only in slow movements where the chief emotional medium is tone. For a given size of auditorium the maximum value of reverberation time will be limited by the audience, the orchestra personnel, and the wall surfaces; similarly, the minimum value will be limited by the maximum obtainable absorption in the given volume, though this lower limit is less definite than the upper limit. These limits prevent the same absolute range of control from being applicable in all cases. However, the control equipment should be calibrated in time units for uniformity and to minimize troubles in scoring. Most concert halls designed for the same size of orchestra should have similar characteristics; hence, the above-mentioned limitations imply simply that the scoring for the control should depend on the size of orchestra, just as at present there are different arrangements of the same composition for different sizes of ensembles. For convenience the approximate relation between the size of orchestra and the volume of the auditorium is shown in Figure 3.

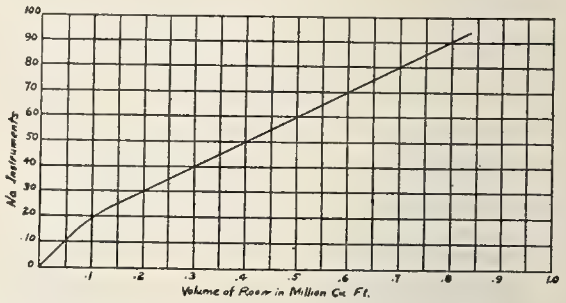

Fig. 3.—Approximate relation between size of orchestra and volume of auditorium (from information given in Circular 300, U. S. Bureau of Standards, 1926).

One thing is to be pointed out relative to this use of reverberation control. It is the use of absorbents having approximately flat frequency characteristics. In other words, if a control key represent a reverberation time of T_1, say, for the notes of a piccolo, it must represent the same time for the notes of a bass tuba or a bass viol. [Note that this does not refer in the least to the desirable characteristic of an auditorium having no reverberation control. Several investigators have already studied this problem. What is referred to here is the fact that a given key or switch on the reverberation control box must, if it is marked T_1, produce that reverberation time under any circumstance. If then, it is desirable to have a reverberation time, T_1, for the bass viol, and a time, T_2, for the piccolo (other conditions being equal) then, that means that T_2 should be called for when the piccolo is playing and T_1 when the bass viol is playing. The case of ensemble is more complex, and as to what is the optimum time for a given passage involving certain given instruments is a problem to be analyzed separately.] If this is not the case, it is possible to score correctly provided the actual frequency characteristic is known, but this introduces undesirable complications, inasmuch as two halls possessing different frequency characteristics would require separate scoring.

SUPPLIED SEATING

The silent operation of the equipment is, of course, necessary to avoid disturbing or distracting factors during the rendition, and is an end to be attained through the proper mechanical design of the system and the proper sound-proofing of the prime movers.

Use of Reverberation Control for Solo Work.—It has already been pointed out that, except for organs, the instantaneous control of reverberation by instrumental soloists is impracticable. The best that can be done in such cases is to provide the best average reverberation time for the given composition; this is a problem for the musician, not the engineer. It is interesting to the latter to know, however, that having met the requirements already outlined, he will have covered the requirements for solo work which therefore, does not require his special attention.

Conclusions.—To sum up the basic requirements for a reverberation control system for the continuous control of auditorium acoustics from a musical standpoint, we have:

(a) Ease of operation.

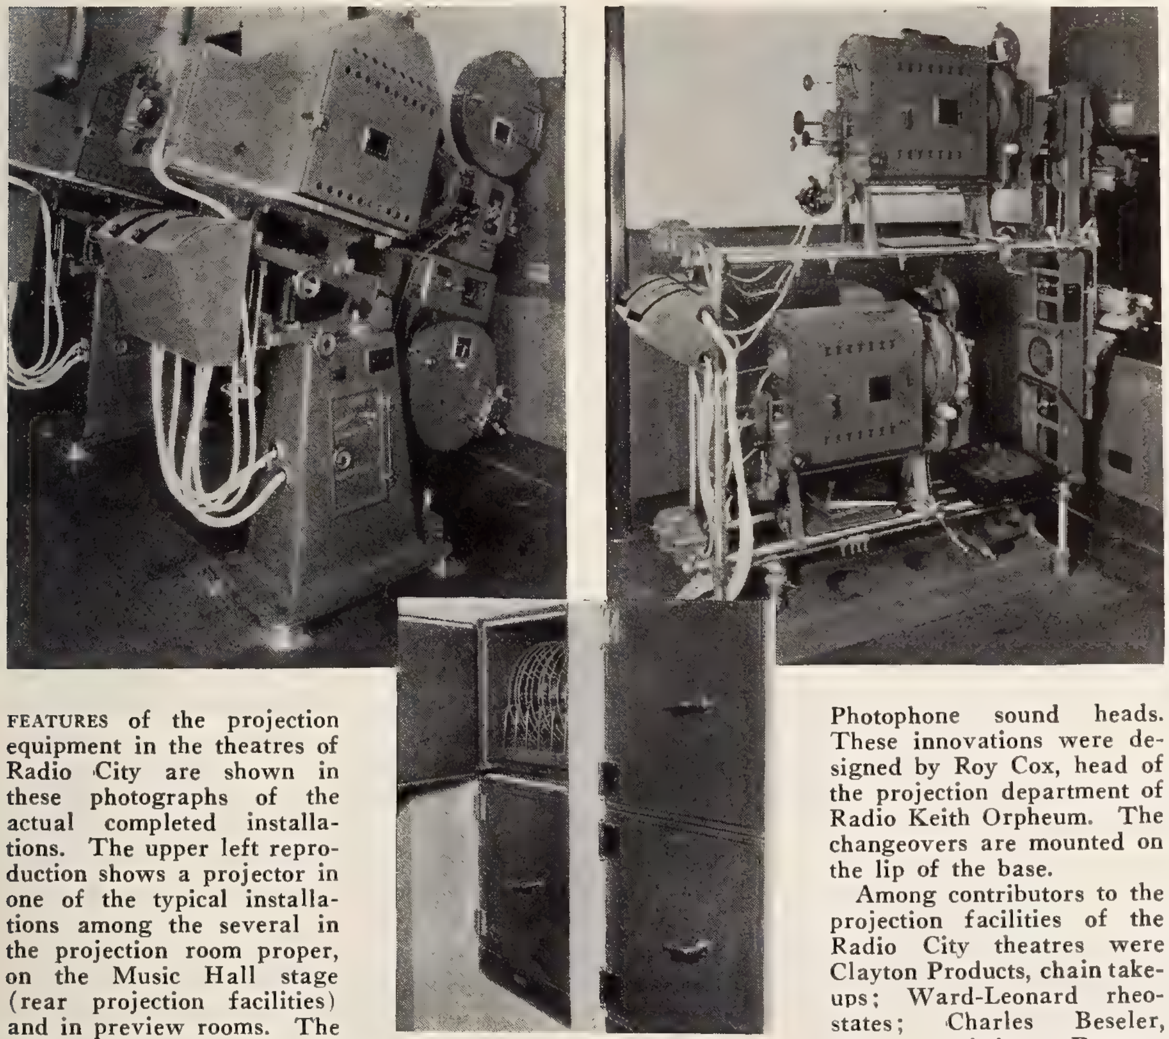
(b) The time required to pass from maximum to minimum reverberation should approach one second; a value less than this would impose too severe economic requirements.

(c) The range of control should be a maximum, and be covered by steps, the number of which should be experimentally determined.

(d) The operation of the equipment must produce no disturbing or distracting noises.

TYPICAL INSTALLATIONS IN RADIO CITY



FEATURES of the projection equipment in the theatres of Radio City are shown in these photographs of the actual completed installations. The upper left reproduction shows a projector in one of the typical installations among the several in the projection room proper, on the Music Hall stage (rear projection facilities) and in preview rooms. The upper right photograph pictures one of the Brenkert effect machines, while the lower view is of two of the inset film cabinets.

The projector mechanisms are Simplex, and with the Hall & Connolly arcs, are mounted, as shown, on Chicago Cinema bases. The bases are of special design for this installation, incorporating concealed wiring, starting switches and a special arm to accommodate the new type RCA Photophone sound heads. These innovations were designed by Roy Cox, head of the projection department of Radio Keith Orpheum. The changeovers are mounted on the lip of the base.

Among contributors to the projection facilities of the Radio City theatres were Clayton Products, chain take-ups; Ward-Leonard rheostates; Charles Beseler, booster switches; Dowser, changeovers and foot switches; Brenkert, effect machines and hylow projection lamps, and Neumade Products, film cabinets.

There are 14 film cabinets installed, as shown in the photograph, in the two Radio City theatres. Each is separately ventilated by outdoor air, and each holds six 2,000-foot reels. Projection equipment was supplied through Continental Theatre Accessories, Inc.

PRACTICAL APPROVAL OF SOLID SCREENS

NOT LONG ago I announced my opinion that the perforated screen is unnecessary; that exactly as good results may be had by properly positioned horns located at the top or the bottom of a solid screen, or possibly at both top and bottom in theatres having a rather high balcony. The first direct confirmation of the correctness of that opinion comes from Mr. Kenneth Dowling of the Vashon theatre in Vashon, Washington. Mr. Dowling says:

"I wish to commend your stand regarding solid versus perforated screens. When sound was first installed here (Vashon theatre) we were faced with the necessity of purchasing an expensive perforated screen and higher powered light sources (lamps). We decided before going to all this expense to try an experiment. We raised the screen sufficiently to place two sound projectors under it, with black cheese cloth suspended from the bottom of the screen and in front of the sound projectors.

"We found it necessary to tilt one sound projector slightly to take care of the balcony. [Exactly the plan I have suggested. —F. H. R.]. The results were so excellent that it has been left that way for two years, with sound projectors under the screen only. We thus have been able to retain our old lamps and solid screen. The illusion is perfect. I am able myself, with full knowledge of the location of the sound projectors, to enjoy the show here just as well as where perforated screens are used.

"True, the auditorium is a small one (about 30 feet wide by 80 feet deep, seating 270 on the main floor), but I see no reason why the same plan might not be used in large theatres."

Nor am I, Friend Dowling. The perforated screen is, in my opinion, a totally unnecessary, highly expensive luxury, sound experts to the contrary notwithstanding.

EFFECTIVE LIFE OF A SCREEN

THOMAS L. DAVIS of Little Rock, Ark., writes, "Will you be good enough, to advise me as to how one may determine whether or not an expensive screen has passed its limits of useful life. Surely there must be some way of determining the matter, but although I have asked many, no one seems able to answer with much confidence, or to really talk very intelligently on the subject."

There is really no way of testing exactly, except through actual photometric measurements, and that is not a practicable thing for exhibitors. It requires an expensive instrument, plus experience in using it.

Paint and calcimine screen surfaces are known to fall off about 15% per year in powers of reflection. Presumably other surfaces will either equal or pretty nearly equal that performance, except in the case of glass bead screens. These latter may be washed quite effectively, though not so that their original reflection powers will be restored. That portion of the surface which is glass can be fully restored. The rest cannot be. It must be remembered, however, that deterioration will vary rather widely in different localities. In Pittsburgh, for example, where there is much smoke and carbon dust, it would be very, very much more rapid than in Montrose, Colo., where the air is very pure.

But in any case I would not regard a screen surface as fit for use for more than six months. In places where the air is laden with dust and smoke the period would be shorter—probably as low as 90 days. Of course a screen may be used much longer, but only at the expense of loss of light through failure of the surface to reflect the percentage it should and did reflect when new.

As to cleaning, if you think what I say is not correct, then when you have cleaned your screen, suspend at its center a sample of the original surface, say, one foot square, which every wise exhibitor will insist upon having delivered to him when a new screen is installed. (He will lay this sample away in a dry, dark place, such as a shelf in a dark closet, first having wrapped it carefully in two or three thicknesses of black cloth. He is then always in position to test his screen surface intelligently and without cost except for a bit of trouble.) He has only to suspend the sample at about the screen center and turn on the white light from the projection lens. At the end of 90 days he is likely to discover quite a difference, especially if the air in his locality is not so good, or if smoking is permitted in his theatre. At the end of six months he may be astonished.

That is the only effective test I know of which the projectionist or theatre manager is in a position to make. If the sample is properly wrapped and stored, then unless the surface is subject to chemical changes and therefore is a very poor sample in any event, it should retain its full powers of reflection for a long while. When it is suspended upon the screen surface the projectionist and manager will be able to judge exactly as to the condition of the screen by the appearance of the sample and the surrounding surface—their relative brightness.

I have repeatedly warned exhibitors to insist upon the delivery of such a sample when buying a new screen. It should be supplied without cost, since screen factories always have scraps of material having no value.

POSSIBILITIES IN SCREEN PAINTING

FROM Jessie Philips, manager of the Sun theatre, Grand Lodge, Mich., comes this letter:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: We have a Walker screen that has been in use about 18 months. It is beginning to look somewhat streaked, though the picture still is fairly bright and is sharp.

"Last week something came into contact with it, leaving a dark spot which is quite noticeable, even when the picture is on. We cannot afford a new screen at this time and wonder if you can tell us what to do about it. Would it be possible to wash the screen all over and obtain satisfactory results? If not, would you suggest painting its surface? If you think so we would appreciate it if you would send us directions for painting a screen. You published something of the kind some while back, but we cannot seem to locate the particular issue. Your kindness will be appreciated."

As to washing the screen surface, if you try that it would be best to obtain instructions for doing it from the maker of the screen. Possibly it could be done with a fair degree of efficiency, possibly it could not. Anyhow you could not hope to bring it back to its original reflective power, for any one of several reasons.

Were the screen my own I believe I would try paint. Better have your local painter do the job though. Have him mix the paint as follows: one half white lead and one half zinc white, both ground in oil, of course. Aside from the oil contained in the pigment, the thinning should be done with a mixture of approximately one-fourth boiled oil and three-fourths turpentine. Mix it quite thin, adding sufficient ultramarine obtainable at any paint shop (Prussian blue will do if ultramarine is unavailable) to give the paint a decided blue tint while in the pot. Don't over-do it. Your painter should know how much. The point is, use enough blue to whiten the paint thoroughly.

Don't use the paint too thick or you will plug up, or at least largely reduce the area of, the perforations. Use it quite thin, and if necessary apply two coats.

Secure a good vacuum cleaner, and reversing its action by removing the dust bag and attaching a hose to the hole it covered, blow the surplus paint out of the perforations as you paint. If you can get the cleaner behind the screen you can suck the paint out. If you use the paint quite thin and the painter is careful, the blowing or sucking will perhaps not be necessary.

JUST ANSWERS? OR THE KNOWLEDGE?

J. L. HOLBROOKE of New York City, writes, "I have been a regular student of the Bluebook School for some months; also, I read, with much interest and benefit your department in Better Theatres. I have the Bluebooks, so you see I am in every sense your student. I am at present an usher. I took the job five months ago as the best available position in a theatre, with the view of studying and observing as I might be able, to fit myself to become a projectionist.

"I have studied hard. Through the kindness of the projectionists, have been able to learn enough so that I have hopes of being able to pass the New York City projectionist examination.

"And now, while it is true you are author of projection books yourself, still I have every faith to believe that you will give me a straight, honest answer to the following question. I have just read an advertisement of a book claiming to supply answers to projectionists' examination questions. Do you or would you recommend such a book? Do you think it would aid me in passing an examination? It claims to supply answers to one thousand examination questions. Living on the wage of an usher I have no money to waste, nor would I, above all things, wish to give such a thing a try unless sure it would be really helpful."

Friend Holbrooke has the right idea from the start to finish. I only wish all candidates for projection were willing to act as wisely as he seems to have. Because of the fact that a quick answer should be returned, I have mailed Friend Holbrooke a letter conveying the following thoughts on the matter:

From your letter I get the idea that you have brains and inclination to put them to useful use. I therefore suggest that you examine the matter in the light of cold reason and common sense. Assuming the examination questions contained in the book to be correctly answered therein, which may or may not be wholly true, of what real benefit is it to a man to find the answer to a question and learn it "by heart?" Aside from a possibility that it might aid an incompetent applicant to "get by" unfairly in examination, of what value is such an answer to the man?

Answers to questions must be the direct result of understanding and ability to "dig up" the said answer out of knowledge acquired by study or experience, or out of a combination of both. It seems to me such books set out with a dishonest purpose. On the face of it they propose to supply answers, not understanding or knowledge. Their very purpose, viewed in the light of reason, is to enable incompetents to dump themselves upon the already overcrowded field of projection and upon an industry, much of the finished product of which is being sadly depreciated by incompetent work in projection.

But be that as it may, the thing is foolish. Examinations are not conducted by any set series of questions. True, in Canada (or is it Ontario only) a list of examinations questions exists. But it is not used in the way many applicants for license think it is.

Here is how the thing is done: The examiner asks a question. It may be in optics, in electrics, in acoustics or in mechanics. What the next question will be depends wholly upon how the first one is answered. It is a verbal examination and the examiner, for example, asks, "What is the effect of resistance in a conductor?" and the one being examined answers without hesitation, "Resistance produces heat; it reduces the voltage and therefore the current flow," the examiner instantly concludes the one being examined understands the matter and is not likely to ask anything more along that line. However, if the applicant hesitates, or makes a questionable answer, then the examiner may and probably will ask further questions on that topic, to determine whether or no the hesitation or questionable answer was due to lack of knowledge or to inability of the applicant to express himself clearly.

What is true of the question quoted is true of all examination questions. The examiner seeks to ascertain what the applicant really knows. If the examiner is himself competent, or even near-competent, he can quickly detect the "learned-by-heart" answer.

No, Friend Holbrooke, I most certainly would not commend a book made up of examination question answers. Better be honest with yourself and with the industry you seek to serve. Anyhow, in my opinion such a book will not help you in the least. It might even defeat you in the effort to pass the examination. Don't for one moment imagine that if such books exist and are advertised, examiners do not know of it and are not watching for the "by-heart" answers. If you do you may be due for a rude, unpleasant awakening.

INSULATING BARRIER

JOHN L. GLINDO of Houston, Texas, writes, "Like many of the others, I guess, I write our best friend only when I want something. I want you to tell me, if you will, just what an electrical barrier is. It was sprung on me yesterday, and I have been unable to find out what the thing is. Will you oblige me?"

Certainly. An electrical "barrier" is an insulating partition. It is used to insulate (to isolate) an electric circuit, and occasionally for other things, such as, for example, an electric arc. It is seldom or never used in motion picture theatres, so far as I know.

QUESTIONS ABOUT THE INTERMITTENT

JOHN DAVIS, of St. Louis, Mo., writes, "I am new in the profession of projection, which, by the way, I intend to regard and treat as a profession, and not merely a 'trade,' as many projectionists seem to do. May I ask your advice on two points?

"First, I would like to know at just what point a projector intermittent movement should be replaced with a new one. In other words, how may the projectionist determine with certainty just when an intermittent is worn out, or has passed its point of usefulness? Secondly, when adjusting an intermittent of any make, just how snugly should the star be adjusted to the cam?"

Friend Davis, you are starting along the right path. Don't get switched off into the road that leads to Lazy Hills. The fact that some men insist upon regarding projection as merely a trade tends to justify the criticism of a man who recently said to me, "They are not projectionists! Don't try to kid us, Richardson. Nine out of ten are still machine operators and nothing more."

And now as to your questions: An intermittent movement may be said to need replacement when the slot in the star, and/or the actuating pin on the cam show evidences of wear. Incidentally, this costly assemblage of equipment will last much longer if a high-grade lubricant be used than it will otherwise. I would put it this way: If the picture as a whole has movement on the screen which cannot be otherwise accounted for, the intermittent movement should be examined for signs of wear. If wear as before set forth is evident, I would conclude the movement should be replaced. Of course, so long as the picture is perfect there is nothing to worry about, though it is well to examine the movement, say, once each month after it has been in use for about six months. Given adequate lubrication with a high-grade lubricant, an intermittent should show no appreciable wear in six months, even in a ten-hour-a-day house.

As to your second question: You should make the adustment after a run while the movement is still warm. Set it up until there is no perceptible "rock" in the intermittent sprocket, being very careful not to get it tight enough to bind. Getting it just right calls for common sense and judgment.

HE BLAMES THE MANAGER

J. L. BRADY, of Chicago, has trouble, and he writes about it as follows:

"We have a new man as manager and I am in trouble. It is impossible to convince him that tubes and exciter lamps should be replaced before they give out entirely. I am now running with one exciter lamp sadly sagged, and you know what that means. He won't get me a new one (no spares carried) and says it is something else that causes the trouble. It is the same with everything. What am I to do?"

I don't know! Personally, I would pack up my tools and tell the manager to project his own pictures if he knew so much more than I did about it. However, times being what they are, that is not a practicable thing for you to do. It seems to me if you are working in Chicago and are a member of Local 110, it would be perfectly right and proper for the business representative of the union to hold converse with your manager, since he is making it impossible for one of the members of the organization to place good results before the public. However, possibly you are in some suburb or nearby town and not a member. I do hold, however, that it is perfectly right and proper to insist that union members be supplied with equipment repairs at least to the point where they may produce good results.

Your manager, Friend Brady, is making it impossible for you to deliver the goods, and in so doing he is taking a slap at his own box office. There is little that can be done about it, however. He is the boss.

SOUND AND HEAT INSULATION

JOHN L. MAWBERRY, of Chicago, has a problem which he sets forth as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: While I expect my trouble is outside your field, still I would prefer to depend upon your judgment than that of anyone else I know. I own two theatres located near this city. In both of them there is ample height of ceiling, but when I had them built I did not understand things as well as I now do.

Service costs money. If you must have a trouble man always within reach you must pay for him. Your trouble-shooter is your own projectionist when you use Phototone Talkafilm, because no trouble can develop beyond his ability to fix.

How is that done? By designing Phototone Talkafilm so that trouble can't develop. For instance, the condensers and resistors. These units are of extra-heavy-duty type. The voltage must rise to impossible tension to puncture the condensers we use. Our resistors can carry far more than the amperage drawn by the rest of the system before they fail.

In twenty-two other ways we have prevented trouble. With this safety we provide sound reproduction that keeps the box-office busy. Send for full description.

One acquires knowledge very often at high expense.

"My present problem is this: Both houses are covered with tin roofs, between which and the auditorium ceiling there is a small air space. The theatre ceiling is of thin boards nailed to ceiling joist supported at their center by slats set at an angle, their bottom ends nailed to the joist, the top ends to the rafters.

"The trouble is two-fold. First, when there is a heavy rain the sound of the falling water comes into the auditorium sufficiently to sometimes almost drown out the sound. Second, the ceiling lets in a great deal of heat in summer, and of cold in winter. Can you advise me as to what, if anything, I might do to remedy this latter condition and deaden the sound of rain. I am very willing to pay a reasonable sum for competent advice."

No pay is accepted for service through this department. I note your statement that there is ample ceiling height. I am not an expert on such matters, but it seems to me if you suspend a ceiling, say one foot, below the present one and seal it with some suitable material, your troubles will cease.

You have not given me the width of your auditorium, but it would be well to have little or no connection between the new and the old ceiling. This might very possibly be accomplished by using, say, 2x8-inch joist, carried by the side walls and supported by inverted truss rods. Rods ⅝-inch in diameter should be sufficient.

Another way it might be done would be to tie the center of each joist to the rafter above by means of an iron rod in which a coil spring one foot long, of suitable wire, is inserted. This would not be expensive and it certainly would work, because those springs would absorb any possible vibration. Still another way would be to slope the ceiling sufficiently to compel the joist to carry themselves, though this may be done only provided the side walls are able to withstand the strain.

However, as I said, I am no expert in such matters involving building construction.

[If Mr. Mawberry would like further opinion, he may address an inquiry, giving further details concerning the roof, ceiling and wall construction of his theatre, to the department, Planning the Theatre.—THE EDITOR.]

PROJECTION SPEED NOT VARIABLE

AN EXHIBITOR in, no matter where since he has asked for a private reply, writes as follows:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I own and operate a little picture show in this town. I would like some by-mail advice, if it is not against your rules to answer such questions privately.

"I am going to buy new motors for my projectors. What I want to know is whether you would advise buying variable or constant speed motors? We are using variable speed motors now, but since installation of sound equipment they are too small. We have Powers projectors with Mellaphone disc equipment.

"Our present motors are 1/10-h.p., and we want to get ¼-h.p. We have been told we would get better results with constant speed motors. On the other hand we are told by others not to buy constant speed ones, as we are advised there will be times when it will be necessary to speed up or slow down the speed of projection. We will certainly appreciate such information as you may be willing to give us."

This department always has been and always will be glad to supply any legitimate information concerning projection matters. In cases where it is requested, we make private a reply if the matter seems for any reason not one suited for publication, possibly for the reason that something very similar has been published too short a time previously.

The fact has been referred to many times in these pages, that sound is recorded at the rate of 90 feet of film per minute. No variation is normally allowed.

If sound be recorded at 90 feet per minute, then any variation above or below that speed of projection will automatically alter the pitch of the sound.

Projection speed should always be exactly 90 feet per minute when sound accompanies the picture, and that nowadays is practically always. My advice to this correspondent therefore is to get constant speed motors which will run the projectors at that speed.

DAMAGE NOT DUE TO PROJECTION CAUSES

MR. PAT DUFFY, manager of the Rialto theatre in Mangum, Okla., hands me a film clipping, together with the following: "Am having a little argument with Metro concerning some film damaged as per attached clipping from 'Faithless.' While the first reel of this production was being projected the first time after receipt of the production, I heard a most unpleasant popping sound from the horns. Went immediately to the projection room to ascertain the cause. The projectionist showed me some dent marks on the sound track of the second reel of the production, which we had not as yet projected.

"Will you be good enough to advise me, Mr. Richardson, as to what caused these dents? Were they in the print when it came from the laboratory? I know positively that we did nothing to cause the damage here, but am unable to convince Metro of that fact. Please give me all the information you can."

Examination under a powerful microscope discloses nothing I am able to identify as a "dent." There are, however, a considerable number of pin holes in the emulsion, covering both sound track and picture area. These tiny holes would certainly cause popping a-plenty during the course of projection.

It is impossible to say with certainty just what caused the trouble, but most emphatically it was not done in the process of projection. The damage seems to have been due to one of three possible causes. First, defective emulsion. This we may, I believe, discard as one of the possibilities in this case for the reason that the print is not a new one, and even supposing such a fault would escape detection at the laboratory, it would be quickly discovered later and the reels containing the spots recalled and replaced with others.

Secondly, film wound into a roll before thoroughly—or perhaps I might better say, before being sufficiently—dry at the laboratory, might be a cause. This, too, is unlikely, for the same reason noted above.

Thirdly, and more probably, in some manner the film became wet, and in some spots wet enough to soften the emulsion. In this condition the emulsion adhered to the celluloid side of the next layer pressing upon it in the film roll, adhering at some spots sufficiently to be pulled away when the film was unwound.

That, Friend Duffy, in my opinion, after careful examination under a powerful glass, is how the damage was done. I might add that it is hardly possible that it could have been done in your theatre, since the wetting and drying out in a tight roll would require considerable time, and as I understand the matter, you had only just received the prints.

I add that certain areas of the clipping sent show evidence of having been considerably softened by water, whereas other areas do not.

EXTRA-WIDE FRAME LINES

WHATEVER VIRTUES producers have, and they have many, they outrage projectionists and projection by permitting prints to be sent out in which glaring preventable faults occur.

Before me lies a sample sent in by Dale Danielson, projectionist at the Main Street theatre, Russell, Ka., which any inspector not stone blind should have seen. Danielson says the fault occurred intermittently throughout the last half of the last reel of "Guilty as Hell."

Now the producer cannot be directly blamed for what was evidently the crass blunder, not to say stupidity, of some employee, who should be located and penalized sufficiently to insure much greater care in future.

The fault consists in dividing frame lines fully one-eighth of an inch wide. Looks to me like new style lines introduced into an old type print. Brother Danielson blames the cameraman, but in that he is in error. Whatever it is certainly occurred in the printing room. Either the print was not inspected or the inspector was, as I remarked before, not attentive. Anyhow, the projectionist and his audiences were the goat.

It is not unreasonable to expect that prints will be competently inspected before they are sent out. If they are supposed to be and are not, then the guilty party should be reformed or fired.

Danielson pays high compliment to Cameraman Karl Strauss on his universally excellent work and novel camera angles.

. . . Any one of the manufacturers concerned in the agreements referred to could have lawfully refrained from selling in any particular town or city, and the agreements not to sell in certain towns or cities merely evidenced the intention to do that which the parties had a right to do and appear to have been reasonably limited as to time and place and in general to have been such as are recognized as legal."

SELLER'S DEBTS AFTER SALE

VARIOUS COURTS have held that a purchaser of a theatre is not liable for debts contracted by the seller, unless he specificially agreed to assume these obligations. Also, where a purchaser of a theatre agrees to pay all debts owed by the seller, he is not liable for debts incurred between the date of the contract and the time he takes possession.

For example, in Grenon v. Emery (163 Atl. 177), it was disclosed that a person named Emery owned all of the capital stock of the Woonsocket Theatre Company and sold the same to a man named Grenon. When this contract was made Emery agreed to pay all of the obligations of the theatre company up to and including the close of business on May 21st. Another clause specified that Emery would not assume obligations on future contracts made by the theatre company.

After the contract was completed the Producers' Distributing Corporation brought suit against the theatre company to recover the sum of $2,608 for pictures contracted for by the company prior to the sale of its capital stock by Emery. None of the pictures included in the contract, which the theatre company had entered into with the Producers' Distributing Corporation, were exhibited prior to the date when Grenon purchased the stock.

Grenon contended that Emery should pay the full amount owed by the theatre company and suit was filed. However, the court held Emery not liable for payment, and said:

"Under the specific terms of the plaintiff's (Emery's) contract with the defendant (Grenon), he was not to be held responsible for the payment of any pictures not exhibited prior to May 21st."

FALSE ARREST LIABILITY

A THEATRE owner is liable in damages for causing the "arrest" of a patron without good cause. Generally speaking, the legal meaning of the term "arrest" is detaining any person without his consent. This point of the law was discussed in the late case of Whitmire v. Publix Theatre Corporation (162 S. E. 753).

The facts of this case are that complaint was made to the cashier of a theatre that a man dressed as a woman was in the rest room for women. A theatre employe named Campbell then inquired what the trouble was and instructed the ticket taker to go into the rest room and investigate, which she did. She saw a patron standing before a mirror arranging her hat, but did not question her to make known to her the reports about her being a man. The patron wore a dark purple velvet coat-suit, a man's striped shirt, with a turned down collar, and a four-in-hand necktie. Her hat was of blue velvet, her shoes size eight, and her hair was bobbed. Her dress and size caused the ladies in the rest room to suspect that she was a man. Without being questioned by the theatre employes the patron left the theatre and walked down the street. Campbell instructed a policeman to bring the patron to the theatre for questioning. The policeman overtook the patron, touched her on the arm and told her, "You are wanted at the Egyptian theatre." The policeman testified that he took her before Campbell at the theatre.

Later the theatre patron filed suit against the theatre owner to recover damages. After considering all testimony in the case the lower court rendered a verdict in favor of the patron allowing her $3,000. The theatre owner appealed to the higher court which, however, upheld the lower court.

BUILD BURGLAR PROTECTION into YOUR TICKET OFFICE

THE installation of a YORK Round Door Chest is so easy and economical that you cannot afford to be without this protection for your cash receipts. Anchored in a block of solid concrete, this sturdy little safe defies all menace of fire and theft. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy door. And that will stop any burglar.

When desired, the YORK Chest is also provided with the "Hold-up Partition" as illustrated. Provided with a slot for the insertion of money, this inner door may be kept closed and offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for a YORK Chest in a reasonable length of time.

Let us show you why so many companies, both large and small, have adopted them. Write for illustrated folder.

average restaurant is very small inside their doors, the majority of their tables being out on the sidewalk. What a swell time the lawyers could have in America if the restaurants littered up our sidewalks with tables and chairs! But it seems that no one pays any attention to this phase of living in Europe. If they have to have steps from a building above the sidewalk grade, they just build the steps out over the sidewalk and let the people walk around them. Many places that have their tables outside have a rail built out from the building and you have to walk almost into the street in order to get by the tables. However, it is very pleasant to sit there and watch the traffic and the girls go by. My wife informs me the traffic was particularly fascinating.

ALL THE SHOPS place steel shutters over their windows at 12 o'clock and reopen at 2 or 3 o'clock in the afternoon, their proprietors amusing themselves in the meantime at the sidewalk cafes. This sidewalk cafe business is a great competitor to the show business in Europe. It cuts in seriously on the matinee business, while in the evening great masses of people patronize these restaurants, beginning their eating at 9 o'clock and sitting until midnight. If they have their dinner at home, they order a drink at 9 o'clock, and by 11:30 they have almost drained their glass. The waiters will not bother natives making a drink last this long because they have lost that argument many years before.

The motion picture theatre business has many complications in Europe. The film problem in America is nothing compared with the one European showmen have to meet. There is not anywhere near the number of theatres now operating in Europe that there is in our country. The large cities boast of a few houses, but the small situations as we know them do not exist. Consequently firms making pictures in French, for instance, have a comparatively limited audience because the boundaries are so close together, and the language changes so completely once these are crossed that they cannot afford to make as many pictures as Hollywood.

Their pictures are generally poor, and while the audience prefers the American pictures, the government has an arrangement whereby only a percentage of American pictures can be shown in direct ratio to the number of domestic pictures that are exhibited. This makes a complicated arrangement and from a film standpoint has been very disadvantageous, but it has resulted in keeping down the building of houses so that when you do have good film, they put out the "S.R.O." signs.

European patrons are more interested in current events throughout the world, so that newsreel business has developed into the best bet. One enterprising Englishman in France has worked the best gag I have seen in many a day. He built several newsreel houses in the city of Paris and announced a chain of them throughout the Continent. He then began running his newsreel theatres and purchased his own camera and sound wagon. Before long he was throwing on the screen news events before they were printed in the newspapers. This excited the editors into a frenzy, and our smart Englishman finally entered into a deal with the newspapers whereby he agrees to name each theatre after a newspaper in that particular locality and will not run news before the newspaper edition comes out with the same article. His compensation for this is $20,000 per year per theatre, and in addition to this there is a reciprocal advertising arrangement. Needless to say this exhibitor never heard of the depression.

[But how about the theatres themselves? Just what do they provide for Europe's theatregoing public? Of these and other phases of the entertainment world on the other side, Mr. Lee will tell in the March 11th issue.]

Behind your BOX OFFICE

● Good Equipment is a Permanent Attraction! Pictures—good and bad—are soon forgotten. The public assumes no deep-seated grudge against the exhibitor who occasionally makes a bad selection in booking his pictures. But the theatre-going crowd is now definitely known to be far less tolerant with the exhibitor who allows his house to run down in appearance and operating efficiency. Modern equipment forms the one safe and secure background for successful selling at your box office. It insures steady repeat patronage by creating and sustaining good will. . . . Whether your theatre needs a complete renovation or merely a replacement here and there, we are ready to serve your every requirement and actually save you money. Come in today and let's discuss the subject of Good Equipment and its relation to your Box Office.

YOUR MARKET IS WIDENING

Are Your Sales Efforts Following It

Not long ago the centralized purchasing department of a great theatre chain was broken up into localized offices. The buying authority concentrated in less than half a dozen men has been dispersed among half a hundred. This is not an isolated case—it is the beginning of a trend. From now on buying in the entertainment field will be more and more in the hands of the local man.

How are you to meet the increased travel and contact costs this situation demands? How are you to keep your goods before your customer through the longer intervals between calls? How are you to announce new developments in the shortest time? How are you to circumvent competitors on the spot during your absence?

One answer settles all these questions. BETTER THEATRES travels for pennies—it repeats its message each month—it reaches the whole field simultaneously—it keeps everlastingly on the job—it is before your customer's eyes even while your competitor is talking to him. Advertising in BETTER THEATRES is the answer to all sales questions brought up by present day buying changes.

Two Late Theatre Forms

rounded it. This, strangely enough, is even more the case in the smaller Roxy than in the immense Music Hall, because of the marked vertical expression at the proscenium, which forces the eye upward to the ceiling and away from the screen. If a patron sitting in the third mezzanine of either theatre, assumes a comfortable position in his chair, allowing himself to receive the support of the back of the chair and keeping his head in a normal position, he sees not the screen but instead the space above it. Actual observation discloses that people sitting in the third mezzanines, in order to be able to see the screen, rest their chins in their hands to relieve the strain exerted by drooping the head without moving the body forward. Of course this is undesirable even for a stage performance, but in the case of the screen play, the sharp contrast between the light on the screen surface and the dark area above it makes it necessary to confine the range of vision to the screen only.

In a descriptive article which appeared in a previous issue of BETTER THEATRES, it was stated that this type of theatre form, using three shallow balconies instead of the usual single large overhanging balcony, was adopted to create more intimate groups of seating, to permit an unbroken architectural treatment in the main room, and to make it possible to see the entire height of the screen from every point under the mezzanine. All of these reasons present problems that are pertinent to good theatre design, yet it cannot be said that this particular solution is necessarily a desirable one on the grounds that it does, to a certain degree, achieve these points. Sitting in one of these triple mezzanines undoubtedly gives the patron a feeling of intimacy, but only if one is concerned with the immediate surroundings within that particular mezzanine. Otherwise intimacy is not actually achieved, particularly in the Music Hall, because of the vast open space separating the performance from the spectator in the mezzanine. The idea of broken-up groups of seating is admirable, provided such groups are placed in areas more desirable for viewing the performance. As the Radio City theatres are designed, a greater part of these most desirable areas are not utilized.

IT IS TRUE that the arrangement of the three mezzanines hugging the rear walls permits an unbroken main room of architectural unity (which was impossible to achieve with the large overhanging balcony). But it does so at the expense of rendering the mezzanines poor for proper vision of the performance. Could not this architectural unity have been achieved and yet meet the vision and comfort requirements? The problem of unobstructed vision of a high screen is met by the mezzanine arrangement in the Radio

City theatres, but then again this particular solution does not permit the clearest definition of details on the screen, and bodily comfort of the patron while viewing the screen.

The rear half of the orchestra floors and the first mezzanines are really the only floor levels on which a patron may sit in a normal and comfortable sitting position (that is, receiving the support of the back of the chair, the head neither raised nor lowered, the weight of the body equally distributed between the seat and back of the chair). In the front of both orchestras a person must either slump in his chair or else raise his head to bring the screen within his range of vision. Sitting in a normal, comfortable position at the extreme sides in the first few rows, brings only a little corner of the screen into the spectator's range of vision. A major portion of the screen is only foggy detail. The spectator must twist his body either left or right as the case may be, and lift the head at the same time—a distorted position which no one would ever think of holding for more than a few seconds in any place other than a theatre. This condition affects a great many seats in the orchestra floors of both the Roxy and the Music Hall, and a distorted posture is also necessary in the second and especially in the third mezzanines.

There is absolutely no evidence of scientifically applied seating angles, floor slopes and screen positions in either of these theatre designs. The same chair-back angles appear in the orchestra chairs as in the mezzanine chairs. In the orchestra the patron has to force his weight against the chair-back, and in the upper mezzanines he has to lean forward away from the chair-back with his weight pressing on the front part of the seat. These faulty seating conditions are of course quite common in most all existing theatres.

The high position of the upper mezzanines in both the Roxy and the Music Hall has naturally forced the level of the projection room to a height which produces excessive projection angles. In the Music Hall the angle is approximately 21°, while in the Roxy it is approximately 26°. The resultant distortion, added to the distortion caused by poor seating positions, considerably decreases the effectiveness of the picture. It is surprising that such an important factor has been overlooked, especially since such a representative body as the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has established 18° as the maximum projection angle advisable.

The whole purpose of such a critical examination as this, of course, is to point out questionable practices that might—perhaps as a result of the sheer eminence of Radio City in the entertainment field—be adopted by other designers. We are frequently more imitative than discriminating, and these theatres, besides being quite magnificent, have been prodigiously publicized, which might lead to the belief that the basic forms they show represent advances in theatre design worthy of adoption elsewhere. Instead I find in them the familiar compromise between the stage and the motion picture theatre.

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ Ben Schlanger (Two Late Theatre Forms: A Criticism) is a New York architect who has made special studies in motion picture theatre architecture, many of which have been reported in BETTER THEATRES. He has also contributed discussions of motion picture theatre architecture to publications of the building professions and trades. Among the results of these studies is the rather revolutionary "parabolic reversed floor" plan devised by Mr. Schlanger as a method of improving visual conditions in particular, and of aiding comfort and the economy of the theatre in general. It has been his practice to attack the architectural problems of the motion picture theatre entirely from the point of view that the structural form is basically complementary to the screen art itself, and it is his belief that this essential association, which is a technological one, makes the cinema radically different in its architectural requirements from any other type of theatre. He is now preparing for BETTER THEATRES a special study of the relationship of motion picture production to its reproduction in a theatre.

¶ S. Charles Lee (A Theatre Architect Visits Europe) is a Los Angeles architect who has designed some of the most notable theatres on the Pacific Coast. Besides having been the architect for several of the largest, he created the unique little Studio theatre in Los Angeles, probably the most elaborately equipped of the so-called miniature theatres.

¶ Leo T. Parker (Recent Litigation Involving Theatres) is a regular contributor of articles on legal matters of special interest to theatre operators. He is a Cincinnati attorney-at-law. Now in preparation are a number of articles on specific classes of law concerned with the everyday operation of theatres, including one treating of law involved in the leasing of sound equipment.

The World-famous METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Trade Mark

IF THE M-G-M LION COULD SPEAK!

He would tell you about his newest motion picture "The Secret of Madame Blanche" which is destined to win great fame and to thrill many hearts!

He would tell you that the same studio, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which gave you "The Sin of Madelon Claudet" has again produced a soul-drama of marvelous human feeling, of powerful appeal!

He would tell you that few times in your picture-going life have you witnessed an actress who will move you as Irene Dunne will! He would promise you that her performance, ranging the years from innocent girlhood to experienced maturity, is grander and more glorious than her memorable appearances in "Cimarron" and "Back Street."

If the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Lion could talk to you he would say: "Friends, take my sincere advice and see this picture!"

EXTRA! LAUREL & HARDY Comedy "Towed in a Hole"

TO THE MOTION PICTURE LOVERS* OF THIS CITY:

Please read this entire message—and believe every word of it! Never have we made an announcement with more sincerity or with more enthusiasm.

We take pride in presenting a truly unusual motion picture—Irene Dunne in "The Secret of Madame Blanche."

A year ago we gave our personal endorsement to Helen Hayes in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet." Today we recommend to you Irene Dunne in "The Secret of Madame Blanche," the story of a remarkable woman—from girlhood to motherhood!

We want you to see Irene Dunne's startling achievement; see the exciting life she portrays, and see how it leaves its stamp upon her. See innocence, first love, temptation, disillusionment, motherhood—every womanly emotion mirrored in her face, her eyes . . . even her voice changes with the years. All changes—except the beauty of her soul. Men couldn't reach that!

A picture you will FEEL with every breath...we want you to see Irene Dunne in "The Secret of Madame Blanche," with Phillips Holmes, Una Merkel, Lionel Atwill. Presented with the fine feeling and finish of a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 110, No. 8 February 18, 1933

SHORT SHORT STORY

WAY down below the HERALD'S editorial windows in Central Park is an imposing monument with a glorious sculptured figure of a goddess. It is the immortalization in gilded bronze of a beautiful woman once famous among sculptors and artists around the world—and because of that for a few hectic days in the world of the motion picture. She played in a feature that opened a vista of screen success. Thereupon a Broadway sharpshooter invited her to head the cast of a "snappy" production. She hesitated, sought good advice and got it, turned it down and took the immediate cash. Later she took a job at a department store counter and later on took laudanum. Today's world of the motion picture does not know who she was. There have been corporations like that, too.

FOR FIFTEEN CENTS

HOUSE BILL 14386, providing for the coinage of some new fractional pieces including a half cent, a cent and a quarter and so forth up to a three cent piece, introduced the other day by Representative McFadden of Canton, Pa., reminds us of the remote day when we promoted the notion of a fifteen cent piece in behalf of the motion picture. It was all a part of a movement to raise admission prices above a dime and still get the admission in one handy piece of money. The movement incidentally gathered a lot of support from the makers of fifteen cent articles, all the way from monthly magazines to cigars. At the high tide of attention we put out a design, with a head of Helen Holmes on one side and Charles Chaplin in hat, pants and cane for the other. The movement was lost in the excitements of the world war. But once again fifteen cents is a lot of money. A stein and pretzel design would be neat.

VIEWERS WITH ALARM

THE list of those persons who make a profession of picking on the pictures changes somewhat from decade to decade, but the plaints and the technique continue about the same. The Reverend Mr. Wilbur D. Crafts was supplanted in the public prints for many years by Canon William Sheafe Chase, who long ago lapsed into a relative silence. Now rises Mr. George J. Hecht, publisher of Parents' Magazine, as one of the most continuous complainers about the moral influence of the screen. Now, in connection with a session of the annual conference of the National Board of Review, Mr. Hecht is quoted in the papers of the land as asserting that "gangster pictures do infinite harm. They overstimulate children and in many cases seriously interfere with their sleep."

An exhaustive investigation would doubtless also disclose that children are over-stimulated by, and lose sleep over, air rifles, baseball, skating, all-day suckers and mince pie. Their parents are supposed to take care of such matters.

When the world is made entirely safe and sure for adults, we shall have time to think about fixing up the entire output of art and literature so that the kids may be tossed over the front gate to browse at will.

Meanwhile it is now a bit over a quarter of a century since the nickelodeon swept the world and we have a whole generation of people reared amidst the menace of the movies. In spite of that, the complete collapse of civilization is not yet entirely apparent.

FUNNY OLD UNCLE SAM

IF you think the motion picture business is funny, consider this one. Down at the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Washington a staff of youngsters and grown-ups are solemnly working on a series of jig-saw puzzles of "more than fifty pieces" to determine whether or not they are adult entertainment. If the kids solve the puzzles fastest, Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, attorney for the puzzle manufacturers, gains a point in her contention that the jig-saw puzzle is a child's game and not, therefore, taxable. Up to date the department has held that puzzles of over fifty pieces are adult fun and to be taxed 10 per cent.

It is incidentally our notion that the jig-saw puzzle is keeping a lot of dimes away from the box office—and that nothing can be done about it but let nature take its course. They'll be tired soon.

Meanwhile, if our solemn United States is going to exempt children's entertainment from taxation and encourage it in a big way, there's a bright future for certain classes of films. Sometimes we wish the U. S. would not be so funny—it makes Will Rogers seem so smart.

HE CAN'T TAKE IT

CONVALESCENT up in Central Park West, Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel reached for a Lucky and cried out to a reporter for the New York Herald Tribune: "They're all wolves, this Broadway crowd . . . I used to like to walk down Broadway in the old days, but now . . ." Roxy's shows are in Sixth avenue now. When he prospered in Broadway it was a great little street.

A POLICE WHISTLE SOUNDS ON THE screen, followed by an official printed description of a wanted criminal, pictures of the suspect, a verbal description, instructions for notifying authorities should the suspect be noticed. Not too remote in the future is the possibility of seeing such a film in any New York theatre, if New York Police Commissioner Mulrooney should adopt a method finding increasing favor with England's famed Scotland Yard. A British court has recognized the film's effectiveness as evidence. . . .

SHARPLY, BITTERLY STOCKHOLM FILM critics flared forth last week in resentment at the Warner-produced portrayal of Ivar Kreuger, Sweden's arch double-dealer, in "The Match King," cinematized by Warren William. Chiefly protested, it appears, is the picture's picture of Sweden and Sweden's businessmen. One critic: "To display such a film in Sweden is a flagrant violation of good taste and tact." Apparently undismayed, Sweden's film industry (which used Kreuger money) plans provincial release. . . .

THE DAY OF INDIVIDUAL THEATRE ownership has arrived coincidentally with the end of the concentration of such ownership by producers, said Martin Quigley in Kansas City this week, bound Coastward. Mr. Quigley, to newsmen: " . . . the efforts of various producers to form and operate great theatre circuits nationally comprise the most destructive incident in the history of the industry. . . . Decentralization of responsibility in production is likely to follow closely on the heels of decentralization in theatre ownership and operation. . . . When this is brought about, the industry will be prepared to regain . . . the enviable position it formerly held." . . .

ON APACE GOES THEATRE DECENtralization. Paradoxically comes news this week of the action of Warner in Pennsylvania, where, in Harrisburg, applications for separate incorporation charters were filed for 41 houses affiliated with Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc. The check to cover fees bore a Vitagraph, Inc., signature. Denying the action was a decentralization move, Warner executives gave as reasons: taxation purposes and "to generally improve the situation of Warner theatres in that zone." . . . To Kansas City from Los Angeles, Fox West Coast headquarters, has moved the hub of operation of Fox Midwest Theatres, with Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager, supreme in command of 130 houses involved. Operating control still rests with Skouras Brothers. . . . With five already opened, Walter Reade hastens the resumption of his 19-house circuit in New Jersey, closed by Paramount-Publix last week, returned to Mr. Reade, who says all film contracts have been amicably adjusted. . . . Back to W. C. Quimby have gone Fort Wayne's six houses, which he sold to RKO, which RKO now returns. Fort Wayne's population, and its theatres, depend upon the General Electric plant, operating only 10 per cent. Mr. Quimby hopes to cut the nut, hold on until business moves upward. . . . Completely absorbed is the National Theatres Syndicate of 10 California houses by Redwood Theatres Circuit, now boasting 19 houses scattered across the face of northern California. From the widow of National's late president L. R. Cook the theatres were obtained. . . .

Details of the first are indefinite, probability being a musical to go into work this summer. Ranking with, above or slightly below Wynn is Jack Pearl, Baron Munchausen of the tall stories. SHOWMEN RALLY TO FIGHT STATE LEGISLATION FLOOD

Exhibitor Leaders Are Citing Admission Price Cuts, Closed Houses, General Conditions to Offset Threat of Taxation

Exhibitors of the country are engaged in defending their properties against scores of proposed state taxation measures. Concomitant with the general economic situation has come a flood of legislation of all kinds, adverse to the industry and called discriminatory by theatre owners and others in the industry who would be affected by their passage.

Theatre operators everywhere have banded together in dozens of anti-legislative campaigns and their leaders are effectively citing forced admission reductions, lowered box-office returns, dark theatres, receiverships and general film conditions as reasons why new or additional imposts should not be made on picture properties.

Generally, the trend is away from censorship and state Sunday closing measures, with legislators almost everywhere giving practically all of their attention to the raising of new revenue for unbalanced state budgets and dwindling sources of income for governmental operations.

May Be 500 Bills

The majority of the 40-odd current state legislative sessions already have passed the half-way mark. Considerable time was taken up during the earlier weeks by discussions and hearings on proposed bills. From now until adjournment it is expected that definite action by voting will be the rule. Adjournments are scheduled in dozens of states during March and April, although many will continue in prolonged sessions because of economic conditions and the necessity for immediate action.

The legislative situation as it concerns this industry has not been as tense since 1929, when 481 bills of various nature were introduced throughout the country. Five hundred may be the total this year.

The motion picture legislative situation is not so serious, nor does it threaten to be, in about a dozen states, including: Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, Maine, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah and Vermont.

The Florida legislature will not meet until April, and sessions of the legislative authorities in Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia are not scheduled until 1934.

Tax bills of various nature, but principally on admissions, were introduced in twenty-four states, or more, including taxes on tickets, gross intake, rentals, distribution, circuit operations, sales taxes and levies on billboards and other forms of outdoor advertising.

The two-men-in-a-booth situation was brought up in some states, in a few others proposals for or against censorship, Sunday showings and the like were the subjects of legislation proposed.

In Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Kansas Missouri and North Carolina theatre owners have vigorous campaigns underway denouncing attempts to saddle the industry with considerable adverse legislation. Although exhibitors everywhere are conducting unified battles against such discrimination, theatre owners in these half-dozen states are especially active.

A uniform system of censorship will be proposed at a national conference of motion picture censorship boards in Washington early next month. Its sponsors say such action would do away with the present situation whereby screen matter approved in one state is often rejected in another. Poster and newspaper advertising are also expected to come up for discussion.

Meanwhile, censorship was attacked by J. L. Marron, president of the Jacksonville Better Films Committee, at a late session of the National Board of Review conference at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York.

Motion Picture Herald in its February 4 issue published a comprehensive article on the relation of admission taxes to motion picture theatre operation. It was presented as a means of preparing exhibitors to present a logical argument against state levies on tickets.

The Federal Situation

Federal, state and local taxes, according to a recent estimate, consumed 38 per cent of the income of the American people, while the New York State budget advisory committee says that 20 years ago "one dollar out of $15.50 earned went to the support of government. Now, one dollar in $3 is so taken. Certainly the tax burden is at the destructive point."

The federal legislative situation is not as serious as in various states. Despite a lot of ballyhoo, there is little probability that the present session will enact any film legislation. And it can be stated definitely that this Congress will not eliminate the admission tax.

There is evidence to support a suggestion recently made at the Capitol that certain interests would like to involve Congress in an embroglio over picture legislation so as to give opportunity for the airing of some intra-industry controversies.

As a matter of cold fact, letters and petitions on subjects such as the Brookhart bill are ordinarily given little consideration because they are usually patently the result of organized propaganda.

Even if the Brookhart bill is passed by the Senate it cannot get through the House before Congress adjourns March 4, at which time it will die. If the backers of federal control want their bill brought into the next Congress they will have to find a new sponsor for it.

The present session of Congress is not expected to eliminate any taxes.

Two important rulings were recently announced by the federal tax department with respect to the admission tax. The following is a digest of these rulings prepared by Seidman & Seidman, certified public accountants:

1. Where a charitable organization buys a number of seats from a theatre, paying the box office price for them, and then sells the seats for a higher price, the entire amount received by the theatre is subject to tax. The exemption relating to charitable organizations is not applicable to this amount. However, the excess price received by the charitable organization is exempt from tax, being exclusively for the benefit of charity.

2. Where a ticket of admission is sold for the total sum of $1, including tax, the tickets should be printed so as to show "admission price 91 cents, tax 10 cents, total $1.01, reduced price $1." The tax of 10 cents must be paid on each admission ticket. If the admission price is shown as 90 cents, the tax is 9 cents, and it is not permissible to collect the tax of 10 cents on such admission.

500 Bills Up in More Than 40 State Sessions Concentrate on Revenue Possibilities to Balance Their Budgets

In connection with the following presentation of the various motion picture legislative activities of state law-making bodies throughout the nation, appear certain state political and financial statistics which have a relation, some of them indirectly, with the situation. The budget and state debt figures are for 1932-33. Next year's totals are now being compiled.

ALABAMA

The state legislature is meeting in special session at Montgomery. Budget: $23,209,000; Net debt: $61,416,000.

General retail sales tax bill, with provision for 10 per cent levy on amusements, was introduced by Representative Harrison, and is pending.

Locally, a score of municipalities recently have lifted bans on Sunday showings.

ARIZONA

Convened in January, adjourns about March 1. Meeting at Phoenix. Budget: $6,382,000; Net debt: $1,502,000.

The situation regarding motion pictures or theatres has been quiet.

ARKANSAS

Convened in January, adjourns about March 1. Meeting at Little Rock. Budget: $49,640,000; Net debt: $105,364,000.

There were no state bills involving the film business reported.

CALIFORNIA

Convened in January, session indefinite. Meeting at Sacramento. Budget: $281,509,000; Net debt: $140,991,000.

Led by Thomas D. Van Osten, manager of the California Theatre Association, exhibitors are campaigning against proposed taxation bills and others. Assemblyman Albert Ross has a bill which would tax all films 1½ cents per foot, including those made elsewhere and imported.

Ten per cent theatre tax, starting at 10 cent admissions, would return estimated $5,350,000 revenue.

Another tax, of 5 per cent on film, photographic supplies and 10 per cent on cameras would return together about $12,000,000.

Motion picture censorship is proposed.

A state tax would be paid on incomes; another would tax branches of chain organizations, including theatres. The scale is graduated.

State Federation of Labor sponsored a bill which would compel employment of two men in a projection booth. Exhibitors say its passage would compel closing of 200 theatres, one-fourth of all houses in the state. George Bowers introduced the bill (No. 260) in the assembly.

Another state bill would make amendments to the eight-hour law requirements on women's work to make it include females employed in studios and laboratories.

WILLIAM FOX SAYS A BOOK!

and Upton Sinclair's story of what he said is commented upon

by TERRY RAMSAYE

Tuesday morning the motion picture industry came to its office in New York to find a book entitled "Upton Sinclair presents William Fox" on its desk.

For some two years following his departure from the Fox Film Corporation as its executive chief, Mr. Fox has been silent, at least so far as the public prints are concerned. Now he has not only broken his silence, he has in fact shattered it, explosively, violently. His book is by itself proclaimed as intended to be nothing less than an earthshaking blast.

In some groups of the social organism it might be a sensation but the world of Broadway and the motion picture is practically book-proof. It can be set agog by a line in Walter Winchell's column on Monday morning, but when you say a book to Broadway you are not speaking its language.

MR. FOX'S BOOK APPEARS TO BE A document of purpose. It is primarily a trial in print of his issues with those who unhorsed him in Fox Film Corporation, with only one witness on the stand, Mr. William Fox. The trial results in an instructed verdict for Mr. William Fox, against all and sundry, the banks, the electrical companies, Wall Street, institutionally, and all persons thereunto allied or connected, each and severally, forever and ever.

The volume came to Broadway accompanied by assorted tracts, pamphlets and brochures, one of which bears the suggestion that the motion picture become a government enterprise, with Mr. Fox as its dollar-a-year dictator in behalf of the commonweal.

A considerable element of interest in "Upton Sinclair presents William Fox" reposes in the interesting personality of Mr. Sinclair. To one familiar with the life and thought patterns of both of them, no two men could have been farther apart than they were a few years ago with Mr. Fox in Tenth avenue, the master of a structure of maybe some half a thousand millions, and Mr. Sinclair out in California, the master of a lot of copy paper and language. Mr. Fox was the iron-handed millionaire magnate. Mr. Sinclair was the ardent radical writer, riding in eternal joust against the windmills of finance and industry. The old saw has it that "politics makes strange bedfellows." That is, however, a trivial phenomenon compared to what the wars of purse and pride can do to literature and collaborators.

After reading "Upton Sinclair presents William Fox," I am now prepared for an announcement of "My Life and Empire—as told by George V to Leon Trotsky."

MR. SINCLAIR, A NEW YORKER BY nurture, rose in the world of writing many and many a year ago with a volatile pen and a big market in the muckraking magazines. He came from a background of culture and of one-time wealth. He has been continuously motivated by an apparent conviction that the status quo is not only wrong but intrinsically tragic. The muckraking age rose to its crest and subsided, but Mr. Sinclair did not. He has been at it ever since. He lives in a curious world of which he is the precise mathematical center, entirely surrounded by the hellish forces of malevolent schemers against him and the race. Whatever is, is personal, and he burns with it. He is probably the happiest writer in America, enjoying always a sense of persecution and suppression, living on and on, it must seem to him, an exciting and charmed life in defiance of his mighty foes which connive against him on every hand. He is a best seller with a mail order distribution to an audience of malcontents, with large foreign circulations. He is a highly competent writer, with force, charm and a keen sense of the dramatic. He has never yet employed the expedient of under-statement.

This work on, about, and for Mr. Fox is Mr. Sinclair's second major impingement on the world of the motion picture. He is incidentally interested in "The Spirit of Mexico," the much behandled Serge Eisenstein production made some two years ago after the Russian director took his bitter parting with Hollywood. The picture is, by the bye, now said to be in the hands of Sol Lesser for independent distribution. But the first of Mr. Sinclair's impacts was back in the days of screen beginning, unplanned and accidental.

IT CHANCED THAT WILLIAM N. SELIG of Chicago, about 1905, made an industrial picture of the meat packing activities of Armour & Company in Chicago at the instance of the late and belligerent P. D. Armour. The packing house was all scrubbed up and put on dress parade for the picture. The picture got a trivial distribution and went on the shelf. About two years elapsed and, in the midst of the exciting days of Theodore Roosevelt as president, Mr. Sinclair punctured America's industrial calm by his muckracking stock yards and packing house novel, "The Jungle." This volume raised quite as much hell-in-general as Mr. Fox and Mr. Sinclair seem to hope for the opus out this week.

There were investigations, shouts from Theodore-the-mighty, international complications in the beef market, legislation and what not. Mr. Armour got very hot under the collar. He thought about that lovely, sweet scented packing house picture and called up Colonel Selig to order new prints in vast numbers.

"But I can't make them," replied Colonel Selig, "because Edison's lawyers have me tied up tight with injunctions for patent infringement and they are about to be made permanent."

The consequence of that was that all the lawyers that the powerful P. D. Armour could call to the rescue plunged into a battle to prolong the life of Colonel Selig's film enterprise so the prints of the packing town picture could go forward. The result was that the Selig concern not only survived but prospered and lived to be an important factor, with Thomas A. Edison, a handful of years later, in the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The great picture combine was, in a sense, a by-product of Mr. Sinclair's novel.

Probably the best known, in America, of Mr. Sinclair's more recent works is his sensational treatment of journalism in "The Brass Check." If the American press and the powers it serves really felt as badly about Mr. Sinclair as "The Brass Check" indicates, he would long ago have been dissolved in sulphuric acid and filtered through a blotter.

IT IS DOUBTLESS HIS INTENSE EGOcentricity which enables him to write so continuously and with so much internal and external heat. This is a terrible world, but it is his world, and mayhap he will be its redeemer. A few years ago Mr. Sinclair addressed the present writer with a considerable line of inquiry about the motion picture industry and some of its internal affairs. The inquiry was answered in considerable detail and a pleasant interlude of correspondence was had. Mr. Sinclair presently desired to express appreciation of the cooperation and sent along a present—it was an unautographed paper copy of the life of Mr. Sinclair written by Floyd Dell. That was, one can be sure, the most gallant gesture that could occur to him.

Mr. Sinclair calls his biographer, Mr.

FLOURISH OF DARING—BUT CAUTIOUS

Dell, to the aid of the book on Mr. Fox quoting in a foreword from portions of a report Mr. Dell is said to have written to a publishing house to which this Fox work was submitted—submitted without acceptance, one may judge, since the book is now being published personally by Mr. Sinclair. Mr. Dell's report forecasts "It will be in front page headlines and a Congressional Inquiry may keep it there for weeks or months."

After which Mr. Sinclair, once again deliciously shuddering in apprehension of the perils of his lone knighthood out against the conspiring foes of rectitude, righteousness and the race, says:

"I am printing a first edition of ten thousand copies of this book and am distributing it as widely and as quickly as possible. I don't know how many days will be allowed me after this bombshell hits Wall Street and Hollywood. Suffice it to say I will stay in the ring until I am knocked out. . . . "

In his title page Mr. Sinclair has gone kittenishly movie in technique, that is to say after the manner of movies as they used to be, in the following manner:

IT WILL PACK THEM IN!!

Mr. Sinclair's "production" gets into the chapter entitled Reel Two before he starts his running narrative, which takes a running start with the birth of Mr. Fox in the hamlet of Tulchva in Hungary, in his gradual approach to the heavy drama settings of Wall Street. But through the pages before, we are given an interesting and graphic picture of the process by which the book came into being.

Mr. Fox seems to have gone looking up Mr. Sinclair out in California with an impulse toward giving him the background material for a novel, a regular Sinclair novel. But, writes Mr. Sinclair, "I saw at once that this, if I wrote it, would be a fact story, told in detail and documented."

Thereafter we are shown Mr. Fox calling day after day for thirty-six days to sit in the Sinclair churchly and high vaulted atelier to talk, talk, talk, as fast as two stenographers could take it, with his attorney Benjamin Reass sitting by, and Mr. Sinclair supplying ignition by questioning now and then. We see Mr. Fox in white socks and sweater, a row of cellophaned cigars in his pocket, and one continuously in hand, as he sits, vehemently dictating, sipping orange juice, lighting and relighting his cigar, tediously careful with his ashes, and picking the little scraps of cellophane from the rug.

Mr. Sinclair perhaps does not know quite how good that sector of his story is, for Mr. Sinclair never ran the gauntlet of the ex-police guards who sat along the halls, aisles and vistas of the Fox offices in Tenth avenue, delivering the caller at last to the secretaries who in turn opened the sanctum of the Fox Presence with a key.

It was the tightest lipped office in all the world of industry. He was adamant and inaccessible in terms that made Mt. Everest seem a foothill. Only a few years ago one of the transient heads of the Fox Film Corporation came in despair to the writer of this review for the information about Mr. Fox and his company with which to write a booklet on the corporation's anniversary.

Yet now we see this cold, strong, silent man, in the workshop of the volatile and radical Mr. Sinclair, pouring out his iron heart to a battery of stenographers. Here is literary catharsis with a vengeance.

MR. SINCLAIR, DESPITE HIS FLOURISH of daring, does on page XVII of the "Prologue" set up certain cautions, saying: "This is William Fox's story as he told it to me, and my job has been to put it into literary form; to order it, select the vital parts, cut out the repetition, and clear up obscurities by questioning my subject. Wherever there are letters, affidavits, court records, financial statements, etc., I have mentioned these sources and am of course responsible for quoting these correctly. Also I have here and there stated my own opinions, always making clear they are mine. But for all the statements in the book which rest on the authority of William Fox, he stands responsible."

Mr. Sinclair says Mr. Fox has no share in the royalties which may accrue; that they are to be devoted to placing a set of twelve volumes of the works of Upton Sinclair in public libraries throughout the world.

The story is no delicate Thornton Wilder mist of narrative rhetoric. It is the true and proper product of the melding of the 758 typewritten pages of Mr. Fox's dramatic dictation fed through the distillery of Mr. Sinclair's literary processes. It has lost nothing in the process. One can read Mr. Sinclair's words and hear the voice, the stentorian voice, of belligerent William Fox, the seductive voice of the seeking William Fox, the pleading voice of the hurt William Fox, the derisive voice of the triumphant William Fox, the assured voice of the confident William Fox. Both Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Fox have done a complete job of what they set out to set down. It is a story told entirely in black and white. Like all Sinclair stories and like all Fox arguments there are only two sides, a right side which is theirs, a wrong side which is the other fellow's. The rights are all right and the wrongs are all wrong, utterly, damnably, perniciously and eternally, with malice aforethought and conspiracy without end, until hell freezes over and three days past. This makes the telling simple. There are no delicate nuances of tremulous fact, where several things might be true at once, no issues wherein an honest man might differ with another honest man. It is a cast iron silhouette of Fox lily virtue, cameoed against black Wall Street villainy.

THE CHAPTER TITLES ARE AS GOOD as a book, among them: "Shoe Blacking and Lozenges," "Pretzels and Buffalo Pans," "The Vultures," "The Octopus," "The Fox Trap," "The Scales of Justice," "The Reptyle," "Captain Kidd," "Empty Shells."

There are interludes of tremulous music, sentiment if you please, eye-dabbing sentiment. We are shown this poor man, with maybe only something like fifty millions to his name, the victim of the machinations of the mighty.

The book names names endlessly and Mr. Sinclair is very likely to get himself considerably spanked by H. L. Mencken of American Mercury for not putting an index in his book. That, however, is not a fault but in truth a clever device. When I wrote my "A Million and One Nights" the fact that it was perfectly indexed vastly reduced the circulation. The motion picture industry borrowed copies from me and looked itself up in the index to see what I'd said about it, returning the book with thanks. They will all have to read Mr. Fox's book to find out this time.

Mr. Fox puts everybody in the book and displayed exhibits endlessly to his collaborator. It gives Mr. Sinclair chance to remark that the signature of John D. Rockefeller is like a schoolboy's and variously record considerable passages which have,

ROXY TAKES FLING AT 'BROADWAY WOLVES'

Recuperating, Rothafel Plans Return to Radio City in April; Says He Knew Vaudeville Would Fail at Music Hall

S. L. (Roxy) Rothafel, setting at rest "all this stuff that is going around about me," told the New York Herald Tribune this week: "I'll be back in April, after a trip South, and go back to work," with the reference to Radio City and its two theatres, which he left after the twin opening to undergo an operation.

Resting in his New York apartment, Roxy took the opportunity to flash his disgust at, give the lie to "this Broadway crowd," of whom he said, "They're all wolves."

"They're glad when somebody who has always stood for something constructive in the theatre stubs his toe," he said. "While I was flat on my back they were circulating rumors that I was 'out' at Radio City, that I wasn't sick at all—just stalling."

Firing with both barrels at the Broadway crowd, Roxy expressed his feelings unmistakably: "I'm sick of it. These sophisticated, worldly wise, narrow-faced, sharp-eyed low-lifes that hang around Broadway! I used to like to walk down Broadway in the old days. Now I never walk there when I can help myself. I feel like I ought to go home and take a bath when I do. The whole street exists by shots in the arm of excitement, filthy scandals and jealous rumors."

In defense of his original idea of Radio City entertainment, Roxy spoke with just a shade of bitterness: "What did they think I was—a miracle man, a demi-god? That's silly. We all make mistakes. I'm human, I make mistakes, too. With that show (the Music Hall), sick as I was, there wasn't a chance to really get it whipped into shape, but I stuck with it, night and day, with doctors and nurses in constant attendance; I wouldn't let my associates down then."

Roxy indicated that he was still "a pretty sick man," and graphically described the sinking feeling he experienced during the more serious period of his illness, followed by the return to better health. "It's a funny feeling," he said.

Mr. Rothafel indicated that he knew from the start it would be impossible to maintain a vaudeville policy at the Music Hall, that operation as a motion picture theatre was inevitable. "The time was not right to try to ask a $2.50 top," he declared. A change is to be expected in the policy of the RKO Roxy, he confided, but he was vague as to the nature of that change, or the date it would be effective. If musical shows go in, they will be originals, he indicated, not revivals.

He took a moment to praise Noel Coward, playwright, classifying him as one of the geniuses of the theatre today. Mr. Coward, George M. Cohan, Charlie Chaplin and Charles Frohman are four figures which will be remembered in the theatre, according to Mr. Rothafel.

With a final thrust at the "Broadway wolves," Roxy noted his opinion that there are no longer any provinces, any "sticks."

Bankruptcy Bill May Carry Over

Apparent unwillingness of the United States Senate judiciary committee to undertake the difficult task of framing bankruptcy relief for corporations may have the effect of killing bankruptcy reform legislation for the current session.

Embodying only provisions for the extension and composition of individual indebtedness, a skeleton bill was submitted to the Senate February 13. Legislation adopted by the House, but rejected by the Senate committee, provided also for reorganization of corporations unable to meet their indebtedness.

"So much division existed regarding these sections it was felt to be impossible to pass a bill of such broad nature at this session," it was declared by Chairman Norris of Nebraska in explaining the elimination of corporation relief provisions.

College Women Raise Film's Social Value, Says Milliken

College women can heighten the social value of motion pictures by establishing higher standards of adult appreciation, said Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, speaking before the Muncie, Indiana branch of the American Association of University Women this week. Mr. Milliken said he attributed this fact to the generally broad cultural background contributed by university women to the appraisal of adult films, and to the fact that in their position as community leaders they set the fashion in film-going as in dress.

In Indianapolis, on the following day, Mr. Milliken told the Association that in its functions as the greatest mass entertainment medium in the nation, the motion picture cannot be designed solely for audience minorities. He pointed out that in spite of this, the industry, in cooperation with interested public groups, has made great strides towards the solution of the problem of the child and the motion picture.

American Films Lead In Chinese Market

Distribution of American motion picture films in China amounts to about 420 new feature films annually, compared with about 90 British, or a total of about 4,500,000 linear feet, according to a recent release of the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce. Added to these are 1,200,000 feet of shorts, including news reels, or a total of 5,700,000 linear feet.

In all China there are only about 200 theatres, of which about 90 are equipped for sound. Shanghai, Hong Kong and Canton represent the principal sound picture market. Shanghai now has six first-run theatres.

WILLIAM FOX SAYS A BOOK!

one would say, very little bearing on the story, as for instance a yarn about Winfield Sheehan, Fox chief of production, in his days as secretary to Rhinelander Waldo, New York police commissioner, and various matters therein concerned. Mr. Fox does not, however, go exhaustively into the history of his own Fourteenth street career and Tammany friendships. Henry Ford gets a bit of attention, and there are bankers by platoons from Bernard M. Baruch to Albert H. Wiggin and many a name between.

In the array of those whom Mr. Fox and Mr. Sinclair bring into their tale for treatments and notice are: Harold Franklin, Harley Clarke, Harry L. Stuart, Samuel Untermyer, Charles Evans Hughes, Will H. Hays, Adolph Zukor, Louis B. Mayer, Herbert Hoover, Clarence Dillon, Felix Warburg, Charles M. Schwab, Warner Brothers, Elisha Walker, and Saul Rogers. The Chase National Bank is more than occasionally mentioned.

The reader will look in vain, however, for any reflection of the mood of the dramatic Mr. Fox as he was quoted at Miami Beach with Al Jolson, in Arthur Brisbane's Hearst paper column the other day:

> "The smiling one is William Fox, whom you know in connection with motion pictures. Says he, 'They absolutely kicked me out of the moving picture business, FORCED ME to take twenty million dollars in cash and $500,000 a year salary for a good many years. I had no choice in the matter, they just forced me.'
> "His smile, absolutely genuine, as he says this would annoy some of those that did the forcing."

But that you see is not a part of the story of persecution that Mr. Sinclair had to write and so it is not in the book.

Advices come along from Hollywood that in addition to the profits which may be produced by the book, Mr. Sinclair "sacrificed his Socialist principles to the extent of twenty-five thousand dollars for services rendered." Whether he got that price, or any price, or not, he earned it. And what a good Sinclair time he had doing it!

Canada's Houses Get Best Fire Rating in Dominion

A current report of J. Grove Smith, Dominion fire commissioner, at Ottawa, gives motion picture theatres the highest rating in the matter of fire control among all classes of property in Canada. The report shows that during the past year only 19 film fires occurred among 820 theatres and the property damage was limited to $4,300 in the aggregate.

This is described as a record inasmuch as the 820 theatres represent a total real property value of $45,000,000. In the operation of these theatres, it is pointed out, the total of films projected in the year was 2,880,000,000 feet, or 546,000 miles of celluloid.

SMPE'S TEST FILM TO AID PROJECTION

Aim to Detect Maladjustments of Optical Systems and Correct Chromatic Aberration, Sound Track, Travel Ghost

A test film to be supplied to theatres for correcting both visual and sound projection difficulties, has been developed by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and will have a tryout at a meeting of the projection practice committee in New York next week. A preliminary test was made last week.

The film was run from a projection room and consisted of a design having sharp projecting points, both top and bottom, for the purpose of checking travel ghost. A second design consisted of closely-spaced horizontal lines, and a third design consisted of closely spaced super-imposed horizontal and vertical lines for purposes of testing flatness of field of the lens and sharpness of focus.

According to Barry Rubin, chairman of the committee, which developed the film, the members were highly satisfied with the demonstration, the only criticism being that the black squares formed by the intersecting vertical and horizontal lines should be larger to permit better visibility from the projection room.

Methods of distribution of the test films have not been decided upon as yet, according to reports from the SMPE this week. It is thought that news of the film will be sent out to exhibitors, offering them the opportunity of buying a print outright. Prints will be ready after the spring convention in April.

The SMPE Journal states in the current issue that the running of the test film in theatres will provide both visual and aural means of detecting maladjustments of the optical systems of the projector, and also will indicate what adjustments are necessary for the correction of chromatic aberration, sound track distortions and travel ghost.

Convention in April

The spring convention of the Society will be held April 24-28 at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York. Arrangements are now being made to hold an exhibit of newly developed motion picture apparatus, but it will not be of the same nature as the usual trade exhibit, according to Sylvan Harris, manager of the Society. There will be no booths. Each exhibit will be allotted definite space and all exhibits will be arranged in one room. The following regulations will apply:

1. The apparatus to be exhibited should be new or have been developed within the past 12 months.
2. Each exhibitor will be permitted to display a card giving the name of the manufacturing concern, and each piece of equipment must be labeled with a plain label free from name of the manufacturer.
3. A technical expert capable of explaining the features of the apparatus exhibited must be present during the period of the exhibition.
4. A charge for the exhibit will be made in accordance with the space occupied, as follows: up to 20 sq. ft., $10; 20 to 30 sq. ft., $15; 30 to 40 sq. ft., $20; 40 to 50 sq. ft., $25.

Reports of a socalled "fight" between the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences were vigorously denied this week by Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, SMPE president.

"There has never been a fight between the two organizations," he said. "We may each have certain differences of opinion, but after all, we are both working fundamentally toward he same goal."

The Society is studying a series of industry practices and problems, Dr. Goldsmith said, and the results of the study may or may not agree with the opinion of the same problem held by the Academy. A divergent opinion already has been revealed on elongating the standard reel length from 1,000 to 1,700 feet.

"Who is qualified to say that one length is better than another?" Dr. Goldsmith asked. "Under present economic conditions elongation might cost the industry hundreds of thousands of dollars in readjustments alone, to say nothing of the engineering problems which would confront us.

"The Society does not hold itself up as censors of the Academy's proposals. We only want what is best for the industry at the present time, and we invite the cooperation of everyone, including Academy members, in reaching a sensible solution of our problems.

Definite action is being taken by producers in adopting the recommendations of the projection practice committee for improving the visibility of change-over marks on films, according to Chairman Rubin. The recommended marks take the form of black spots surrounded by clear circles so that they can be easily distinguished by the projectionist against either a light or dark background.

"The work of collecting data on the clearances, tolerances and tensions of projectors, begun some time ago, is progressing," he writes in the current SMPE Journal, "and the committee hopes to have the material sufficiently complete for presentation to the Society within several months."

Hulburd Succeeds Botsford

A. M. Botsford, who last week was named assistant to Emanuel Cohen, vice-president in charge of Paramount production, has been succeeded as head of the story board by Merritt Hulburd, former associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post. Mr. Botsford succeeded Harold H. Hurley, resigned.

Frederick Cornwell Dies

Frederick L. Cornwell, attorney, real estate operator and at one time prominent in motion picture affairs in St. Louis and the Midwest, died last week in St. Louis at the age of 54. He had been in ill health for several years. His mother, his widow and a son survive.

3 British-Made Films Set for U.A.

[Pictures in Pictorial Section]

Three of the 12 productions which British and Dominions Film Corporation is to make in its London studios this year, for release throughout the world, by United Artitis, have been named and one is already in work. The international alliance, announced last August and effective January 1, is predicated upon a conviction that a well-made production is welcomed by the exhibitor regardless of the land of its origin.

The three first productions under the arrangement are these: "Bitter Sweet," from Noel Coward's musical play, which will be directed personally by Herbert Wilcox, production executive of British and Dominions; "The Queen," tentative title for a production co-starring Jeanette MacDonald and Herbert Marshall, and "Night of the Garter," starring Sydney Howard,, Winifred Shotter and other British players under Jack Raymond's direction. The last-named is now being made.

Cohn Scores False Economy In Radio Talk on Pictures

False economies in film production cannot be undertaken and at the same time no waste must be permitted, as every dollar of unnecessary expense has to be passed on to the public, said Jack Cohn, vice president of Columbia, discussing industry problems over the radio last week.

"The effect of false economies is immediately felt in the box office and all the money spent on the pictures is lost," he said. "Years and years of intense effort on the part of the industry to improve the public's capacity for appreciating entertainment cannot be sacrificed to cheap pictures."

MGM Begins New Contract; Others To Follow March 1

MGM this week made available the new optional uniform exhibition contract, in accordance with the company announcement to do so by February 15. Fox and Educational, whose sales forces are now combined, placed the contract in effect two weeks ago.

Exhibitors signing for the product of either company have the privilege of using the new standard contract or the old individual form. Universal plans to make the contract available before March 1 and Paramount and Radio on that date.

Christie Debts Listed

Christie Film Company has filed a schedule in Los Angeles federal court in connection with its voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Assets are listed at $568,076, and debts at $568,478. Assets were noted as debts due the company on open accounts. Charles and Al Christie filed personal petitions in bankruptcy last December.

Perley, Veteran Actor, Dead

Charles G. Perley, stage and screen actor, who played for Biograph and Kinemacolor in the early days of the motion picture, died last week in Santa Ana, Cal., at the age of 47 of heart disease. A widow and two sons survive.

EXHIBITORS WILL GET AT LEAST 15 MUSICAL FEATURES IN NEW SEASON

Movement Is Answer to Patrons' Request for Melodious Pictures; Studios Cautious, However, Against Flooding Market

Another musical-film vogue is in the making. Revival of interest in pictures with music will result in the releasing of at least fifteen or twenty music-films during the next six months. Improved methods of working of musical numbers into the stories and the fact that music-films have been very few in number the past year or more, are responsible.

Word also has reached Hollywood that exhibitors are expressing a desire for this type of entertainment, provided the cycle is not overdone, and reports to the HERALD's "What the Picture Did for Me" department bear this out. Growing radio competition of music headliners is an influencing factor, too. It is a fact, however, that the studios are going into the venture cautiously, with no desire to flood the market with such product, as was the case a couple of years back.

Public "Hungry" for Good Music

A distinguishing feature about these new musical offerings will be a vastly improved technique. The old stage routines which characterized, and more or less petrified, musical screen fare of two or three years ago, have been abandoned. Many artful methods have been developed by writers, directors and producers to bring their vocal, instrumental and dance numbers into the pictures without apology or destruction of illusion. Action in most cases will not be slowed down, but the musical interludes will be definite developments in the telling of stories, as in the case of Warners' new "42nd Street," which is the first of the new cycle and embodying the new technique.

Producers generally are of the opinion that the public is "hungry" for good music. Sound recording is said to have been perfected to the point that screen music is as good as the real thing, or better. So with improved sound and better methods of story telling, it is the belief in Hollywood that the public will be pleased with the 1933 models of music-films.

Warners leads off with "42nd Street," now ready for release and featuring Ruby Keeler, Warner Baxter, Ginger Rogers and an all-star cast. It is the backstage type of story, with musical numbers and dance ensembles woven into the telling of the story. Another feature of the kind contemplated by Warners is "Gold Diggers of 1933," which will feature a cast headed by Ruby Keeler, Warren Williams, Joan Blondell and others. As in the case of "42nd Street," the musical interludes will be made a definite part of the story.

Fox has three music-films scheduled to go into production within thirty days. Janet Gaynor will be featured in "Adorable" with Henry Garat, European importation who appeared with Lilian Harvey in "Congress Dances." At almost the same time Miss Harvey will begin work on her first American production in the same studio with Garat. She will be featured with John Boles in "My Lips Betray," and it will be made tuneful by William Kernell. The other Fox picture which will feature music, ballet numbers and ensembles will be "I Love You Wednesday," starring Phillip Merrivale, a newcomer in the Fox headlines who is widely known to the stage. A March release scheduled by Fox with some music is "Five Cents a Glass."

Paramount will provide four in the musical class right shortly. Maurice Chevalier is already at work on one called "A Bedtime Story," in which there will be the usual vocal attractions provided by the French star. Another one swinging into production is "International House," which will have Peggy Hopkins Joyce and the radio personalities, Rudy Vallee and Burns & Allen, among its luminaries. Third among the Paramount music-films will be "College Humor," which also will offer Burns & Allen in addition to Bing Crosby and Frances Dee. Marlene Dietrich will sing in her next picture, "Song of Songs."

Lou Brock will produce a full length musical feature for RKO-Radio, under Mark Sandrich's direction, called "Maiden Voyage." Chic Chandler, featured on the stage in "Great Magoo," will have a stellar spot, as will Wera Engels, German player under contract to Radio. The Wheeler-Woolsey picture now in preparation at Radio will also have songs and other musical tid bits to dress it up. Francis Lederer, newest Radio star from the footlights, will be featured shortly in a story which is being planned as a "musical romance."

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer something to hum and play is promised via "Man of the Nile," Ramon Novarro's current vehicle now in production. Nacio Herbert Brown, who authored many song hits, is responsible for the music. The team of Rodgers & Hart are adding musical tricks to "I Married an Angel," now in preparation at M-G-M. It is being adapted from an unpublished Hungarian play. No cast has yet been assigned. One of the most important MGM releases next season will be a musical featuring Ed Wynn, who is said by radio editors to be the most popular attraction on the air today.

Music in Wheeler-Woolsey Film

While Columbia impresarios are keeping their weather eyes peeled, no plans are actually brewing for musical pictures at this time. However, there is music and some hula-hula stuff in the current Wheeler-Woolsey number, "That's Africa."

Universal expects to turn some box office somersaults with the British-Gaumont picture made in Switzerland, "Be Mine Tonight," which is a light opera.

Educational's feature unit, KBS Productions, has no plans for music-films, likewise Harry Thomas' First Division.

United Artists will contribute Jack Buchanan's "Yes, Mr. Brown," which will have some music; also, Al Jolson's new film, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum." Monogram plans "Wine, Women and Song," and Majestic will have "Sing, You Sinners," with Paul Lukas and Leila Hyams, each with some music.

Hollywood predicts that the early return of musical-films will be marked with more success than that of the first cycle.

Music has "at last taken its place as an inherent feature of a production and as a standard picture exploitation aid," according to Sam Serwer, in charge of special exploitation for M. Witmark & Son. The Witmark company, a music publishing subsidiary of Warner-First National is handling all of the publicity and exploitation for the new Warner musical, "42nd Street." The same policy will prevail with "Gold-diggers of 1933."

Vastly Improved Technique Available, with Old Stage Routines Abandoned and New Devices To Maintain the Illusion

For "42nd Street" Mr. Serwer has had several recordings made of the songs, for theatre lobbies and for radio and music dealer tieups. He pointed out that the production is dependent on its music for the story. "Heretofore," he said, "songs have been introduced into a film for no apparent reason. Songs in pictures now will be important because they are definite parts of the story. The theme song is a thing of the past."

Warners is restricting the radio use of the songs, with the exception of the title song, in order to prevent the "playing out" of the airs by the time the picture opens. Mr. Serwer added that at a special preview in New York several radio headliners attended with a view to acquiring rights.

Robbins Plans Survey

Planning a survey of musical needs of talking pictures, J. J. Robbins, New York music publisher, is at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, accompanied by his European representative, James Campbell. He has just completed a tour of Germany and France, looking into the technique of musical pictures and their development abroad.

Mr. Robbins said the coming season will see a wider use of music in screen entertainment through logical development of plots in which music can be worked into a definite place in drama. He cited the use of "The Moon is on the Nile," a song in Ramon Novarro's new picture, "Man on the Nile."

With a method called the "operatic score," Louis De Francesco, music director for Fox, in "State Fair," employed the device of emphasizing certain words and sentences of dialogue passages with special music to heighten the effect of the words and at the same time make music as unobtrusive as possible when used in the background.

Equity Receivers Named For Fox New England Group

United States District Judge Edwin S. Thomas, in Hartford, this week named Thomas J. Spellacy and Sam Spring, attorneys, co-receivers for Fox New England Theatres Corporation, following an action on the part of attorneys for the circuit. The company operates 17 theatres and four commercial properties taken over from S. Z. Poli some time ago.

Harry Arthur, temporarily operating head of Fox-New England theatres, took over the management of the Fox in Brooklyn this week. Mr. Arthur, who also is acting in an advisory capacity to Howard S. Cullman, operating receiver for the Roxy in New York, is reported to be negotiating with S. Z. Poli and Halsey, Stuart & Co., bankers, for theatres in New England as a nucleus for his own circuit.

ASKS "FILM DAMROSCH" TO TEACH JUVENILES

Board of Review Conferees Told of Grade Pupils' Preference for Westerns, Higher Ages' Leaning Toward Comedies

(Picture in Pictorial Section)

That a "Damrosch of motion picture art" is needed to achieve for juveniles what is being accomplished over the radio for music was one appeal placed before several hundred representatives of motion picture study groups and Better Films movements from various parts of the country at the ninth annual motion picture conference of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, at the Hotel Pennsylvania last week.

Mrs. Mildred Wilder Champlin, director of parent education in the Oneonta, New York, public schools, and head of the home economics department of Hartwick College, presented the case in discussion of the subject "Selected Programs for Family Patronage: What Kind of Pictures Do Parents Want? What Kind of Pictures Do Children Want—and Why?" Mrs. Champlin told of a survey conducted in Oneonta, a city of 13,000, from which the following conclusions were drawn:

"Children below the high school level show a distinct preference for western pictures, the vote being 49 per cent in elementary groups and 41 per cent in junior high. However, in high schools, the first choice is comedy, with girls registering 32 per cent and the boys 39 per cent. Mysteries were second choice. College students prefer comedies first and mysteries second, with a large vote for educational pictures as third choice. Parents prefer comedies first and westerns second. The 'true' family audience, including parents and children from fourth grade through high school, prefers comedies first with a vote of 32 per cent, westerns second with a vote of 28 per cent and mysteries third with a 23 per cent vote."

Their Favorite Players

Illustrative of the family preference for various stars of the screen, Mrs. Champlin reported that 46 per cent of the family audience, as indicated by the survey, chose Janet Gaynor as one of their favorites, 17 per cent mentioned Charles Farrell and others mentioned by 10 per cent or less of the family audience were, in order of frequency, Clark Gable, Joan Crawford, Harold Lloyd, Buck Jones, Marie Dressler, Sylvia Sidney, Tom Mix, Will Rogers, Gary Cooper and Norma Shearer.

A total of children in Oneonta from the fourth grade through high school registered their likes and dislikes and the questionnaire revealed that 17 per cent always attend films with their parents; that 40 per cent occasionally attend with their parents, and 43 per cent never go with adults.

Other speakers were Joseph L. Marron, president of the Jacksonville, Florida, Better Films Council, Edwin F. Coppock, managing director of the Paramount theatre, Staten Island, and Harry Alan Potamkin, critic and member of the National Board's Committee.

If producers expect to hold the audience of tomorrow, and if the motion picture is to survive as a popular entertainment for the masses, film makers must strive for pictures of realism, delegates were told by Leroy E. Bowman of the Child Study Association of America, who said present day social and economic maladjustment has developed a more critical attitude and that "while the motion picture patron is still intrigued by exciting, dramatic and perilous situations, he or she prefers the perilous situation that is directly connected with the real things of life as they are affecting us and others today."

Discussing "Motion Pictures and Children's Emotions," Dr. Frank Astor, of the National Child Welfare Association, described the film as "a mighty force for construction or destruction," pointing to "the grave danger in arousing strong emotions in children without giving them an opportunity for expression of these emotions." He expressed the opinion that motion pictures are advancing the science of eugenics, saying that "consciously or otherwise, each star sets a sort of standard or ideal by which boys and girls select their life mate. The best possible way to censor a picture or an actor is to pay your money to see a better picture or a better actor."

Young Reviewers in Action

Earlier in the day, the delegates had seen a demonstration at the Fox Little Theatre, of the junior review work performed by the Young Reviewers' Club of the National Board of Review. One of the groups of the more than 500 boys and girls ranging in age from 9 to 20 who are now reviewing and commenting upon productions in the projection rooms of the various companies, reviewed a new picture.

Both Dr. Astor and Mr. Bowman stressed the "social significance" of this experiment. Mr. Bowman declared that "the coming years for motion pictures are for the younger generation and we of the older generation should not attempt to be too censorious in dictating what children shall see on the screen."

"The first step toward reality is disillusionment," said Mr. Bowman. "Reformers have attacked the gangster film, yet it is essential that people understand this social phenomenon, for the gangster is real and at present a very definite factor in American life. It must be obvious to the czars of Hollywood that the public is "fed up" with the milk toast film diet and is craving the red meat of reality."

Mr. Bowman described the film "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang" as the most artistic film of last year and added that it is proving one of the most successful at the box office.

Concept of "Conditioning"

The concept known as "conditioning" should constantly be kept in mind, the conference was told by Dr. Astor. Motion pictures should be watched carefully to avoid the spread of many fears, he believed, "for by the process of conditioning, fears can spread faster than by an epidemic. This gives us one of the greatest dangers of motion pictures." With regard to conditioning as related to "friendly and hostile attitudes," Dr. Astor cited as one example the work of Dr. L. L. Thurstone, an investigator for the Payne Fund, who showed to a group of school children a film depicting Germans in a friendly light. The attitude of the children toward German citizens was tested before and after the picture and it was found that the picture made the children more friendly toward the Germans.

Other speakers were Miss Mary Mathews, curator of education, Brooklyn Children's Museum, and Lawrence A. Wilkins, director of modern languages, New York City Board of Education.

The conference continued through Saturday, with the eighteenth annual luncheon Friday at the Hotel Pennsylvania, Dr. George Kirchwey presiding.

Loew's Finances "Strongest Ever"

The Wall Street Journal on Monday said:

"With only about $14,000,000 direct funded debt, and finances strongest in its history, Loew's, Inc., probably will avoid difficulties which have forced other large film companies into receivership.

"The company's theatre division has been maintaining its profit margin fairly well, despite a $10,000,000 drop in revenue. This stability is due largely to the concentration of theatres in Greater New York, and to the fact that the majority of its theatres were purchased prior to the boom years 1927-1929. The company, however, is negotiating further reductions in rentals and theatre carrying charges.

"The decline in Loew's net profit last year of a little less than $4,000,000 is accounted for in large part by the decline in net of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, the producing subsidiary, to $2,965,975, from $6,257,998 in that year.

"Current business is somewhat better than during the first quarter, which ended November 24 last, but the dividend of $3 annually is not being earned."

Majestic Speeds Linking of World Sales System

Majestic Pictures, with 100 per cent distribution in the United States through 26 offices, with six in Canada, seven in Great Britain and one in Australia, expects to complete world distribution organization within 90 days, according to William D. Shapiro, vice-president in charge of the home office. Next year, he said, all the franchise-holders will operate under the Majestic name and will handle Majestic product exclusively.

Franchises have just been awarded to Stern Brothers, operating Capital Pictures Corporation, 1508 Davenport street, Omaha; to H. A. Mugridge, president of Celebrated Film Exchange, 709 Glenwood Avenue, Minneapolis; and to C. C. McDermond, Certified Productions, Inc., with offices in both Salt Lake City and Denver.

Monogram Plans 32, With Concentration on Dramas

Monogram plans 32 features for 1933-34, the same number as on the current schedule. More dramas and fewer westerns are in the plans for the new season, with the intention of producing more product suitable for "A" theatres. While 16 dramas and 16 westerns are on the current schedule, 24 dramas and eight westerns are proposed.

Trem Carr, heading production, will spend more than $1,000,000 on product. W. Ray Johnston, president, is considering several specials, depending on the reception accorded "Oliver Twist." The sales convention will be held in Miami or New Orleans about the middle of April.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

On election night Chester Edmonds, projectionist at the Fox Uptown, in Kansas City, and a stunch Republican, wired President Hoover at Palo Alto, as follows: "Please accept my sincere congratulations upon honorably getting out of a tough job. I hereby offer you the hospitality of my Big Bend Acres, in the Ozarks, where you can have a lot of fun fishing and hunting."

It apparently took the President quite a while to catch up on post-election messages, as Edmonds received a reply only a few days ago. On White House stationery, the acknowledgment read: "Dear Mr. Edmonds: The President received your telegram sent to Palo Alto and asks me to thank you for the friendly message which it conveyed and to assure you of his appreciation of your kind offer of hospitality at Big Bend Acres.—Sincerely, Lawrence Richey, Secretary to the President."

Big Bend Acres is not far enough from Washington. Mr. Hoover is going all the way to the coast.

"The Big Drive" and "The Four Aces," each supposed to be official war pictures, are available now for bookings. The United States Army Signal Corps participated in the making of both. Reporting events which transpired during filming on the front, the New York Sun said, "It was a dangerous job; ninety-six photographers were killed in the filming." A press release from First Division, which is releasing "The Big Drive," said only forty-five lost their lives in the filming of America's fighting in France. The two press agents should get together.

A. T. & T.'s Electrical Research Products last week assisted in a competition held on Long Island by the Tydol petroleum manufacturers. Fifteen automobiles using 15 different brands of gasoline were subjected to grueling tests to determine what gasoline and oil caused the least knocking. Erpi was on hand with sound trucks to record the knocks. Tydol won its own contest, which was not at all surprising. The company's officials said that Erpi's equipment functioned perfectly, and recorded no knocks for the Tydol car. Each organization was unstinted in its praise of the other. We cannot help wondering what would have happened if Erpi's competitor, RCA, had been in the gasoline business.

This little gem was selected from the press-book of Freuler Film's "Savage Girl," and is supposed to be a quotation by "Dazzling Beauty," Rochelle Hudson, star of the company's newest release:

". . . I realized that the part was doubly difficult because there was so much I had to 'say' by actually saying nothing! But Mr. Fraser, the director, was kindness itself. . . . Of course, my fellow players were very understanding and considerate—and being the only woman in the picture they realized I had a rather large order." Of ham?

Above the side entrance of a theatre in Fort Worth, Texas, an electric lamp with a carbon filament has burned continually for 24 years. Barry Burke, now a showman in Minneapolis, then an electrician in Fort Worth, hung the lamp in 1908 when the house opened. It's burning is closely watched by the natives, for there's a tradition that when the lamp flickers out, so will Barry Burke.

Directorial contributions of David Wark Griffith are now few and far between. "The Struggle" was his last. It was released quite some time back. Passing his headquarters in the Lefcourt Building on Broadway the other day, we were struck with this significant message, lettered neatly and prominently in gold, on his office door: "No casting today."

England may be off the gold standard and be unable to pay her debts, but her motion picture players still get plenty to eat, according to Francis X. Bushman, one-time star of Hollywood, who said that British actors "eat too much and drink tea too often." Usually their breakfast lasts until 10:30, he reported, after which they shoot a scene or two. "Then they knock off for luncheon, which takes two hours. More time is lost for four o'clock tea and dinner is served at six." Things are somewhat different in Hollywood. Players who have the money to eat don't have the time. And those who have the time don't have the money.

Since Buffalo insists on reminiscing about the time it knew Tom Mix "when," St. Louis old-timers recall Mix as a cow-puncher, fresh from Texas, who used to act as chaperone to loads of steers shipped in to the National stockyards at East St. Louis. Mr. Mix was quite proficient on the job.

Every year since then, down through almost two decades, Mr. Peterson ordered renewal. Last week, the mails brought from Iceland Mr. Peterson's 16th annual request for the HERALD.

Seven thousand and five hundred theatres in the United States and Canada use RKO product.

Terry Turner, publicity purveyor for RKO's theatres, made for himself, without the aid of a turban or crystal, a few predictions for 1933 . . . number one being . . . that firms will no longer resemble a family reunion—relatives who cannot stand the gaff will take a healthy swat on the chin . . . that theatre managing directors with those smart cut-away coats will be back on Macy's floor . . . that stage talent will be available without taking out a nice fresh mortgage to pay off each bill . . . and, last, but not least . . . capital will have figured we have enough theatres for awhile. Paramount, RKO Receivers Continue Receivership activities at Paramount and RKO were routine during the week. The receivers for both corporations and various subsidiaries continued their study of the corporate structures, ordering changes in operations and personnel. Considerable savings are expected.

Vice-chancellor Alfred Stein in Newark dismissed on Tuesday the receivership proceedings against RKO properties in New Jersey and discharged the temporary receivers. Counsel for Doris L. Charing, petitioner, asked for the dismissal.

At Wilmington, the court was awaiting the filing of schedule in the RKO Southern Corp. and RKO Western Corp. bankruptcies. At Dallas, Charles W. Koerner, acting as agent there for Herman Zohbel, RKO executive and trustee in bankruptcy, predicted swift liquidation for RKO Southern properties. This might be completed in 30 days, he is reported to have said.

Judge H. Arthur Stump, of circuit court at Baltimore, appointed Samuel J. Fisher and Morris A. Rome receivers under $10,000 bond for RKO properties in Maryland, Joseph H. Basker and Edward Goldman petitioners. RKO had denied insolvency in a hearing before Judge Stump.

Judge Charles Ryan at Fort Wayne, Ind., postponed for one week the appointment of a receiver for RKO's Orpheum theatre. The circuit reopened the Emboyd, Palace and Jefferson and agreed to deposit receipts in a joint account so a $27,000 judgment will be satisfied.

Stephen J. Balog and William Wells were appointed receivers for RKO's Toledo houses, the Rivoli and Palace. Fletcher American Bank, creditor, was petitioner.

Sarnoff Assures Fair Play

Debenture holders of RKO were assured of fair play in any reorganization or readjustment, by David Sarnoff, president of RCA, which owns $9,786,655 of RKO debentures. This is about 84 per cent of the total issue of $11,600,000. RCA also owns about 64 per cent of RKO's outstanding stock.

Mr. Sarnoff told debenture holders they will get the same treatment in respect of their debentures as RCA. "For the further protection of the holders of debentures," he said, "and in order that they may have unified independent representation, without expense, RCA, although not depositing its debentures, has agreed to cooperate with the (independent stockholders') committee of which George Armsby is chairman, to try to work out a reorganization fair to all interests, and has arranged that the committee will permit the withdrawal of deposited debentures and certificates without expense to the holders thereof if a plan of reorganization or readjustment is not adopted, or within thirty days after the promulgation of any such plan."

The committee to which Mr. Sarnoff referred includes, besides Mr. Armsby, chairman, Edward C. Delafield and Arthur Lehman. E. Carley, 44 Wall Street, is secretary, and Chadbourne, Hunt, Jaeckel and Brown are counsel. City Bank Farmers Trust is depositary.

Another new stockholders' protective committee includes Herbert Bayard Swope, Grayson M. P. Murphy, Paul Mazur, Maurice Goodman, Ferndinand Eberstadt and Robert C. Adams. W. F. Colclough, Jr. 48 Wall Street, is secretary, and Sullivan and Cromwell are counsel. Depositary is Commercial Bank and Trust.

The Paramount Situation

George W. Topliff, representing Irving Trust, bankruptcy trustee for the Publix circuit, continued a campaign to secure quick rental adjustments for the circuit's properties. The same activities are underway in connection with reorganization of circuit subsidiaries.

Glenn Griswold, in charge of financial publicity at Paramount; Carl Hammer, in charge of real estate and taxes, and Jack Hess, advertising director, resigned this week, effective immediately. George Walsh was placed in charge of Publix upstate houses.

The relation of the receivership situation to contracts of players and directors will be determined in a few days, following arrival in New York this week of Henry Herzbrun, studio attorney.

Receivers were asked at Tampa for local properties of Associated Amusements and Publix Enterprises, while attorneys Andrew Collins and Ralph Wells were named co-receivers for the Olympia circuit subsidiary at Boston. Saenger Theatres of Alabama filed a bankruptcy petition.

Federal Judge Guy L. Fake in Newark refused to appoint bankruptcy receivers for Paramount in New Jersey on the grounds that the corporation controlled only nominal assets in the state and no bankruptcy receivers had been appointed for the company in New York. William Harris was the petitioner, appearing for a bondholder.

Stockholders of Paramount were urged over the weekend to unite for mutual benefit and to seek a bill of particulars, by Daniel Blumenthal, counsel of an independent stockholders' committee. Mr. Blumenthal's statement said his group would seek to learn "just what has transpired" in the appointment of Adolph Zukor and Charles D. Hilles as co-receivers for the parent company.

At Columbus, Ohio, another hearing is to be held Saturday on the claim that Paramount Distributing Corp. is solvent, and that receivers appointed there by U. S. District Judge Benson Hough should be dismissed. Austin Keough, Paramount counsel, appeared before Judge Hough. In the meantime, William Bundy Bartels continues as ancillary receiver, but without power to act.

This is the only state in which a receiver has been appointed for Paramount Distributing.

Complete reorganization of the theatre field in Texas was certain when Judge William Atwell, of federal district court at Dallas, this week placed Southern Enterprises, Inc., in receivership and named Clarence Linz, Dallas insurance executive, as receiver. In the petition it was alleged that Southern Enterprises was indebted to Publix to the amount of $1,500,000 stock dividends. The petition set the total liabilities of Southern Enterprises at $3,720,489, and total assets at a slightly higher figure. The answer filed by Southern Enterprises admitted the facts set forth in the petition.

Attorneys for the defendant are Russell & Russell, and for the plaintiff, Thompson, Knight, Baker and Harris.

Hearing on the applications for ancillary receiverships for the North Texas properties of both Paramount-Publix Corp. and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp. is set before Judge Atwell for next Monday.

Michigan Houses Remaining Open

Five hundred theatres in Michigan remained open following the declaration this week of an eight-day bank holiday by Governor William A. Comstock.

Exhibitors throughout the state are said to have called mass meetings at once to decide upon a policy. A slogan of "Business as Usual" was carried out, but before the day was over business was not "as usual." Theatres were empty. People were keeping what cash they had on hand in order to buy daily necessities. The State Utility board declared a holiday on payment of gas, light and telephone bills. Some exhibitors were reported to be considering the issuance of coupon books, to be issued to and paid for by the public at the close of the eight day moratorium. This plan was believed to be practical as far as neighborhood houses are concerned, but downtown houses were doubtful about collecting on the coupons because of transient trade.

Many Detroit film exchanges reported placing all film deliveries on a cash basis. There is some talk that employees will be paid with "paper," redeemable when the banks return to routine business. At a meeting of distributors and circuit heads at the Hays office in New York, J. E. Flynn, MGM district manager, and Ed Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield circuit, were appointed to watch the situation.

Houses open in Michigan total 493, of which 157 are in Detroit. The largest individual group is the Butterfield circuit, with Paramount Publix and RKO strongly represented.

Kann Addresses Managers Of Stanley-Warner Group

Concentrations in production and exhibition, as exemplified by one-man studio rule and national circuits now decentralizing, are fast reaching their conclusion, Maurice "Red" Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, told 150 Stanley-Warner department heads, district managers, and theatre managers meeting in Philadelphia this week.

"In spite of mergers in distribution, quality product turned out in Hollywood will depend more than ever on theatre men in the 'front line trenches' to put it over," he said.

Among district managers attending were Jack Flynn, Harry Gantz, Lyle Trenchard, Bill Haynes, Everett Callow, Bill Israel, Jack Frere, Al Kaye and Lou Davidoff.

King Kong

(RKO Radio)

Spectacle

King Kong is certain to be one of the sensational pictures of the year. There has been nothing comparable with it since "The Lost World" and this far exceeds that classic in clever process photography and dramatic story interest. No more thrilling climax ever was filmed than that giant 50-foot ape atop the Empire State Building, with Fay Wray in his massive paw, as a squadron of Army airplanes shoot him down with machine guns.

The picture made a tremendous impression at the preview, with experts like Sid Grauman predicting it will be an outstanding box office attraction.

From a production standpoint it stands as one of the most unusual novelties in the history of pictures, combining as it does amazing camera tricks and animations with powerful dramatic story, which keeps the audience on the edges of their seats.

Exploitation possibilities seem unlimited.—MEEHAN, Hollywood.

From Hell to Heaven

(Paramount)

Drama

In this exciting drama, cleverly developed suspense is the sustaining motif. Action and story treatment are episodic. In a way the idea is similar to the construction of "If I Had a Million," yet the treatment is reminiscent of that displayed in "Grand Hotel." The locale is a little hotel in a town which is the site of a famous racetrack classic. The various principals have gathered there to bet on a race. That, not the race itself, is the underlying idea of the story. One has come to bet in order that he may recoup the funds he has stolen from his firm. Another to get the money that will pay for his wife's operation. Another, a girl, to find a "sucker." Another to find the woman who swindled him out of the swag for which he spent a couple of years in the "pen." A girl bets her life savings in order that her husband may get the money to buy an interest in the hotel. A Negro bets just for the love of betting and he bets on them all. Another is a radio news announcer, with a yen for composing songs. There's the bookmaker, the old loyal horse owner, his daughter, the crooked jockey who wants to go straight and the detective who in the end makes everything even.

About them—their actions, their schemes, their hopes—revolves all the drama, romance, tragedy, comedy and suspense that held the unabated interest of the preview audience. There is no real starring or leading part in the picture. Oakie is the radio announcer who provides the comedy relief. But there is just as much interest centered around Clarence Muse, the colored bellboy, Burt and his wife, Billings, Lynch, Ruby and Elsie, the Wells, Toledo, Lockwood and his daughter, or Winnie Lloyd, as there is about him or Carole Lombard.

Here's a picture, the type of "The Whip" and "Checkers," novelly constructed, but well put together, and though it is a series of individual character studies, it is coherent. You have the old-fashioned entertainment standbys—romance, drama, comedy, suspense, excitement, thrill, spectacles and action to sell. Here's down to the earth entertainment that is almost certain to hold the interest of either big city or small town audiences. There are names to feature and a title that suggests showmanship that will be as catchy as the picture. Given an alert advance campaign, stressing the novelty and excitement, you can look for it to do much better than average business.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Erle Kenton. Screen play by Percy Heath and Sidney Buchman. Based on a drama by Lawrence Hazard. Photographed by Henry Sharp. Release date, Feb. 24, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

Terror Trail

Western

Tom Mix comes to the talking screen once more, this time with Tony, Jr., able successor to the original Tony, in a western film cut to a pattern by no means new, with all the hard riding, the gun-popping, the majestic scenery, the villainy expected in a Mix western.

It is necessary to say, however, that Mix was histrionically far more acceptable as a silent player than he is as an exponent of the art of the talking screen. When he is busily about his job of riding down desperadoes, dodging bullets and offering his own in return, or roping escaping thieves and flying through the mountain passes on the wing-footed Tony, he is the old Tom, very nearly as spry, that we all knew and thrilled to once on a time. But when he attempts to instill fear, confidence or command by the sound and manner of his voice, he is not quite convincing.

However, where there is a market for the western Mr. Mix and his activity should be found entertaining by the oldsters who still cotton to the fictional romance of the once rough West. And, without question, the lads of the community will rise in their chairs and cheer the rescuing riders, then go home and dream of cowboys, horses like Tony, and the next western picture.

The individual exhibitor, without suggestion or recommendation, will know whether he can successfully use a western film, when he can play it to greatest advantage and how long its run should be. "Terror Trail" makes an imposing, active western title, while the fact that the star is Tom Mix of long standing reputation and equally lengthy popularity in the past, should be a highly valuable selling line in advertising a western feature. It would be well, perhaps, not to indicate in any way that this is more than a western of ordinary type, featuring the gang of horse thieves who are rounded up by Mix, thereby saving the boy who is entangled with them, winning the boy's sister, revealing the head of the local vigilante committee as the ringleader, all in expected fashion. Sell it for what it is, an active, scenically effective western, with an occasional punch.—AARONSON, New York.

Secrets

(United Artists)

Romantic Drama

Obviously the most compelling showmanship feature in "Secrets" is Mary Pickford. That name, synonymous with the history of motion pictures, generally interpreted by the theatregoing public as standing for meritorious screen entertainment, is, in itself, sufficient reason to stimulate more than usual interest in this production.

It is a romantic drama that basically aspires to deep human interest with a trend that will create sympathy for the heroine. Told by means of transitions, it covers a period of 50 years. Beginning in a little New England seaport town, Mary Marlowe is fascinated to discover romance in John Carlton. Whippersnapper in her father's eyes, but her love ideal, Mary elopes with him rather than marry the English aristocrat whom her father has selected for her. Transitions. A covered wagon trek. Pioneers in the new west. A baby. The menace of cattle thieves. A lynching party. The gang assembled to wreak terrible revenge on Carl-ton. The besieged cabin. The baby dies. Pathos and drama. The ranchers drive off the raiders. Years pass. Carlton a candidate for governor. Scandal threatens. He has been a philanderer. His children know it. So does his wife. Dramatically rebuffing the other woman, Senora Martinez, Mary makes it possible for John to go on to political fame. The time is the present. Carlton is retiring from the U. S. Senate after decades of public service. The now grown family beseech their parents to remain in Washington in the height of social glamour and prestige. They prefer to live with each other alone—to have their "secrets," to pick up the covered wagon trek again, this time in a radio equipped roadster.

Preview audience reactions indicated that "Secrets" as story will hold comparatively little interest for the gallery gang. The depth of its theme suggests that it will make its greatest impression with those patrons who look upon their screen entertainment as something more than amusement.

The series of year-covering shows—"Forbidden," "Back Street," "Smilin' Through"—apparently had satiated them with that type of romance. Still the story permits opportunity to introduce into your introductory campaign the ideas of heart-interesting romance, lump in the throat drama, sympathy creation, charm of faithfulness, trust and belief as well as tear-provoking appeal.

But as indicated in the opening paragraph, a campaign that capitalizes the glamour and prestige of Mary Pickford, supplemented by the appeal of Leslie Howard, looks to be the strongest audience exciting angle. A strong play for better-than-usual feminine patronage is decidedly in line inasmuch as "Secrets" probably will have a stronger appeal to women than to men.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hallelujah, I'm a Bum

(United Artists)

Comedy Drama with Music

The future of "rhythmic dialogue" must of course remain to a certain extent uncertain, but true it is that this innovation in rendition, as offered by the somewhat nasal but rather appealing Al Jolson does contrive to be quite effective.

"Rythmic dialogue," as developed by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, song writers, is not new, strictly speaking, but its extensive use, in the rendition of approximately 80 per cent of the dialogue, is necessarily in the nature of an experiment. If it be true, as reports would seem to indicate, that the motion picture audience, by and large, is eagerly awaiting the re-advent of the musical type of film, this Jolson picture is certainly worth a trial, and should be found lively, amusing, tuneful and above all, entertaining, in other words, a worthy financial venture on the part of the exhibitor.

One cardinal point is definitely to be established. The musical method does not tend to slow the movement of the film's plot structure. Rather it is true that the musical basis is part and parcel of the plot itself, becoming, through the vocal activity of Jolson, almost the motivating force of the picture, indicating in an atmospheric manner the lightheartedness of the hobo, under the sky, basking in the sun, eating when he gets it and caring little about anything.

The story is definitely inconsequential, despite the authorship, for Ben Hecht is rather noted for other than this type of story. As the "Mayor of Central Park," New York, Jolson is the leader of the hobos, glorying in his post, his friendship with Acorn, amusing gentleman of color, and Egghead, park paper-scavenger, played with a delightful comedy touch by Harry Langdon.

Jolson, pal of the mayor of New York, is able to do him several favors, but the greatest is a wrench for the hobo mayor. Jolson pulls Madge Evans out of the lake, an amnesia victim, cares for her, means to marry her, goes to the extreme of getting a job. Finding that she is the mayor's sweetheart, he arranges a reunion, fades back into his park, his mayoralty and his shabby hobo regalia, singing once more, happy again. The supporting cast is excellent, notably the mayor of Frank Morgan.

Offer this as something new, and different. Remember Jolson's contribution in the first talking picture in 1926, but do not make the mistake of indicating similarity in the roles. Stress the musical innovation, make an event of the "rhythmic dialogue," and curiosity, if nothing eles, should bring them in. Jolson's air popularity should also be a factor. There need be no fear of audience disappointment. They should be well entertained.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Based on a story by Ben Hecht. Screen play by S. N. Behrman. Music by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart. Musical score by Alfred Newman. Photography by Lucien Andriot. Sound technician, Oscar Lagerstrom. Art director, Richard Day. Release date, February 3, 1933. Running time, 82 minutes.

Ex Lady

(Warner Bros.)

Romantic Drama

The ultramodern, convention-defying idea of life, love and marriage is given a demonstration in "Ex Lady." It's the story of the artistic and bohemian-minded Helen, with whom Don is very much in love. Both want each other very much, but Helen is inclined to view the institution of marriage as something moss-covered and decidedly not in trend with the times. Don is all for following established custom, and after sequences with long, passionate kisses every few feet, they finally are married. But the arrangement doesn't last long. Returning from a Havana honeymoon, Don finds his advertising business shot and is inclined to blame Helen for the state of affairs. There's the inevitable quarrel, with Don walking out, and later, when Helen sees her legal spouse getting chummy with both Iris and Peggy, they decide to try the companionate marriage idea. A lot more hot stuff, then, although Helen enjoys the company of Nick, she becomes fanatically jealous of Don for his affairs with Peggy. The upshot is they both decide that the old-fashioned idea of husband and wife is the best idea and they settle down to domestic bliss.

"Ex Lady" will appeal to the flapper-modern-youth element. Because of the "flaming youth" atmosphere, business creating exploitation should emphasize the modern idea of romance. As it defies convention, startling ad copy should intrigue the interest of the older adolescents. That angle undoubtedly will pique their curiosity. If your audiences are composed mainly of older adults, bill "Ex Wife" as a startling exposé of a modern idea. If you can manage to whip up a controversy, stirring your patrons into an excited discussion of whether this new idea has a place in life, you may be able to do more business with it than from ordinary methods of picture selling.

Besides the situation the cast offers five names that can be played with. Bette Davis and Gene Raymond are the two lovers. Monroe Owsley is "the other man." Claire Dodd and Kay Strozzi are the "other women" and Frank McHugh is the comedy relief who never can quite understand what it's all about.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Screen play by David Boehm. Based on a story by Edith Fitzgerald and Robert Riskin. Directed by Robert Florey. Film editor, Harold McLennon. Photography by Tony Gaudio. Art director, Jack Okey. Dialogue director, Stanley Logan. Gowns by Orry Kelly. Release date, April 8, 1933. Running time, 62 minutes.

Be Mine Tonight

Gaumont-British Musical Comedy

When the rolling title of this picture flashed on the screen indicating it was a foreign-made production and with a cast none of which, apparently was even remotely familiar, the preview audience moved restlessly. Trick opening scenes, featuring widely scattered radio sets, with gag treatments of listeners-in reacting to the golden voice singing an operatic aria which emitted from them, first piqued curiosity. Sequences showing the high pressure feminine business manager carrying on Ferraro's business affairs in brazen fashion brought some laughs. Ferraro's experiences with his manager brought more, and evidences of growing audience interest were noted. His escape from that bedevilling manager and his aboard-train meeting with the glib Koretsky consolidated the interest. Then the audience seemed suddenly to realize that it was in for some clever, catchy entertainment. Comedy to this point, there never was even a vague clue to the grand musical and romantic treat to follow.

Still a comedy, "Be Mine Tonight" became a musical romance in which fine music was the predominant highlight with a love story based on the old mistaken identity idea that featured a lilting theme song (same title as the picture), a number of arias from operas as well as a group of folk and children's songs that each had the audience in salvos of applause, and this not only in tribute to Ferraro's voice and technique, but also in appreciation of the manner in which the numbers had been worked into the action and the dialogue, making its comedy funnier and its romance sweeter.

Yet probably the best indication of the audience's reaction can be seen in the fact that when the show broke, the writer stood with the manager of the preview theatre, one of Los Angeles' premier deluxe neighborhood houses, and within five minutes heard 26 persons congratulate him.

Here's what you have: sparkling comedy, contributed in four different ways by four characters, Koretsky, Pategg, his wife and the manageress; charming romance, provided by Ferraro and Mathilde; great photography that not only takes advantage of the most advanced European technique but also beautifully pictures the scenery of the Swiss-Italian mountain-lake regions; and music, vocal and instrumental. All these are masterfully welded into compact coherence by expert direction.

Fine as "Be Mine Tonight" is its American release may possibly meet an obstacle in the fact that it is of foreign make, and of course there's the absence of known cast names. Finally the unsatisfactory experiments of a few years ago in the field of musicals may mean that the mere billing it as a musical would have a negative effect. Certainly there should be some telling showmanship publicity in advance of release.

In theatre, real showmanship and salesmanship will be necessary, though you will have a real show to sell. Something along the line of art and music being universal and transcending all patriotic allegiance might be a help. It might not be a bad idea to offer the first showing free, to the influence-creating element but also the hoi polloi. You can depend upon them to do some favorable talking.

Judging solely by the reception given it by the preview audience, it is strongly possible that American producers, taking their cue from that enthusiasm, will embark upon the production of real musicals, not shows that feature specialty music, but following the idea incorporated in this picture, where melody and rhythm will add to the color and effectiveness of the dialogue and action.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Sister to Judas

(Mayfair)

Drama

Maintaining a reasonably high level of performance, "Sister to Judas" is nevertheless weakened to a certain extent by the absence of situations which would lighten the burden of the rather unremitting drama. The element of comedy, of any sort, is somewhat conspicuous by its absence.

The film is more readily adaptable for exhibition in the smaller houses in the lesser communities. The cast is fairly capable, headed by Claire Windsor, for some time absent from the screen; John Harron and Holmes Herbert. The others, though satisfactory, probably will be unknown to the regular run of patronage.

The story, handled competently but without distinction, concerns the young girl, Miss Windsor, whose slattern mother and two crooked brothers cause her to lose her promising position with a book publisher, Herbert. She is saved from suicide by Harron, aspiring to authorship, and the two are married. Harron falls under the baleful influence of the brothers and is drawn into their criminal activities. To save him from himself, Miss Windsor gives him up to the police, thereby earning the right to the picture's title. Meanwhile her friendship with Herbert has reached the point where, hearing nothing from her husband, who refuses to see her, and learning that he has been out of jail for two months without having communicated with her, she consents to get a divorce, to be wed to Herbert. The conclusion finds the altruistic Herbert the means of bringing together the divorced couple. Harron meanwhile has completed a highly successful new book.

This is to be rated in the category of average screen material with a decided tendency in the direction of heavy drama, unrelieved. Sell the sister-to-Judas idea, promise drama and capable performance, stress the appearance of Claire Windsor. There is nothing in the picture for juvenile appreciation.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Mayfair. Supervised by Cliff Broughton. Directed by E. Mason Hopper. Story by Watkins E. Wright. Adaptation and dialogue by John Thomas Neville. Cameraman, Jules Cronjager. Edited by Byron Robinson. Recorded by Earl Crain. Release date, January 1, 1933. Running time, 75 minutes.

Clear All Wires

(MGM)

Drama

The title smacks of thrills and excitement. The cast is headed by an actor who has gained considerable prestige as a crowd pleaser during the past year or so. And those are are the best showmanship features of "Clear All wires."

The story is about the ace foreign correspondent, Thomas, of a big Chicago daily newspaper. It concerns itself with the ingenious methods to which the correspondent resorts to concoct big news stories which will feature his own name in the headlines. Locales are the Riff country in Africa, where Thomas frames with one of the shieks to kidnap him, and further with his assistant, Lefty, to stand the world on its ear by sending out dispatches announcing his disappearance. The innocent, victimized shiek is amazed when the Foreign Legion shoots up his camp and rescues Thomas.

Best showmanship exploitation is trick handling of the title and giving prominence to Tracy's name. Let patrons know that it's a story of a newspaper correspondent, not a newspaper story. Get over the idea that it's an exciting description of a glib guy who stops at nothing to get his own name in the headlines. Other cast names that may be worth while plugging are Una Merkel and Jimmy Gleason, as well as Benita Hume, MGM's latest European importation. The picture is family type entertainment. Efforts should be made to attain a maximum attendance at the early showings.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Golden-Mayer. Directed by George Hill. From a stage play by Bella and Samuel Spewack. Adaptation and dialogue by Bella and Samuel Spewack. Continuity by Delmer Daves. Photographed by Percy Hilburn. Release date, Feb. 18, 1933. Running time to be determined.

She Done Him Wrong

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

Mae West, heretofore the stage's chief exponent of the dramatization of sex machinations, comes to the screen in her first starring vehicle, a picturization of none other than the "Diamond Lil" of recent stage memory. That Miss West is here highly effective cannot be doubted, but of the adaptability of her vehicle, her material for the common denominator of the motion picture public, there is considerable doubt.

"Diamond Lil," of the boisterous "Nineties," leaves very little undone, very little unsaid to make clear her unmistakable meaning in innumerable dialogue instances, bits of stage business. Miss West, as the mistress (at the moment) of Noah Beery, noisy and crude saloon proprietor, is festooned with enough "rocks," often known as diamonds, to stock a store. Lady Lou, as she is known, is the toast of the saloon's crowds, from the gutter rat to the socialite.

The picture has been extremely well mounted, the atmosphere of the period and the surroundings appearing definitely authentic, and, in common with reproductions of that period, always appealing. The elder adults will be mightily drawn toward that atmosphere, at least those who are not too straight-laced.

The matter of laces becomes a most important part of the exhibitor's selling problem as far as this picture is concerned. The film is lively, contrives to be amusing, has an element of melodrama, but is rather several degrees south of the lower limit of propriety. Miss West sings several numbers which cannot be conscientiously recommended to any common or garden variety of choral society. The individual exhibitor will have to decide for himself whether he can afford to run the film, realizing that it is hard-boiled, spares the feelings of no Ladies' Aid Society.

Playing it, the exhibitor must necessarily indicate what it is, and he has the selling angles of Miss West in a well known role, and the personal attractiveness of Cary Grant. No children, of course.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Lowell Sherman. Screen play by Harvey Thew and John Bright. Cameraman, Charles Lang. Release date, January 27, 1933. Running time 66 minutes.

Der Hauptmann Von Koepenick

The Captain of Koepenick

(American-Rumanian Film)

Comedy Drama

There is more than a touch of brilliance in this satirical production, based on the stage play of the same name by Carl Zuckmayer, which attained some little fame on the stage and screen of Europe. Set in the drastically militaristic period of Germany's pre-War era, it cleverly satirizes the manner in which the German kowtowed to the military.

The film's story is based on a true incident, that of the ex-convict cobbler who, in 1906, unable to get work without a passport and unable to get a passport without work, finds a captain's uniform in a pawnshop, impresses a squad of troops into service and descends in all the might of his uniform upon the town of Koepenick. Taking complete possession of the city hall, he arrests the mayor and city financial officer, sends them off to Berlin under guard, confiscates the sum total of the city treasury and quietly shifts back into his dilapidated civilian clothes. A pardon follows.

Too much credit cannot be given to Max Adalbert, who plays the role of the "Captain of Koepnick" with fine distinction throughout.

The film employs the superimposed subtitle translations of the German dialogue into English, thereby making for a ready understanding on the part of the individual lacking a knowledge of German. For the patron understanding the language, there is an even greater opportunity to appreciate the numerous highly amusing sequences, due again to the work of Adalbert. There is real enjoyment in the pictures for both classes of audience, for the one the surface comedy, for the other the deeper satire of the photoplay.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by the American Rumanian Film Corporation. Directed by Richard Oswald. Adapted by Carl Zuckmayer from the stage production of his play. Photographed by Ewald Daub. Release date, January 16, 1933. Running time, 93 minutes.

Idaho Owners Sponsor Ads Urging Federal Regulation

Sharp attacks on what is described as the "motion picture trust" have recently been launched in the Boise Statesman, Boise, Idaho, newspaper, the space purchased by the Independent Theatre Owners of Idaho. Advertisements of the same character, it is understood, will appear at regular intervals in the newspapers of Washington, D C.

Warner Opening Barcelona Office, Continuing Expansion

Warner has opened a new foreign exchange in Barcelona, Spain, following the opening of exchanges in Panama, India and Straits Settlements recently, and indicating an expansion of activities abroad.

It is planned to open additional offices in other cities in Spain, with the territory under the supervision of Robert Schless, managing director for Warner-First National in France, Belgium, Switzerland and Algeria. Mr. Schless has named Rene Huet, former company manager at Lille, in charge of the Spanish activities with headquarters at Barcelona.

Sullivan Leaves Radio

Charles Sullivan has resigned as studio manager for Radio. No successor has as yet been named.

Group to Test Film Equipment

The American Society of Cinematographers plan the testing of various types of technical equipment, materials and methods in the motion picture industry, in both the professional and amateur fields and including still and motion picture equipment. According to John Arnold, president of the organization, the society will hereafter conduct its tests on a wider scale, where before the tests were only for members.

The information resulting from the tests will be published in The American Cinematographer, the society's publication. It is planned to note the approval of the equipment or material in the magazine, permitting the manufacturer to designate in his advertising, as well as on the piece of equipment itself, that it has been approved by the society. The tests will be conducted according to the claims made by the manufacturer and in compliance with specifications laid down by the society for the particular type of equipment.

Dillon Joins New Krimsky And Cochrane Company

John Krimsky and Gifford Cochrane announced this week the formation of a new production and distributing company which will make as its first release Eugene O'Neil's "The Emperor Jones." Dudley Murphy will direct and production will be in the east.

George Dillon, who has been associated for many years with large distributors, joined the company in an executive sales capacity.

Krimsky and Cochrane, owners of American rights to "Maedchen in Uniform," were unable to get a Broadway booking and sponsored a run independently at the Criterion and Cameo. RKO this week bought it for the circuit. Invincible Pictures will handle New York distribution.

Sherman Succeeds Kaplan; Union Wins Picketing Case

Harry Sherman was elected last week president of Local 306, New York projectionists' union, succeeding Sam Kaplan, recently removed. Also elected were Charles S. Phide, vice-president; George Reeves, recording secretary; Charles Beckman, financial secretary.

The local won a long legal battle this week when the United States supreme court refused to hear an appeal for a reversal of a decision of the New York court of appeals, thereby sustaining the right of the local to picket theatres employing members of the Empire State union.

Note: Frequent inquiries lead me to say again that any one, projectionist or what not, is eligible to join this "school." There is no age limit. No entrance or other fee is necessary. It is not required that you be a subscriber to the MOTION PICTURE HERALD or that you own a Bluebook, though it is much better for you if you do have both the HERALD and the books. Just send in your answers, regularly if possible. That is all.

As to section A, we will listen to G. E. Doe, who says: "The question may be answered correctly by a simple 'yes,' but I believe something more should be added. What we term 'pure' metals of various sorts offer a certain definite resistance to current flow, each metal offering resistance in different amount. Pure metals may, however, be mixed with other metals offering different resistance, and thus alloys be formed which will offer almost any desired degree of resistance."

As to section B, there are many excellent answers, but I have selected for publication the one sent in by a young man out in Kansas, who has written asking whether his youth would be a bar. In part he says: "I am not a projectionist—yet. However, I certainly look forward to the time when I will have earned that title. Am still in school—8th grade. I do the dusting at the theatre after school hours. The projectionist, Dale Danielson (also a Bluebook "scholar."—Ed.), has been awfully nice in permitting me to copy the questions you ask each week; also in the matter of explaining knotty points which are beyond me. I certainly do appreciate his kindness."

Read this youngster's answer and judge for yourself whether he should have all reasonable help. His name is Wilbur Ostrum, of Russell, Kansas. He says—and I print his answer to section B without change: "(B).—Does the resistance of all metals used in conducting current increase as temperature is increased?

"Answer—Yes, the resistance of all metals used in conducting current increases as temperature is increased. However, advance wire, a copper-nickel alloy, is affirmed to have practically unvarying resistance at all times. Since the increase or decrease of resistance of metals is proportional to increase or decrease of temperature, the data required to find the increase or decrease of resistance will be the mil foot resistance of the conductor at normal temperature (the resistance of a wire one foot long and one mil in diameter), the temperature co-efficient of the conductor (the fraction of an ohm change in resistance for each degree of change in temperature), the working temperature of the conductor and the normal temperature which is, of course, 75 degrees Fahrenheit or 24 degrees Centigrade. When these data have been collected the procedure is as follows: Subtract the normal temperature of the conductor from the working temperature and multiply this difference by the temperature co-efficient which will give the total fractional increase or decrease for the total increase in temperature. This result, when multiplied by the resistance of the conductor at normal temperature, will give the total increase or decrease in resistance. If the conductor be of a material whose resistance decreases with increase in temperature, such as carbon, this result will be subtracted from the resistance at normal temperature to get the resistance of the conductor at its working temperature. If the conductor be of a material whose resistance increases with increase in temperature, such as metal, this result will be added to the resistance at normal temperature to get the resistance of the conductor at its working temperature. Before the normal temperature of an elecctrical conductor is reached the increase in temperature with the increase in current is so very slight it has practically no effect."

(C) Messrs. Evans and Rau answer this one briefly and well, as follows: "Carbon, which is used in arc lamps, for generator brushes, lamp filaments, for dry cells and in circuit breakers, switch contacts, etc., has less resistance at high than at low temperature."

T. Buckstone and P. L. Davis answer section D as follows: "Insulating materials of certain types, almost all liquids and certain solids offer less resistance to current flow when hot than when cold, though in the case of solids they must be fused before the effect is marked. Glass, wax, pitch and many other substances which may be fused are included."

DEAR HERALD:

In a recent issue of the HERALD we note that Gerald Stettmund of Candler, Oklahoma, has the temerity to break into the columns with a poetic effusion and requests that he be designated as the HERALD's official poet laureate. He attempts to butt into the sacred precincts of our poetic pasture. In commenting on this the editor suggests that we surrender our rights. Surrender? Never. "The Old Guard Dies; It Never Surrenders." If Gerald will confine his poetic endeavors strictly to "What the Picture Did For Me" we might consent to take him in on probation, for, as a man he's a swell fellow, as an exhibitor he's ace high, and as an Oklahoma Democrat he's 100 per cent, but as a poet, well—

When Gerald starts to writing verse
It makes us want to climb a tree;
There may be things he could do worse
But we don't know what they could be.
When we read his verse it made us smile
For he's got Longfellow beat a mile.

Someone has said that "Poetry hath charms to soothe a savage, to rend a rock or bust a cabbage," but we've got our doubts about that.

We had a girl one time, and no matter how much peanut brittle and gum drops we fed her we couldn't seem to thaw her out, she wouldn't warm up to us, so we concluded to try a little poetry on her, and wrote:

My heart for you, my dear, beats true,
Your eyes are red, your hair is, too.
And now if you'll hitch up with me
It won't be long till there'll be three.

We read this to her one moonlight night as we leaned up against a hitching-post in front of her house and she never stopped chewing her gum. It didn't faze her, and the very next week she married a Swede.

Someone down in Congress suggests that when beer comes back it be dispensed by the drug stores. To this the druggists' organization puts up a squawk and says that the drug stores must not occupy the position of the old saloon. We might rise to inquire just when did they cease to occupy that position? Their prescription cases have been performing the same service that the old blind swinging doors once did.

When that amber gloom chaser and "budget balancer" comes back, and since Congress will have made it legal, why not let anybody sell it? If it isn't legalized then why permit the sale of it at all? If it comes back they could give the Christian Endeavor and the W. C. T. U. employment soliciting for the home trade. We would as soon buy ours from the deacon of the church as from a drug store. We believe in being honest about it and say that we want beer because we want beer, and not use that idiotic excuse that it will bring prosperity, for it won't. It will act directly contrary to that theory.

The Hollywood Herald, a very worthwhile publication, reports Pola as saying: "I've been a big success at every movie theatre I've played during the last year and eight months. I've pulled theatres out of the red everywhere I've gone. I'm tired, but I'm cocky about it." If Pola said that, she must have a poor opinion of herself, but, Pola dear, we have a hunch that that came from your press agent.

We have just found out what "Technocracy" is. It is the hydroputical inconsequential circumambulocution of the thermistatical parallelogram, and it was first discovered by Dr. Rollinzomoski Sepigelgotoski of Russia and the only known remedy for it is ipecac.

According to the number of steamship tickets for Europe the producers and stars are reported to be buying, it would seem that the exhibitors are the only ones who are feeling this depression. Did you ever hear of an exhibitor going to Europe? Some of 'em don't even know where Europe is. For instance, there's Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes, Minnesota—but then we won't talk about that.

An applicant for a druggist's license was turned down recently by a California pharmaceutical board because he couldn't tell how much cabbage leaves it took to make a lettuce sandwich.

Our doctor tells us that we must stay in bed. He says that the place for people threatened with bronchial pneumonia is in bed and not sitting at a typewriter. We wonder if that doctor knows what he's talking about.

We have been in bed so long that every bone in us feels like a truck had run over us lengthwise. But while in bed we've had time to think about a lot of things. We've got it all figured out that one of the principal reasons for the slump in theatre attendance is the radio.

When Jack Pearl (Baron Munchausen) is on the radio who is going to see a movie? The same is true of Walter Winchell, Eddie Cantor, Amos 'n' Andy, Ed Wynn, Carl and Heinie, the Show Boat with Captain Henry, and a number of others. The picture business has got this radio entertainment to contend with, and the only way to backfire against it and get at it is to make entertainment that will draw the people away from the radio, and that's going to call for all the brains there are in the business.

Maybe the Doc is right. Maybe we ought to be in bed, but can you imagine what a calamity it would be should we miss an issue with this colyum? It's too horrible to think of, Oscar! We simply must get this in the mail, Doctor or no Doc. And now if you will excuse us we will go back to bed and let that truck run over us again.

HEY, JAY SEE! LIST TO McDOWELL

Now look what you've gone and not done, Jenkins. Not only that, but C. S. McDowell of Buffalo, Oklahoma, warns you that a jack rabbit pie in his country is a jack rabbit feast. Listen!

"That old cuss, Jay See, seems to have a single-track mind or the steering gear on his tin lizzie, Polly-Marie, must be locked, as in our five years of show business here his scrawny old form has never darkened our door yet. There are several exhibitors in this neck of the woods who would no doubt be pleased to honor him with a jack rabbit banquet and appease his hunger for his favorite Nebraska viand, and the jack rabbits here are twice as big as they are in Nebraska. If Jay See was boss of the industry he might be a big benefit to the small exhibitor, as we believe his heart is in the right place. May his April Showers never cease."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Capital

RASPUTIN: Nicolai Malikoff—This picture will please and believe it will outgross Metro's "Rasputin and the Empress." It's a money getter. It's done in English and you'll find it will please most of them, if they know what it's all about. Put out lots of heralds and you will do a nice business. Write International Film Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn. Lobe Arcade Building. Running time, 68 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

Columbia

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Nils Asther, Barbara Stanwyck—An excellent show. Beautifully photographed. Story appeals to public and has advertising possibilities.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DECEPTION: Leo Carrillo—Good action picture but did not draw for me. Only well known stars and good titles get people out any more. Played Jan. 26-27.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

THE NIGHT CLUB LADY: This is a good action picture and should knock 'em on Saturday.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THE NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—Tracy . . . enough said. Did a fairly good business. Tracy is the mayor in this and what a mayor. Date it on any date and go on a fishing trip; Tracy will take good care of your business. Played Jan. 12-13. Running time, 68 minutes.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

NO MORE ORCHIDS: Carole Lombard—A lovely picture which could be played on any day in any theatre. We had lots of compliments on it. The story is interesting and the comedy touches give it a sparkle all the way through. Played Jan. 29-30.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SPEED DEMON: William Collier, Jr., Joan Marsh—A great action picture for Saturday night. Speedboat racing that pulls them out of their seas.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THE SUNDOWN RIDER: Buck Jones, Barbara Weeks—A knockout western. A good audience picture.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan—The best of this type, and shows originality of theme, in that it covers the life of a pigskin star, after his glory days are over. A fine cast and a picture that will not require playing during the "season" as most football features do. Columbia is delivering this year for us.—Charles Lee, Lyric Theatre, Eureka, S. D. Small town patronage.

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND: Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings—Very fine picture which pleased the better class patrons. I did some extra advertising on it, but I am getting out all the publicity ideas I have these days for you not only have to run the best but get behind them. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—It takes a picture like this to get the business here, and every one liked it. Had lots of compliments. Business better than usual. Played Jan. 16-17.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Mixed patronage.

CENTRAL PARK: Joan Blondell—This a peach. It has everything. It will please most of the people.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

THE CRASH: Ruth Chatterton—Just a program picture that did not get any business here to amount to anything. Played Jan. 26-27.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Small town patronage.

FRISCO JENNY: Ruth Chatterton—This gal has always registered out here. This picture draws like a house afire and Ruth is a beauty to behold. Play this picture.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Oklahoma.

SILVER DOLLAR: Edward G. Robinson—This is one fine piece of entertainment. Wonderful picture that all liked here. Although we did not have very big business it is not because the picture did not deserve it. Should do big business any day. Played Feb. 1-2.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Mixed patronage.

IN this, the exhibitor's own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Made a dandy picture for Friday and Saturday. Well acted and pleased our organization. Played Jan. 25-26.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy, Bette Davis—It takes First National to make a good picture. I have spoken to quite a few exhibitors that run First National pictures and they say that they know how to make pictures and good ones. This picture has a lot of laughs. Should do good every place it plays. Played Feb. 6. Running time, 75 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—A good comedy. Brown is well liked here. A little draggy, especially in the swimming scenes. Played Feb. 5-6.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

WEEK END MARRIAGE: Loretta Young, Norman Foster—A good picture. Pleased all my patrons and increased business second night. Many of our program pictures draw better than the big specials. Played Jan. 18-19.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Drew the best business of the pictures so far this season. The picture pleased the young folks.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Good; pleased all my patrons. Did nice business. Played Jan. 25-26. Running time, 84 minutes.—William F. Kneller, Auditorium Theatre, Manheim, Pa. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow, Monroe Owsley—This is a mighty good entertaining picture. Story good and star fine. Cast good. Played Jan. 29-30.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi—Good entertaining to fair business. Played Jan. 20-21.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi—Drew better than average business and pleased, but it is a shame to put Lowe in such stories. A good actor like Edmund Lowe deserves better material. Personally did not think much of the picture. Played Jan. 20-31.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: Produced by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Terrible. No one liked this and they did not fail to tell it. If the scenes of the savages had been left out, would have been a fair jungle picture. Played Jan. 12-13-14.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: Produced by Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—Drew well and will please if you haven't used too many of these African pictures. Played Jan. 13-14.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers. Irene Rich.—A good Rogers picture. Many good comments and pleased majority. Business only fair, however. Played Jan. 23-24-25.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

FACE IN THE SKY: Spencer Tracy, Marian Nixon—Just a picture, not bad, but not good. Play it on bargain night and they won't kick—much. Played Jan. 26.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien, Janet Chandler—A good western produced on a big scale. Shots of "The Iron Horse" and "The Big Trail" helped and no one seemed to remember them, but westerns have lost their draw here. This one breaks a new low for Saturday. Played Jan. 26-27-28.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien—A mighty fine Zane Grey. Pleased those who saw it. Played Jan. 19-21. Running time, 74 minutes.—Boom & Du Rand, Lyric Theatre, Ellendale, N. D. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, Boots Mallory—An excellent small town picture that pleased above average production and was helped second night by word-of-mouth advertising. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 75 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—A very sweet little picture with Sally and Ben Lyon doing splendid work. Very pleasing to our Sunday patrons. Played Jan. 22-23.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—A dandy picture for the small town. Has the pep and comedy. It pleased.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett—My patrons thoroughly enjoyed this one, and told me so. Not a "big" picture, not a "masterpiece," not a "knockout," not an "epic," not one of the "ten best," not a picture that "you'll never forget," or anything like that, but a picture with an evening's entertainment, and that is what they pay for. It's okay.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—A swell team and a swell picture. Real "ham and egg" entertainment, and our customers ate it up. The box office can stand a few more like. Fox has a good team here, if they will just keep them together. Played Jan. 20-21.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

THE PAINTED WOMAN: Spencer Tracy, Peggy Shannon—This picture pleased and was a good draw. Spencer Tracy and Peggy Shannon both good. Played Oct. 20-21-22. Running time, 72 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglen, Greta Nissen—Ran this on bargain night and the audience was pleased. Nothing big, however, and consider it only a fair comedy picture. Played Jan. 9-10-11.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

ROBBERS ROOST: George O'Brien, Maureen O'Sullivan—A Fox western picture and if you crave a ride 'em cowboy and shake 'em up western thriller, book "Robbers Roost," and you have a western picture as big as they make 'em. But at my theatre they won't come to see any more western pictures. They are bygone days at my theatre. They tell me when they have seen one they have seen them all. For they most all have the same story.—Walter Odom Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Here's a surprise picture. Boost it and get the money. It will not disappoint. Miss Eilers is marvelous. Bellamy good as usual. Played Jan. 26-27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Very pleasing little picture. Book has been read extensively and will pull at box office. Played Jan. 22-23.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—Splendid picture of its kind. It drew fairly well and pleased. Played Jan. 19-20.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook—If you like detective stories, this one will please you. Has some excellent actors and a very good story. We ran it on our cheap admission night and it pleased, but drew very poorly. 25% below the average for this night. Played Jan. 27. Running time, 70 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—One of the most pleasing pictures Rogers ever made, but it seems that Rogers fans are becoming fed up on his style. There has been a steady drop in business on each of his last three pictures, with this the best of the three, doing 35% below the average business he did on the first of the three. But when you play this one you have a real show and a clean one that the whole family can come to see and all sit together. Played Jan. 22-23. Running time, 77 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Good. Did more than average business but not too much. Role suits Rogers and he can handle it. Quite a number of laughs and the Rogers fans will like it. Played Jan. 18-19.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Drew well and pleased. I wish that we could get more like this instead of so many gruesome pictures. Played Jan. 24-25.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Mascot

PRIDE OF THE LEGION: Sally Blaine, Barbara Kent—The title hurt the business. Most people thought it was a war picture. It is full of action and is O. K. The poorest business on Saturday for months.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MGM

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Montgomery—Just a fair picture. Very poor stuff for the small town. The acting is good. It did not draw film rental.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Montgomery—Very good picture that failed to draw. Bankhead has a better role than she has had heretofore. Montgomery good. This picture pleased the few that came in spite of adverse criticisms. Running time, 75 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Boys, book Beery in "Flesh." The public knows he is good. But in this picture he wins them all. Also give Ricardo Cortez plenty room in this picture. And next comes Karen Morley. She sure should get the glittering stars marked up to her credit for her wonderful part she played in this picture. I cannot help but think when she is known better she will be in the big star class. —Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Probably a good picture of its kind. Did not take in film rental. People in my town do not want horror pictures.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort. Kansas. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—Did a good business with more than usual advertising, and the picture satisfied everybody. I was under the impression that this wasn't so good as the others but most of my people were enjoying every bit of it. Paid enough more for this to offset any extra business, but glad I ran it. Played Jan. 23-24-25.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—Extra good picture to above average business. Business first night not so hot but the second night we stood 'em in the aisles. Story dealing with banks and bank failings. Suppose these bank stories will be the next epidemic. Played Dec. 23-24.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—This one pleased the older folks best. It is a good comedy. Drew only fair for me.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler—Good entertainment. Not a special.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow—A good picture. Extra drawing power.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Well, it seems you have this picture sold to the public as they tell you how good it is before you play it. The one thing Metro believes in is advertising. It helps us bill its pictures.—Walter Odom, Sr., Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March—A very fine picture. Well produced. It drew just a fair business. It pleased the older folks better than the young ones.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer, Fredric March—A wonderful picture, one you can be proud to present to your patrons. Pleased 100 per cent in our case and several came the second time. Business a little above average. Played Jan. 29-30-31. Running time, 99 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

SMILIN' THRU: Norma Shearer—Very fine picture. Extra drawing power.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—A remarkable production, and will create quite a bit of discussion. Some of our customers have not yet decided whether they liked it or not. Not a small town picture, and tell the kiddies to come some other time. I thought Shearer aged too fast. Played Jan. 26-27.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—A real good picture. Very deep acting which pleases the higher class. Working class of people don't seem to care for this much, although we had a few. Business good first night. The second night dropped very low. Played Jan. 23-24.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Mixed patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—A nice picture. Truex fine. Others in support stood out. Una Merkel not so hot. Nothing to her in this but her cute little Southern dialect. Nothing in name draw, and title gave impression of another freak thriller instead of a laff-thrill, which it was. Business below average. Played Jan. 29-30.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

Monogram

GUILTY OR NOT GUILTY: Betty Compson, Tom Douglas—Poor work in this production. Direction not so good. This picture was not worth showing to audience. Played Jan. 30. Running time, 72 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

THE THIRTEENTH GUEST: Ginger Rogers, Lyle Talbot—Good mystery picture. Should do good any place. A lot of chills will run up and down your back. Good work for Rogers and Talbot. Recording not so good. Played Feb. 1-2. Running time, 67 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

Paramount

THE BIG BROADCAST: Bing Crosby, Stuart Erwin—A good picture but no business due to bad weather. Played Dec. 12-13-14.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: All star—Excellent entertainment and almost doubled average business for the run. Radio names the big draw for this picture. Played Jan. 7. Running time, 85 minutes.—V. C. Wenkler, Colonel Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

THE BIG BROADCAST: Stuart Erwin, Bing Crosby—Here is one swell picture that will please almost 100 per cent. Radio fans eat it up, and does that boy Crosby pull in the fair sex? Shows many of the radio favorites in action and they mean box office. Story may be weak, as many critics have claimed, but who cares, for it is real entertainment. Business great. Played Jan. 22-23-24. Running time, 86 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—My idea of nice, clean, peppy entertainment. Not heavy, but holds your audience, and pleases. Here is a girl that has Garbo backed off the map. Don't have to pay ten times what a picture is worth to run her offerings. Increased business on this. Played Jan 15. Running time, 93 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—Consider this the best picture we have played this season. Only fair draw due to bad weather, but pleased all who saw it. Music score adds much to picture. Sound, direction and photography perfect. Played Oct. 31-Nov. 1-2. Running time, 85 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe—I saw this one out of town but considered it a very good piece of entertainment. Some good wisecracks and some good action. Different racketeering line exposed. Dickie Moore does his bit.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Better than average program action picture. Holds interest. Players well cast. Good Saturday show. Played Jan. 24-25.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe—Nothing to write home about, but will please the customers that want some fast thrills.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Helen Hayes, Gary Cooper—The customers did not care about seeing it, but nevertheless it's a fine show. Would say too many tears for this depression. Our customers want their entertainment light and fluffy. Played Feb. 2-3. —J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes —A great show that pleased all. Great advertising possibilities. Get behind it.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Good interesting picture. The title kept women away. The picture pleased. Played Feb. 3-4. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Randolph Scott—Here is another Zane Grey story well done and will please the average audience 100 per cent. Played Feb. 2. Running time, 60 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT: Sally Blane, Randolph Scott—Zane Grey's name pulled them in on this one. Saturday business slightly above average. Seemed to please. Hardly any better than usual westerns. Running time, 57 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Funny, and when you say that it's enough. People want to laugh. This is silly, but they like something just like this once in a while. Do think they could be better than they were in this particular offering. However, it was plenty funny. Played Jan. 8. Running time, 73 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Very entertaining picture, but N. G. at box office. Played Dec. 5-6-7.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Louisville, Ala. Small town patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: All star—This picture was well liked here. A new idea. So many complete stories all blended together seems like one could indeed be hard to please if some part of this picture failed to register. Not half bad, you tell 'em so. Played Jan. 22-23.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Not bad. Had several comments on this. However, I'm of the opinion that this boy had his day. Nothing objectionable as far as the story is concerned, although it had been severely criticized by a few cranks. Pay no attention to this. Played Jan. 22. Running time, 104 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marian Nixon—Pleasing picture with plenty of action and comedy. A much more pleasing picture than was expected. A show for the whole family. Played Jan. 31.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marian Nixon—Good, fast moving, clean entertainment that pleased most of our patrons. Even those who do not care for fight pictures thought this one good. Many famous names in the sport world add interest. Fine for the kids. Business above average. Played Jan. 20-21. Running time, 74 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Not bad for entertainment. However, Lloyd is wiped up as far I'm concerned. Just an ordinary pleasing picture. No drawing power at box office. Not as good as some of his past pictures. Goodbye Lloyd. Played Jan. 29. Running time, 95 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—Good draw first day. No business second day. Harold Lloyd will have to make more pictures if he don't want the public to forget him. Constance Cummings good in this. Played Jan. 16-17. Running time, 96 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—Good picture but stars are not known here, so did not gross film rental. Played Oct. 28-29-30.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings—Action set in a big city speakeasy. The tale of a few nights in the lives of the people who frequented the place, once a residence in a high class neighborhood. Kept free of sex and proved interesting. A strain of humor relieving the drama. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT AFTER NIGHT: George Raft, Constance Cummings, Wynne Gibson—A fine picture, above the program class. Splendid cast. Mae West caused the most favorable comment from patrons. Not a "gangster" picture such as we have had in the past, though it runs along these lines. Business a little above average, and patrons well pleased. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 70 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

THE NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Frances Dee, Gene Raymond—Here is a murder and courtroom drama that is superior and different. Holds your interest every second. Charles Grapewin almost steals the show. Hope we see more of him. Business a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13: Clive Brook, Lila Lee—Grossed more on this than any Paramount picture this year. Would advise extra advertising as this picture will please any type audience. Played Jan. 5-6-7.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—At last Gable allowed to act like a human being; result an agreeable, pleasing entertainment. Metro never gave us as good a picture as this with Gable, though we didn't consider Carole Lombard beautiful enough to create all that furore among the men. She showed admirable restraint in dealing with the irresistible Clark.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House, Marathon, New York. Small town and country patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Carole Lombard—This is the kind of a picture the public likes during these times. Clarke Gable to advertise.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable—Gable is a popular star and the picture is one of his best. Not a good Saturday picture but will please on any other day. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 76 minutes.—J. A. Blatt, Rex Theatre, Corry, Pa. General patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Carole Lombard, Clark Gable—Another good picture from Paramount. Business above average and pleased 100%. Sound and photography good. Played Jan. 30-31-Feb. 1. Running time, 76 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: Jimmy Durante, Geo. M. Cohan—A dandy comedy. How your patrons will like it depends on how they like Jimmy Durante, for he's just about the whole show. Older patrons are interested in Geo. M. Cohan, and he's plenty good. Pleased most everyone, and though business was just fair that could be attributed to the weather. Played Jan. 18-19. Running time, 78 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West, Owen Moore—Plenty ruff, but they liked it, especially the older gals and boys who could remember "way back when" in the nineties. Mae West is little known in the small towns, so not much draw, but I found it satisfactory for entertainment with no howls from the blue noses. Played Jan. 31.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis—Delightful picture that appeals only to the classes, but those who came enjoyed it immensely. Played Jan. 26. Running time, 73 minutes.—H. R. Cromwell, Bedford Theatre, Bedford, Pa. Small town patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Kay Francis, Herbert Marshall—While this picture did not do any business it is a good show and the ones that did come were satisfied. Charles Ruggles and Everett Horton are good for the comedy relief. Running time, 73 minutes.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Idaho. Rural patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Kay Francis—Marvelous picture for the class trade. Cast, direction and production far above average. Better than average box office. Played Jan. 11. Running time, 81 minutes.—V. C. Wenkler, Colonel Theatre, Erie, Pa. General patronage.

TROUBLE IN PARADISE: Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall—Fairly good picture of the program type. Pleased about 60 per cent. Don't expect too much from this one. Played Dec. 28-29.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—O. K. gangster type with several surprises. Played Jan. 28.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft—Very clever story, very poor photography. Cameraman either drunk or cockeyed. Anyway it could not be focused on the screen, thereby our operator got many cussings.—Ned Pedigo, Deluxe Theatre, Garber, Okla.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft—Darn good show. Keeps you on the edge of your chair all the time. Men will like it better than the ladies.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Clean picture. Pleased the large crowd. Drew better than ordinary. Watch Raft. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 74 minutes.—Joseph J. Greene, Illinois Theatre, Macomb, Ill. Family patronage.

Patrician

THE SILVER LINING: Maureen O'Sullivan, Betty Compson—Very pleasing little picture, but it cost too much and lost money. Played Jan. 24-25.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. General patronage.

SUGGESTION FROM CENTRAL AMERICA

From San Salvador in Central America comes the interesting suggestion from Mr. O. Beer that a special column of "What the Picture Did for Me" be assigned to reports from exhibitors in Spanish countries. Says our friend from the Far South:

"Your department 'What the Picture Did for Me' is a very important help for exhibitors, but I want to make a suggestion. Without any doubt you have a lot of subscribers in Spanish-talking countries, as Cuba, Porto Rico, Argentina, and so on, and it would be a very important help for them if you would make a special column with a title like 'What exhibitors in Spanish countries say,' as patrons in Spanish countries are different from those in English-speaking ones.

"Sometimes the opinion on both ends is quite the same. For example, 'The Blonde Captive' was a failure at this end; although it was a dubbed Spanish version, quite a lot of our patrons went out before the finish.

"If you open such a column I am quite willing to collaborate with you." O. Beer, San Salvador, El Salvador, C. A.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—If your fans go for Zane Grey's literature, this will please. Played Jan. 24-25.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

WILD HORSE MESA: Randolph Scott, Sally Blane—A good Western with fine photography. Many good comments on this one. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 69 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala. Small town patronage.

RKO

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—A good picture. High class. Pleased 50 per cent.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT: John Barrymore, Billie Burke—A picture that will please the masses as well as classes. A great little bundle of entertainment. Step on it. Running time, 76 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio, Joel McCrea—Beautiful production. Well received by fair attendance. Played Jan. 7-8.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Ann Harding, Richard Dix—This has its good points, also a number of bad ones; too many deaths, too much baby business. Overheard a number of disgusted remarks in regard to that angle. Ann Harding is very mediocre, and Richard Dix seems to be suffering from stage fright when he isn't overacting. Edna May Oliver best of the lot. One might say her sniff saved the picture. Played Jan. 27-28.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House, Marathon, New York. Small town and country patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—Fair draw. Flu epidemic still raging and no doubt cut down attendance. Picture okey and should draw. Played Jan. 19-21. Running time, 86 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Neb. Family patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix—I think every exhibitor should run this picture. It's the best I've run for months. Wonderful educational story beginning at an early age of this country and building up to the present time. Holds interest throughout. Characters great but for some reason or other it failed to draw. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 85 minutes.—M. A. Edwards, Ritz Theatre, Phillipsburg, N. J. Small town patronage.

THE CONQUERORS: Richard Dix, Ann Harding—An extra fine picture. One that will please most of those who see it. RKO started out to make another "Cimarron" but somewhere the thing failed to come through and this one died on us for two days, even with extra exploitation and advertising it did the smallest Sunday and Monday business in the past three months. We could not sell them the idea that we had something they wanted to see. Played Jan. 15-16. Running time, 80 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

HALF NAKED TRUTH: Lee Tracy—A great comedy that will please all. Tracy immense.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MEN OF AMERICA: Bill Boyd—Good for a double feature program on a stormy afternoon five cents admission.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

THE PAST OF MARY HOLMES: Helen MacKeller, Eric Linden—No drawing power. A fair picture when you get them in. Need plenty of good shorts.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

PENGUIN POOL MURDER: Edna May Oliver—A good Friday and Saturday picture.—Fletcher, Lyric Theatre, Hartington, Neb. General patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—Not much of a picture. Business bad. This girl sure is falling fast here. This story is rotten. The whole darn thing is rotten. Ask anyone who has run it. Played Jan. 19-20.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Mixed patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—Very pleasing picture, with an unhappy ending. A few more stories for Constance like "Lady With A Past" would help this star. Played Jan. 29-30.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—Drew well and most people seemed to enjoy it, but this is not up to Connie's standard. It is very pretty to look at, but the story is thin and the ending rather unsatisfactory. Played Feb. 5-6.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Tiffany

WHISTLIN' DAN: Ken Maynard—This type of picture goes good here on Saturdays. Action, that's what. That's what they ask for here on Saturdays. These shoot 'em up Westerns sure please. Played Jan. 21.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va. Working class patronage.

Universal

AFRAID TO TALK: Eric Linden, Sidney Fox—A clever picture that satisfied their curiosity and tickled their fancy. Created quite a little talk and Old Man me stood on the door unafraid as they came out.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Oklahoma.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Very good picture. Lots of action, the kind that pleases. Mark another up for Universal. Played Jan. 28.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Boy, this is a real picture. If this fails to please them, just lock the barn up. It can't be done. It's by far the best of the air pictures, so think I.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Oklahoma.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Gloria Stuart—The best of the football pictures. Did not draw for us, as this type of picture is not popular with our patrons, and being out of season did not help either. Business below average. Played Midnight Jan. 28. Running time, 81 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

BACK STREET: John Boles, Irene Dunne—A great picture that pleased 100 per cent. This one can stand a lot of advertising and you won't be ashamed to stand at the door when they come out. Irene Dunn is wonderful. Only kick I had was that my print was badly cut up. Running time, 80 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie, Sidney Fox, Aline McMahon—This was a disappointment, both to our patrons and ourselves. Supposed to be a satire on Hollywood, but the laugh is on the picture. The cast, which is made up of big names, is the one redeeming feature. Pleased only about 50 per cent. Business poor. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 93 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

THEY JUST HAD TO GET MARRIED: Slim Summerville, Zazu Pitts—This is a fair comedy. It did not have the pep that is necessary to make it really good. Pleased about fifty-fifty.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Warner

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—A fine program picture of the comedy drama type. Where Blondell is a favorite, this will please. Business above average. Played Midnight Jan. 21. Running time, 68 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon. General patronage.

THE CROWD ROARS: James Cagney—Here is an old one that will please, if you have not run it. Had pleasing comments on this. It is a thriller and how. Auto racing that will get their goat. Play weekend. Played Jan. 1. Running time, 84 minutes.—S. J. Smith, Unique Theatre, Sisseton, S. D. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—Plenty of action and pep. This picture went over good and did fair business on a stormy night. Running time, 60 minutes.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED GOLD: John Wayne—A harum-scarum nonsensical Western with a jittery Negro and a really intelligent horse that will help to amuse the kids if they are not too smart.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House, Marathon, New York. Small town and country patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—This freak picture makes 'em stay hitched. It has that something about it that makes them come on. By all means play it. It gets the Jack.—Ned Pedigo, De Luxe Theatre, Garber, Oklahoma.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—The best box office picture from any company so far this year. Pleased everyone and drew them in. Played Jan. 15-16.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—A very good picture that will be good for any day. It sure did please the few we did get. They just wouldn't come out to see it, and they sure missed a treat. Business only fair. Played Jan. 30-31.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Mixed patronage.

RIDE HIM COWBOY: John Wayne, Ruth Hall—A good Western picture. Pleased our patrons. This is his first picture starring him we have played. It is as good as any Western. Played Jan. 28.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Virginia. Mixed patronage.

TWO AGAINST THE WORLD: Constance Bennett—Very good picture. Connie is quite a favorite here and she never fails to draw a crowd. This may not be her best picture, but it has everything that a picture needs to please. Played Jan. 22-23.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

World Wide

BREACH OF PROMISE: Chester Morris, Mae Clark—A very good picture for Saturday.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

COME ON TARZAN: Ken Maynard—Good little Western. We haven't seen Maynard in a better Western picture. It will get by where they like Westerns. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 53 minutes.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

FALSE FACES: Lowell Sherman, Lila Lee—An excellent picture.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SON OF OKLAHOMA: Bob Steele—Very good picture, but Westerns do not draw any more as Western fans are all broke. Played Jan. 14.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

HIS VACATION: Marty Collins, Martha Mattox—Good comedy with Marty playing the role of the hen-pecked husband. Two reels.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

LAMBS ALL-STAR GAMBOL: The world's worst in our estimation. We stopped it in the middle and went on with the feature rather than continue such an exhibition.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House, Marathon, New York.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER: Krazy Kat—Exceptionally good. Running time, 7 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

HOOK AND LADDER: Our Gang—Very good. My patrons enjoy all of the Gang comedies. Two reels.—Edith M. Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selina, La. General patronage.

HOT SPOT: Taxi Boys—Good fast slapstick. These boys get a lot of action and fun in two reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

A LAD AN' A LAMP: Our Gang—A very funny kid comedy—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

I LOVE A LASSIE: Harry Lauder—Lauder is no attraction here. Too much Scotch for our element. Running time, 12 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LONDON CITY OF TRADITION: These travel-talks are all good. Would cost a bunch of money traveling for what one can see for 25 or 30 cents.—H. Bettendorf, Opera House, Foley, Minn.

MICROSCOPIC MYSTERIES: Oddities—A very interesting one-reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

THE MILKMAN: Flip the Frog—Excellent. Running time, 7 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SPORTSLANTS: (Pete Smith)—Very good reel of winter sports.—J. G. Caldwell, Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INNERTUBE: Taxi Boys—Pretty good comedy. Lots of slapstick so it moved along. Two reels.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STRICTLY UNRELIABLE: Thelma Todd, Zasu Pitts—A dandy comedy and Zasu plays her usual part. They will laugh. Running time, 17 minutes.—W. T. Biggs, Adair Theatre, Adair, Iowa.

Paramount

AIN'T SHE SWEET: Screen Song featuring Lillian Roth—One of the best Screen Songs yet. Good on any program.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

BETTY BOOPS KER-CHOO: Cartoon—Betty Boop gets better all the time. This is a good one with an exciting automobile race in which Boop brings out many thrills and laughs. Recording on these shorts are excellent.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—A very pleasing short, well-balanced. Crosby seems to have lost his camera shyness. Women like it so what else matters?—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill.

THE SINGING PLUMBER: Donald Novis—Pretty good comedy. Fine singing by a tenor who can ten. Altogether okay.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

RKO

GOLF CHUMP: Edgar Kennedy—Terrible. You could hardly call it a comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ICEMAN'S BALL: Clark & McCullough—Another silly thing from these clowns and a few laughs in it. Nothing to rave over. Running time, 19 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

ICEMAN'S BALL:. Clark and McCullough—Good comedy.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

JITTERS THE BUTLER: Bobby Clark, Paul McCullough—With the exception of about the first 100 feet it's good. The first 100 feet contain wisecracking relative to filth and I cannot conceive of a director allowing it and players that will do it. If these fellows continue along this line, I'm off of them. Two reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S GOLDEN RULE: Mickey McGuire—A very good comedy. The kids ate it up.—Hippodrome Theatre, Julesburg, Col. General patronage.

THE RINK: Charlie Chaplin—The kids laughed at it but it didn't meet much favor with the adults. Running time, 18 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

THE RINK: Charlie Chaplin—Failed to get any additional business with this. Believe this sort of thing has been overdone. Funny in spots.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill.

STONE AGE ERROR: Fables—Clever. Good music. These cartoons are liked by all. Running time, 6 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

SHANTY WHERE SANTA CLAUS LIVES: Merrie Melody—Good cartoon and clever little thought woven around Santa Claus. Pleased fine. Running time, 7 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

YOU CALL IT MADNESS: Richy Craig, Jr.—A wisecracking comedy that's sure different and new with chuckles and light laughs at the wisecracks. The younger folks thought it okay. Running time, 17 minutes.—Majestic Theatre, Lexington, Nebraska.

TIP, TAP, TOE: Hal LeRoy, Mitzi Mayfair—A fine short. These two kids really do some mean hoofing. Also contains two unique camera shots.—H. R. Hisey, State Theatre, Nashville, Ill.

THRILLS OF YESTERDAY: Pepper Pot—Great Everybody liked this. Kids liked it 100%. Running time, 10 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

LEND ME YOUR EARS!

IF MEMORY SERVES US RIGHT, it was Mark Twain who once said, "When some men discharge an obligation you can hear the report for miles around." . . And the funny part is, that Mark Twain did not associate with high-pressure publicity agents . . . anyone who could coin such truthful phrases would be worth their weight in gold today. . . .

IN DISCUSSING OUR OHIO TRIP we made some references to the current styles in press books . . . in fact, we had the courage to say that so far as the boys in the field seemed to react, press books could stand an awful lot of improving . . . but it remained for the crew who make up the press books at Fox to take the trouble to dig in deeper and call on us personally to find out exactly what they could do to improve their press books and make them more useful to the exhibitors. . .

We rather liked their attitude and it made us feel that here was an outfit quite willing to admit that they did not know it all . . . a frame of mind that we hope will prove contagious and spread. . .

WE WANT TO THANK ALL those southern boys who phoned, wired and wrote letters asking us to be sure and include them in our southern itinerary. . . Well boys . . . we will if we ever get started . . but right now it is still a question due to pressure of Club matters and a banged up knee that won't permit driving a car for another ten days or two weeks. . . But with New York temperatures kibitzing in the neighborhood of ten above zero we can think of fewer better places to be than somewhere in the south. . .

LAST SPRING WHILE ATTENDING the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers we felt that here was an organization ably fitted to become something of a technical information bureau . . . in fact, the paper we read before that august body had to do with exactly that idea . . . but we went home thoroughly convinced that their heads were stuck so deep in technical phraseology that they would hardly grasp the point advanced. . . We were not altogether wrong . . . but now it appears that what was said last spring has finally taken root and they are ready . . yes, even anxious . . to give the exhibitors out in the sticks the benefit of their knowledge and experience. . . Which just goes to prove that nothing is entirely dead until it is buried . . . and then it's apt to raise such a rumpus in the grave that you just have to dig it up and revive it. . .

DESPITE ITS GREAT IMPORTANCE, theatre maintenance continues to be the step-child of our imperial industry . . . yet said industry spends huge sums each year on replacements and repairs . . . many of them unnecessary expenditures because the breakdowns and wear are caused not by use but by ignorance. . .

No manager can claim he is really competent until he has a thorough knowledge of his theatre's physical equipment and an understanding of it sufficient to guide him in making certain that it is being properly cared for. . . Just how he can acquire such knowledge and information is by no means a problem of great proportions . . . on the contrary, show me a manager with the desire to know such things and I'll soon prove that through the usual daily routine of managing his theatre he will acquire it. . .

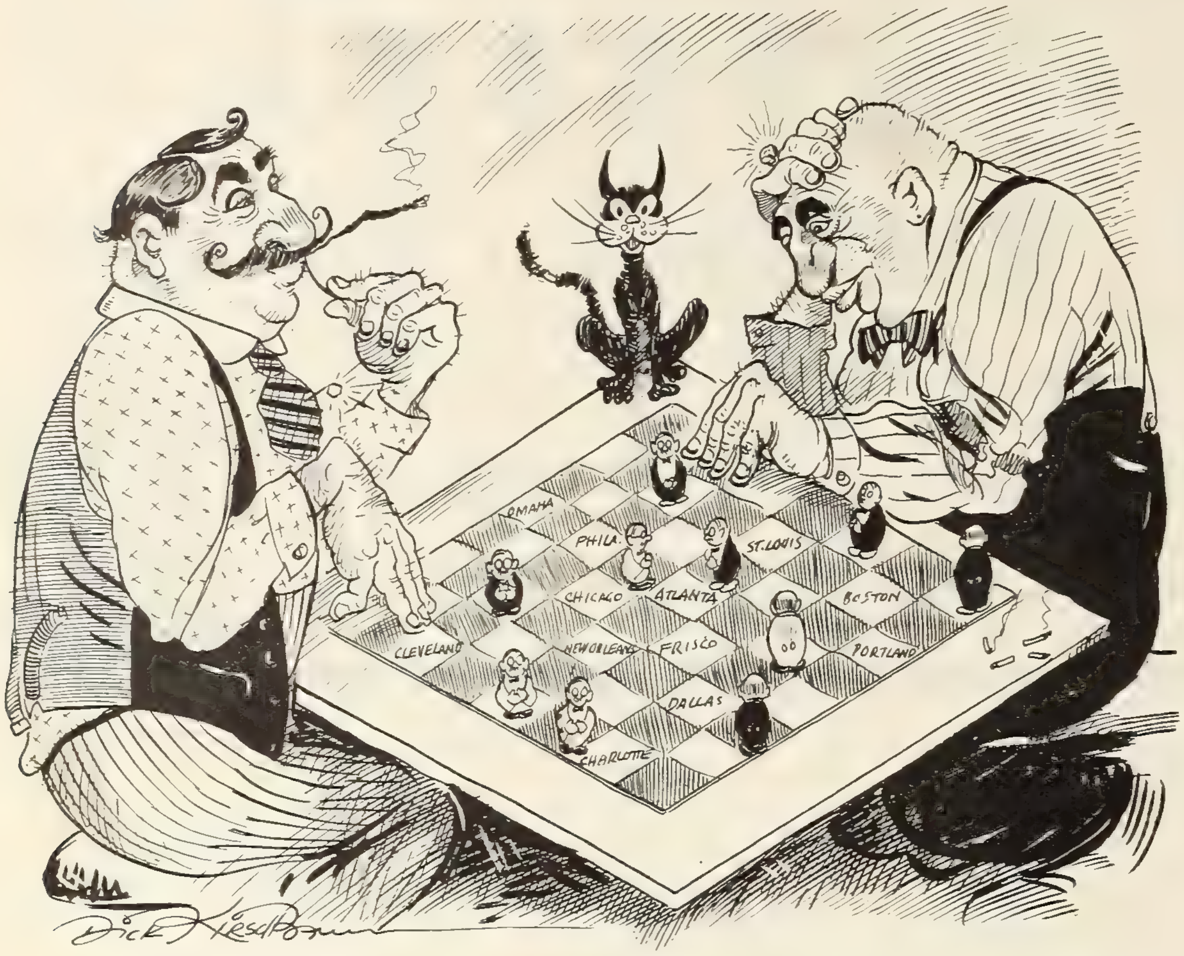
Much has been said on this subject before . . . and still more will be said hereafter . . . but the fact still remains that unless you make an effort to know something about every detail of your theatre's equipment you can never safeguard it against unnecessary breakdowns or abuse. . . A good way to start your tardy education along these lines is to find out why something goes bad or busts. . . If the explanation advanced by those responsible is not entirely satisfactory, call in an expert or a specialist on the particular matter and let him give you the inside dope and how to avoid a repetition. . .

After a dozen incidents as described, you'll be surprised to note how smart you are getting and how much tougher it is going to be for your hired help to trump up cock-and-bull stories to cover their own negligence . . and once they are wised up to the fact that you are nobody's fool, they will be doing their durndest to avoid facing your stern "Why?" when something goes blooey. . .

Maintenance . . like charity . . begins at home and is not a matter for home office supervision . . other than in an advisory capacity. . . The house manager assumes the responsibility of the theatre's equipment when he is placed in charge and should be equal to this important phase of his job. . . "CHICK"

A GAME OF CHECKERS!

Drawn by DICK KIRSCHBAUM



Here, brethern and sistern, we draw aside the curtain and let you take a peek at two big theatre magnets (magnets, we said) engaged in their favorite pastime, entitled "Checkers and Managers". The one who jumps the greatest number of managers the greatest distance in a limited time wins the game. So far it's a close race, with the kat taking it all in from the side-lines.

HERE'S A COUPLE OF SHOW RECIPES FROM CLUBMAN GEO. GOOKIN

Here's a couple of tips from George Gookin, versatile advertising, publicity man, organist, impressario and whatnot at the Majestic Theatre, Johnson City, Tenn. One is a recipe for fomenting friendly relations among newspapermen—an act which certainly can be capitalized upon—and the other has to do with the handling of home talent shows.

A couple of tear sheets from a local newspaper offer plenty of evidence that George is getting his share of free space. The best way to get this, he believes, is to find out where the editorial room is and to pick out a comfortable chair. After all, he states, "we're all brothers under the skin and they'll never throw you out." Then, every now and then you run in with a news item or tip-off to something that's going on about town; or, when eleven o'clock arrives and the show has come to a close, drop in and have a chat with the boys and help them out in various other ways when the occasion permits. And do they appreciate these acts and does it put them in a much better frame of mind when you come around with a reader? "You're askin' me"? says George, and the dough you can save!

Since we last reported on Gookin's activities he has organized a 10-piece stage band to use with vaudeville and the pay-off is in passes to each member and an inducement to get dance jobs on the outside. (Incidentally, George gets leave of absence when these outside jobs materialize.) His band and vaudeville members are staged on Saturday nights, with the band set with a fancy background and lattice-work fence effect in front.

This band and vaudeville night, which is not billed in the old, hackneyed style of "Amature Night" but as "Vaudeville Acts Tonight," or something similar, has become S.R.O. at the Majestic every time it's pulled, and George believes it's a corking stunt to get one or two nights out of the red. The band act can either serve as a separate attraction or the two can be merged for the occasion. A wide-awake piano player or organist can also handle the situation very nicely.

If anyone wants further details on the above, drop George a line and we have his word for it that an answer will be in order. He knows this racket all the way through and a complete plan from him will be better than this brief outline. More dope from him in the future.

CARROLL AND OSTROW CASHED IN ON FIGHT CHAMP'S APPEARANCE

The debut of lightweight champion, Tony Canzoneri, and his orchestra at the Academy of Music, New York City, convinced Charlie Carroll, manager, and his able assistant, B. J. Ostrow, that they had an exploitation natural by virtue by the fighter's popularity among the many Italian residents of the neighborhood.

As soon as the booking was set the house was plastered with display material, streets were covered with paper and circulars and a tie-up effected with a local sporting goods concern controlling 35 stores. One week prior to opening it was arranged to have a lobby display of sports accessories, etc., which included a rowing machine on a table with attractive girl at the oars. Giveaway of a number of these machines were made on the last night of the engagement.

All the Davega stores carried signs and photos in windows and it was arranged to have the champ and his band appear at the company's largest branch in the Empire State Building. The sports concern also ran large ads in leading local dailies, with Canzoneri's pictures and the usual information concerning his appearance at the Academy. The fact that a fight champion was leading an orchestra in vaudeville impressed the sports editors as "news."

On opening day at 12:30 o'clock a big Greyhound bus pulled up at the Park Central Hotel (the champ's abode) and headed by a police escort of motorcycles took Canzoneri and his band down Broadway, across 34th street, to the Empire State. Advance publicity had jammed the place with newspapermen, cameramen and the usual audience. A party was given the newspapermen, while a concert sufficed for the audience. The bus then proceeded to the Academy so that the orchestra could be ready to go on with its act.

Ostrow advised us that he has a photo of the very attractive lobby display made in connection with the above, but unless it comes through before this copy get's into dummy form we're afraid it will have to be passed up. At any rate, both Carroll and he were quick to realize the exploitation possibilities of this act and to cash in on it. More about these two showmen later.

Petterson's Exhibit

Following closely a local exhibit of model air craft, G. A. Petterson, manager of the Garden Theatre, staged one of his own with high school and Boy Scouts to exploit "Air Mail." His move resulted in a very attractive lobby display of all sorts of model planes, augmented by a collection of historical air mail envelopes.

NORTHWEST EDITION!

Next week's issue of the Club pages will be dedicated and devoted to the showmanship activities, merchandising and personnel of the entire Publix-Northwest Division, comprising about seventy theatres located in thirty-one different towns and cities.

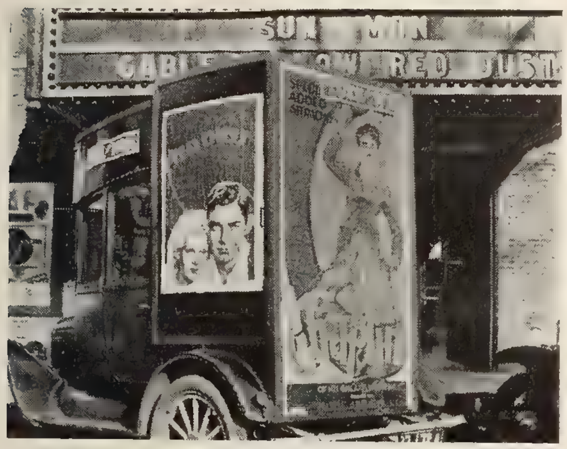
Through the fine cooperation of J. J. Friedl and L. J. Ludwig, divisional directors, and the hard work of Charlie Winchell, division publicity chief (and sponsor of the special edition idea), we have secured some marvelous material.

Other groups who would like to follow up the idea are invited to look over the Northwestern Edition next week and to start work on material for their own special issue.

A TRAVELLING AUTO IS HIS BEST BALLY, ADVISES I. J. CRAITE

All sorts of ballyhoos have been used by I. J. Craite, manager of the Fort Theatre, Fort Atkinson, Wis., but the one pictured here, he advises, has been the most effective, considering the low cost of maintenance and amount of territory covered.

He calls his truck the "Traveling Billboard" and advertising is generally placed in the panels from four days to a week in advance of showing. All adjacent territory is covered first and the truck is then brought back to town for a final all-day plug during opening. The name of the theatre appears in front of the truck above the windshield; the body is painted yellow; panels, red and orange, all of which makes a most attractive combination. A set of sleighbells, mounted on springs and placed over the top, rings while the truck is in operation.



Concerning other recent activities of Manager Craite, newspaper clippings inform us that it took three trips by the theatre truck and two with another commercial vehicle to haul away the large collection of food-stuff brought to the theatre in lieu of general admission to a benefit staged for the needy. More than 30 bushels of food were received, as well as about half that amount of clothing.

It is interesting to note that Craite is just as enthusiastic as many other Club members over the auto bally as a cheap, effective means of covering extensive outside territory. According to the photo he also converted one of the old "Model T's" into a suitable vehicle by building a rear portion of the body high enough to carry a good-sized poster on the back panel and two others on the sides.

LOU BLACK AND MORT BLUMENSTOCK CRASH WILMINGTON TAXICABS

Mort Blumenstock, in charge of publicity for all Warner Bros. Theatres, conducted a very extensive advertising publicity campaign with Manager Lou Black of the Aldine Theatre in Wilmington, Delaware, on "Silver Dollar." Many large and effective ads were used in the local newspapers and much space was gained with publicity stories. The most unusual stunt of the entire campaign was the tie-up between the theatre and the entire taxicab fleet in the city. All cabs carried large framed signs bearing illustrations and copy on "Silver Dollar." Twenty-five 24 sheets, 250 window cards and 20,000 throw-aways were used. Triple the usual amount of newspaper space accompanied the campaign.

This marked the first time in Wilmington that any theatre has been able to get any picture copy into the taxis.

VALUABLE PUBLICITY OBTAINED BY LAWSON ON LONDON PREMIERE

Valuable publicity was secured in the heart of London's shopping district on "Rain" by Robb Lawson, publicity director for United Artists in that city.

The display pictured here had throngs of people crowded around it day and night and the Telemac Company, owners of the shop, were so pleased with the interest it created that they are tying up with the picture all over England.

Additional publicity was provided for the picture's London premiere by Woolworths, every one of their stores in the central part of the city carrying a full window display of the 6d edition of the book. Special boards and an array of stills made an eye-arresting display in each case. Despite a local omnibus strike which took about 2,000 busses off the streets, queues surrounded the Empire Theatre on opening night.

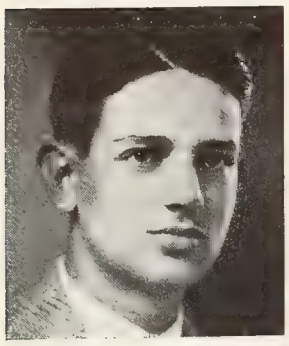
MERCHANTS HELPED JACK ALGER STAGE BIG MIDNIGHT SHOW



Jack Alger

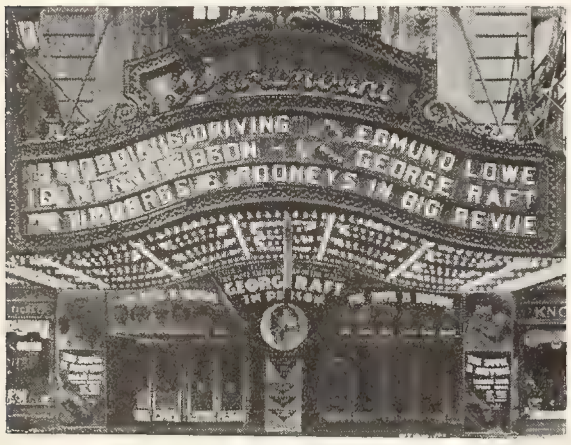
Due mainly to the untiring efforts of Jack Alger, resident manager of Alger's Valley Theatre, Spring Valley, Ill., local merchants, made possible a most successful Midnight Show at his house on New Year's Eve.

Jack not only sold the merchants the idea of donating give-aways for the occasion, but succeeded in working up two corking co-op pages of advertising, for which the newspaper allowed him 15 per cent to offset space used by the theatre. In return for the gifts Alger gave the merchants advertising on the screen, an attractive lobby display (see photo) with credit cards and additional credit when handing out the different articles. Incidentally, the two full pages of cooperative advertising were promoted in two different papers.

Even though New Year's Eve shows and frolics are out of season at this date, Jack sent along a report on how successful his affair was for everyone concerned, with the thought that there might be occasions for other Club members to promote similar shows between now and next Xmas or New Year's season.

Although Alger is comparatively a new recruit to the Round Table army, he's been following this department for some time and we believe he can be counted upon to do his full share toward keeping up the good work.

TIMES SQUARE FRONT!



Another of the smart fronts turned out by Duke Wellington for the N. Y. Paramount. Equal prominence for screen and stage shows balances the fine job.

During the past three years out-of-town showmen visiting the city have made Club headquarters their New York address. Mail can be directed here and will be held or forwarded according to instructions.

We can also arrange your hotel accommodations at special rates through several representative hotels; secure privileges for inspecting the large Broadway movie theatres; help you with your business matters; in fact, we want you to know that the entire organization is at the disposal of visiting members.

HANCE AGAIN STAGED HIS TRADE DAY, DOG, DOLL AND PET PARADE

One year ago Monte Hance, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Biloxi, Miss., inaugurated a Trade Day and Dog, Doll and Pet Parade in his town, with the cooperation of a local newspaper and leading merchants. This year, despite adverse conditions, he held the event a second time to full satisfaction of all concerned and the affair now appears to be a soundly established annual get-together for merchants and patrons.

Tear sheets from the newspaper concerned indicate that the event was given extraordinary support on the front uage, editorial section and with numerous follow-up stories, explaining in detail advantages in store for citizens, method of entry of children in the pageant and other information. Practically every article mentioned Hance's participation in the affair and paid tribute to his usefulness as a leading member of the local chamber of commerce. Special heralds and window cards also helped materially.

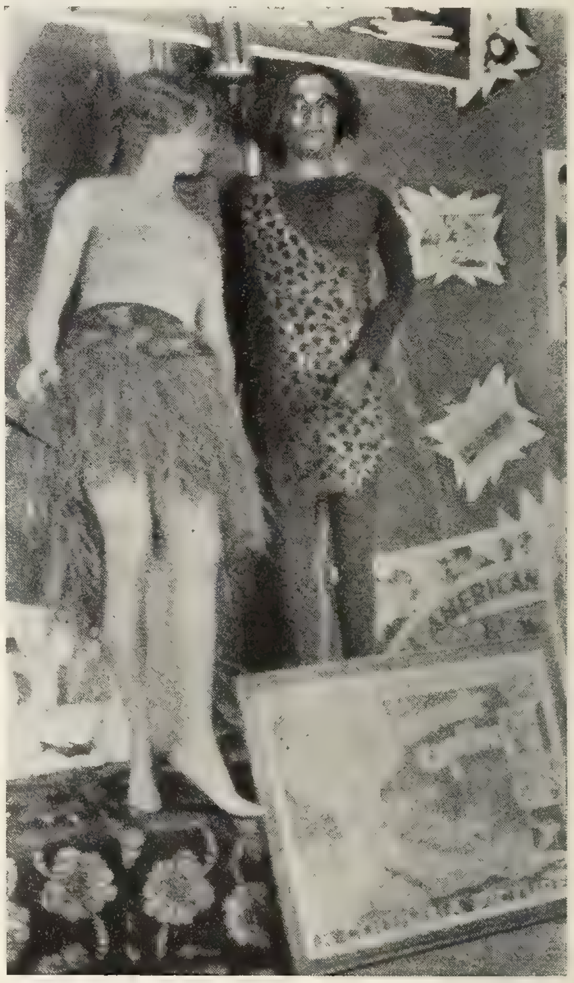
Thirty merchants contributed small amounts of cash to provide a $50 give-away and awards for the kiddies who took part in the parade. The theatre did excellently at the box office, every merchant reported the biggest day's trade in months and the newspapers published its largest edition, with most advertising, since April, '31. People from the back country who hadn't been in town for a year made their first appearance at the theatre and saw a show that was something to talk about when they returned to the sticks.

Next year it is Hance's plan to enlarge his Trade Day, Dog, Doll and Pet Parade into almost the proportions of a County Stock Show. Praise to him for putting over the last event in the face of such adverse conditions. We'll be looking for further word from this energetic showman of Biloxi.

MAC KRIM GAVE HIS FANS EYEFUL WHEN EXPLOITING PICTURE

With the South Sea and jungle film cycle in full swing, wax figures such as used by department stores to display lingerie and gowns, seem to be finding much favor with several of our enterprising Club members, in this instance, the resourceful Mac Krim, manager of the Lasky Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

The illustration shows the pair of figures Mac used in his lobby one week in advance to exploit "Blonde Captive." The female figure originally consisted of just head and bust and Mac picked her up in a beauty parlor. A pair of legs rounded out the general scheme. The male figure was of the racketeer type, advises Mac, and was revamped with darkening fluid and addition of bushy eyebrows and native wig a la still from picture. Floodlights were thrown on the display in advance. Currently it was taken outside and surrounded with grass mats and bushes.



Along with distribution of 10,000 special heralds and 200 window cards, the above gag materially helped put the picture over. Thanks to Mac for his contribution to the s. a. division. We'll be looking for more of his handiwork.

TIE UP WITH WINTER SPORTS!

Just as football and baseball provide good cooperative angles in conjuction with your theatre's activities, so do basketball, hockey and other winter sports.

Managers are urged to sponsor inter-community games and possibly offer a silver cup for a play-off of the best two teams within the drawing area of the theatre's patronage. Score cards and other tie-ups can be worked out as well, with local sporting goods shops paying for the printing in return for their ad on the material distributed.

Inviting the local teams to your theatre on a specified night and introducing them from the stage will also help build good-will and foster a friendly feeling between the theatre and these various local teams.

Where ice skating is popular some advertising gags should be worked out at the lake or rink to attract attention to the theatre or some particular picture.

REAL BOX OFFICE AMMUNITION TO FIRE AT THAT LENTEN SLUMP

Enough Practical Suggestions Here To Help You Line Up Your Complete Campaign for Entire Six Weeks of Lent!

Individual Ideas or a Combination of Several Ought To Be Productive of Box Office Results for Any Situation!

by IRA GLUCKSMAN

At our special request, Ira Glucksman has given this article careful attention with his eye constantly focused on the box office. Almost every suggestion contained herein will be found practical and worth while, providing it is being read by showmen who are determined to beat the usual Lent slump through hard work and good merchandising.

Those who keep their copies of the Herald will find in the issue of February 6th of last year another fine article containing special suggestions for the Lent season and written by Jack Jackson. Between the two stories you should encounter little or no difficulty in working out a campaign for the six weeks of Lent that should keep you well out of the red.

"CHICK"

LENT starts this year on March 1st and winds up on Easter, April 16th.

Special effort based on ticket-selling ideas will keep grosses from taking a drop at your theatre during the annual slump period.

Here is a crop of suggestions chosen with a weather eye out for real market value at the box-office:

General Suggestions

1. Good will and institutional stunts should not be neglected entirely. But greatest effort ought to go into direct box-office selling.

2. The primary purpose of the theatre is to retail entertainment in the form of pictures. Special stunts such as give-aways should be regarded only as supplementary box-office aids, not the main draw.

3. In arranging dates for big box-office stunts, such as stage weddings, fashion shows, and auto give-aways, watch bookings carefully. It is wasted effort to put on one of those draw stunts simultaneously with a big picture that will "wow" the town on its own merit. Use fashion shows, stage weddings, auto give-aways and the like to bolster mediocre films.

4. Space-getting tie-ups are the kind to use on big pictures for which special campaigns are desirable. This cuts extra ad costs.

5. Some theatres are in the habit of running the same size ad day after day, week in and week out. It is possible to give the big picture extra ad plugs by keeping unnecessary space down on mediocre pictures. Furthermore, the variety will get more attention.

6. As Easter approaches give the theatre a festive appearance. Decorate it with flowers through florists tie-ups as explained below under "Merchant Tie-ups." Change colors to suit the occasion. But watch the weather man. Green bulbs do not fit in during a cold snap.

Specific Selling Ideas

A. Merchant Tie-ups.

1. Auto Give-away: Spring is the big auto selling season. This is the alert manager's chance to cash in with an auto give-away.

If one dealer can't be induced to give a car, get a group of them to come in on the deal. Of course, the group must all be selling the same make.

Another way to go about it, is to arrange for a group of merchants to pay for the give-away. They hand out coupons to customers and get lobby and trailer credit.

Be certain that the car is displayed in the theatre lobby or prominent store window throughout the tie-up, that a box be placed in the lobby for deposit of coupons, that the car be obtained at a price below retail, and that stipulation is made that the winner must be in the audience on the night of the drawing.

Some exhibitors, when unable to get new cars, have been successful in obtaining used cars. It goes without saying that the car must be in good condition and that to award an old piece of junk is the best ill-will builder in the world.

2. Merchant Ticket Give-aways: If you can duplicate the merchant tie-up made last year by a southern exhibitor, then you're guaranteed a steady sale of tickets in bulk throughout Lent for the weakest matinee during the week.

This exhibitor got a group of merchants to chip in a specified sum each week with which to buy tickets for the matinee and to pay for a weekly full page ad plugging the theatre's show and announcing the arrangement.

Tickets were distributed to customers making purchases of a certain sum at the merchants' stores.

In the case of this exhibitor (he had a small house), the tie-up guaranteed him $100 a week for eight weeks for a matinee that did not normally gross half that amount.

3. Bargain Matinees: These can be built on bargain price of tickets or bargains for patrons of the theatre at stores of a merchant tied-in.

In return for co-op ads or heralds, give patrons coupons good for a 10-per cent discount on anything bought in the participating merchant's store.

4. Gold Night: A Gold Night Idea, giving this thread-bare give-away a novel slant, was worked last summer by an Indian exhibitor. It looks good for Lent.

Instead of following out the usual Gold Night plan of handing out the gold donated by co-operating merchants to lucky number holders, this exhibitor called his Gold Night "Grab Bag Night" and awarded the money in this manner:

Tickets were given to patrons only between the hours of seven and nine. At nine the manager and an usher walked up and down the aisles with boxes containing the tickets. Any patron was permitted to pick a ticket until 16 had been chosen.

As the tickets were called off by the manager from the stage, an usher went to the seat of the patron. The patron was permitted his choice of various bags in which were coins of different denominations.

A great deal of comedy was injected because the patron would invariably pick the heaviest bag, only to find it contained 75 pennies. The procedure was continued until all bags were given away.

5. Milliner Tie-up: Easter is the day when the ladies come out in their new spring bonnets, and for that reason the weeks just previous are the ones when milliners put a lot of effort into selling. The wise showman can cash in on this seasonal outlay. Here are two reliable stunts:

(a) The milliner takes space in the local paper, announcing a new model hat. Along with the hat appears a cut of the femme star of a coming attraction. Guest tickets are announced as prizes to readers who can draw the new model best on the head of the star. Of course the ad mentions the attraction, playdates and theatre.

(b) The milliner donates several hats to be given to women on whom they look most becoming. Hats are tried on on the stage of the theatre. Winners are determined by audience applause. This one is always good for a lot of laughs. If possible, get the milliner to take newspaper space announcing the hat give-away.

6. Transportation Companies: Local transportation companies such as trolley, taxi and bus organizations have felt the depression like all businesses. They will be glad to engage in tie-ups that will stimulate their receipts.

Lent, for the most part falls during a period of inclement weather. This is a good time for the theatre to engage in transportation tie-ups.

One of the best ideas is to get the transportation outfit to give free rides home to theatre patrons coming down via the company's vehicles. Passengers, on request, get a slip which, when stamped by the theatre cashier upon purchase of a ticket, entitles the bearer to the free ride home.

The theatre announces the arrangement by slide or trailer. The transportation company makes the announcement in ads, car cards, station cards, heralds, etc.

Managers in some towns have been successful in inducing bus companies to route special buses to the theatre door at the "break" of the show. Patrons appreciate this convenience, especially during stormy weather.

Conductors' announcements are good publicity. Get the participating company to have conductors call out: "12th St. Get off here for the Strand Theatre, where "Farewell to Arms" is playing."

7. Guessing Tie-up: The old guessing idea has so many possible variations that it will take little ingenuity to make it new. To get the most out of it, tie-up should be made with a merchant.

BEATING THE LENT SLUMP!

No Cost Space, Publicity, Etc.

1. Art School: Got an art school in your town? If so, here's the way to win lobby posters, publicity and ticket sales.

Tie up with the school to have some of its most gifted students work in your lobby making displays, posters, etc., for a coming attraction on which you want special emphasis. Let them work near a sign reading: "We are students of the Jones Commercial Art School making special displays for (Name of Picture), starring (Names of Players) and coming to this theatre (Playdates). Try to have the school send local students, especially from prominent families. This gives all the better chance for the stunt to crash the papers.

Get the school to announce the stunt in newspaper ads which carry a mat from the picture together with picture name and playdates.

Also have the school award a scholarship to the lucky number holder in the audience during the run of the picture.

2. Spring House-Cleaning Exhibition: Spring is notoriously the house-cleaning period of the year. Therefore, merchant tie-ups based on this idea are pretty sure to be successful.

A space-getting plan is to trade merchants' foyer displays of house-cleaning cleaning goods and materials in return for paid ad space. This might be called the "Spring House-Cleaning Exhibition."

In running any exhibition of this sort, it is a good idea to stage it past the doorman if possible so that women attracted to see it will be cash customers and not just curiosity seekers jamming up the lobby.

A good variation of this stunt for larger towns is a "Know Your Neighborhood Merchant" tie-up. Local merchants pay for ad space, pluggers, heralds, etc., and donate merchandise given to patrons on one or two nights a week at the theatre.

3 Word of Mouth: Here's a gag worked a couple of years ago by a Nebraska manager. It had the entire town talking about a picture.

Advertising for kids who wanted to earn a guest ticket to the theatre, the exhibitor rounded up about a hundred. To each of them he gave a petition stamped with theatre name and picture playdates along with copy reading: "We, the undersigned, being in a mood to be entertained, welcome to the Rex Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday that excellent picture (picture name).' Kids turning in petitions with 200 signatures got their guest ticket.

In working this stunt, make sure that you pick kids from every location in town to get complete coverage. The novelty of the idea and the talk about the picture are well worth the guest ticket and small printing charge.

Another stunt, similar to this, was also worked successfully.

The manager recruited a group of boys who were divided into teams with a captain appointed to head them. Each team was sent to a different section of town with instructions to knock at the door of every house and say: "Good afternoon. The manager of the Strand has asked me to remind you that such and such a picture with this and this star is playing at the Strand starting tomorrow."

POSTAL WARNING!

Managers who contemplate, among their Lenten activities for stimulating business, any form of contest, prize competitions or schemes of any kind in connection with which the mails are to be used, are advised to ascertain whether such matter is admissible to the mails, in view of the fact that the postal laws prohibit the mailing of matter relating to schemes or enterprises for the award of prizes or distribution of money or property by lot or chance, drawings, contests, etc.

Before proceeding with any stunt or gag in which the mails are to be used, we suggest that you consult your local postmaster and secure his O.K. In this way you will avoid violation of the lottery laws.

The kids each got a guest ticket.

4. Newspapers: There are so many good newspaper space ideas that space here permits review of only a few of them.

a. Smile Snaps: Every day during Lent the paper sends its photographers out to take pictures of crowds on the main shopping thoroughfares. One or two smiling faces in the crowd are circled on the photo. Individuals so circled get guest tickets upon identifying themselves either at the newspaper office or at the box-office. Naturally the paper runs stories each day about the stunt, mentioning theatre, attraction and playdates.

b. Newsboy Matinee: Theatre invites the paper's newsboys to attend a matinee. They parade to the theatre bearing signs reading: "We are 'Herald' carriers on our way to see such and such a picture at the Rex." The paper will invariably run a story and photos of this.

c. Want Ad Tie-up: On the want ad page the paper prints display ad plugging the theatre's show and announcing that readers who find misplaced lines, misplaced want ads, numbers, etc., scattered through the want ads will get guest tickets to the picture.

d. Subscription Tie-up: Provided the theatre gets enough display space to warrant it, guest tickets go to new subscribers.

5. Phone: If you have unlimited phone service, get the cashier to call a long list of subscribers about your picture. A good way to work this stunt is to have the cashier say without revealing her identity: "Pardon me. I'm calling the Strand Theatre. What time does 'Farewell to Arms' Start? Naturally, this can't be done too often.

6. Special Confection Names: If you have a confectioner in or near the theatre, it is to his interest to get as many people there as possible. He can be sold on a fine co-op ad along this line.

He runs a newspaper ad plugging the theatre's show. The bottom part of the ad is given over to his copy with a line urging patrons to visit his store after seeing the show.

He might also advertise a special confection or drink of some kind called after the title of the picture or star in it. Thus the theme of his copy might be: "After you've seen Irene Dunne in 'No Other Woman' at the Gem, try an Irene Dunne special, the drink to send you home feeling happy and satisfied."

Similar tie-ups, of course, are good also at nearby drug stores or other establishmeits serving drinks and light luncheons.

7. Safety Week: With spring approaching during Lent, the town begins to get ready to handle heavier traffic. This is your opportunity to cash in on a Safety Week Stunt.

Properly run it can be ticket-selling and money-saving . . . not purely institutional, as a lot of these stunts turn out.

The first step is to sell the idea to the newspapers, police, Chamber of Commerce, Board of Education, Parent, Teacher Associations, school authorities, welfare board, safety committee, insurance men, automobile clubs and any other similar groups in town.

Get these agencies to raise funds for a newsreel of a motorist driving through the town and committing various traffic violations. Have the newspaper sponsor giving prizes to persons in the audience who detect the greatest number of violations committed by the driver in the film.

Make certain that in all stories printed by the papers and all announcement material, attractions, stars, playdates and theatre are mentioned. It is advantageous to the participating groups to have as big an audience as possible. By giving its screen to the showing of the picture the theatre is doing its share. If desirable, the theatre can donate some guest tickets.

The ticket-selling aspects of this stunt lie in the pulling power of the newsreel and the attendant publicity.

8. Window Displays: Sell merchants in as many prominent spots as possible on the idea of attention value of stills in their windows. Stills, of course, should be accompanied by selling copy on attractions, theatre and playdates.

9. Radio: Tie up with merchants or radio stations for air plugs on coming and current attractions. Ideas on how to do this were given in the Round Table section of January 21, this year.

10. Cooking School: In return for no cost ads, heralds, etc., give use of the theatre in the morning to the local power company, a food concern or the newspaper to stage a cooking school.

The participating organization supplies a lecturer who shows how to prepare foods.

Stage Attractions

1. Stage Wedding: This is always a good ticket-seller. Keep it dignified.

A good way to arouse interest of paper and town is to place a want ad asking for a couple to be married on the stage of the theatre. Meanwhile, tie up with merchants to donate furniture, groceries, jewelry, flowers, beauty service, etc., in return for publicity. A good angle to use in approaching these merchants is that depression has lowered the number of weddings but that publicity given to the stage wedding will tend to promote the marriage idea and implant names of participating stores in young couples' minds.

OVER THE TOP WITH IDEAS!

After selecting the couple, keep their identity secret. This will save them possible chiding of prank-playing friends and at the same time provide plenty of material for a series of newspaper mystery stories on their identity.

Make sure that nothing arises to mar the solemnity and beauty of the wedding itself.

2. Fashion Show: Fashions are just the ticket for the Lenten period. Preceding Easter, these weeks are the very ones when stores are preparing to splurge on spring fashions.

Theatres have been successful in staging these shows either in conjunction with a single large store or with a group of noncompetitive establishments, such as gown shop, milliner, shoe store, jeweler, florist, novelty shop and the like.

Most stores of any size will run a fashion show of some sort during this period. It is a good idea to plant the thought with the management that the theatre stage is the very place to stage the show to greatest advantage. It is not unlikely then that the idea will sell itself and the store or stores ask the theatre to participate.

There are several important points to remember in staging a fashion show. Briefly they are:

a. A mere display of fashions becomes boring to the audience. The fashion display should be woven into a regular stage revue. A tie-up with a local dancing school, dramatic club, school glee club, etc,, or a combination of them will get the talent at no cost.

b. The merchant should agree to use copy and cuts plugging theatre attractions in all his announcement ads. It is to his advantage as well as the theatre's to have as large an audience as possible.

c. The theatre should assume no responsibility for goods brought there. Assure the merchant that every precaution will be taken to insure safety of his merchandise, but that the theatre cannot be held responsible for it.

d. If the store cannot supply professional models, recruit them from among local debs, college girls or high school girls. The advantage in having professional models is that they probably have better stage presence; on the other hand, relatives and friends of the amateurs are bound to turn out to see them perform.

3. Stage Auction: As a ticket-selling and good will idea, the stage auction is swell when run as a benefit for the community chest or other desirable charity.

Local merchants are tied in to donate the articles to be auctioned. The affair is co-sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce or local newspaper. An important town official, preferably the mayor, is brought in as auctioneer for the first couple of bids. If he cannot be induced to perform this role, he should be asked to sit on the stage anyhow during the proceedings.

All money received, of course, goes to the charity selected or is distributed among a number of them.

4. Sponsored Show: Ingenious approach in selling an idea to merchants and public often will earn plenty for the theatre. Here's how a Mississippi exhibitor got a series of local talent stage shows at no cost to the theatre and satisfied the merchants who footed the bills.

PLAN CAREFULLY!

It would be impossible to crowd into any six week period all of the suggestions contained in Ira Glucksman's article, but if you sit down some day before the beginning of Lent and plan your entire six weeks of activity, you could select those ideas which appeal most to you as being the best for your particular theatre and town.

Over-selling is far worse than underselling. Rather use fewer ideas but put over in a big way than try to jam in so many that none will be entirely successful. Another thought is the possibility of combining two or more suggestions into one campaign. This is a better method than trying to put over too many in a limited period of time. Plan carefully.

Talent was supplied by a local dance school, glad of the publicity obtained by participating. Each week a different merchant was sponsor of the show, he supplying the money to pay for stage hands, heralds, ads, etc.

Before each of these special shows the exhibitor went out on the stage and introduced the week's participating merchant as the man responsible for giving the town the extra attraction. This gives the merchant personal contact with the public and is the key to selling him the idea. In co-op ads the same slant is stressed.

5. Basketball Board: Basketball is still in full swing during the first part of Lent and if your town is a basketball town, here's a stunt to convert this opposition into a drawing card. The stunt has been used with marked success in a number of middle west theatres.

On a board about five feet long and 18 inches high, draw a basketball court and drill holes in various spots. At the bottom make a slotted box to hold names of players printed on transparent paper so that a bulb placed behind will illuminate them. The object of this board is to duplicate a play by play account of a basketball game. It is a big draw, especially when the game is away from home.

Behind the board is an operator wearing a headphone. In his hand he holds a live wire which he touches to bulbs in the holes drilled in the board. As he receives the account of the game, over a leased wire, he shows the progress of the ball around the court by touching the live wire to the bulbs. Special lights are placed on the board to show goals, fouls, etc.

The board should be placed to one side of the house, off stage, so that it will not interfere with the picture. This gives the audience their pick of two shows, the picture or the game, without one interfering with the other.

To get the report of the game, a flat rate arrangement can be made with the telephone company. Some managers have tied up with merchants to pay for this wire in return for announcement that the merchant is co-sponsorer.

In town where basketball interest is high, theatres have boosted as much as 300 per cent over average when an out of town game was duplicated in this manner.

Incidentally, this board idea can be used at other times of the year for football, baseball or other sports.

6. Boy Scouts: As spring approaches, boy scout organizations are getting ready for outdoor activity. During Lent arrange for them to give an exhibition on the stage of the theatre. This is certain to bring out their parents, relatives and friends. So the more scouts participating, the better for the house.

Similar exhibitions can be worked with girl scouts, Campfire Girls and other organizations of the same type.

Easter

1. Flower Show: Easter is a great time at which to put on a flower show. This will give the theatre an appropriate festive appearance in keeping with the holiday and at the same time attract business, if given the right slant.

The flower show can be worked either with professional florists, amateurs (in some sections of the country), or both.

If your theatre is in the south where flowers bloom this early, have local amateurs send the theatre specimens of their horticulture. Promote prizes for the winners, letting prominent citizens and local flower experts be the judges.

In the case of professional florists, let them arrange the show in your lobby or foyer in return for a card or for trailer credit. Induce them to run co-op ads or print heralds calling attention to the show.

A charity slant can be given the show with attendant newspaper publicity by having the florists donate flowers to be sold at the theatre during the flower show, the proceeds to go to the community chest or other prominent charity.

2. Easter Confection: Here's a way to turn the old Easter Egg matinee into a gross-builder, publicity getter and good will stunt.

The stunt formerly was worked by announcing that all kids who turned up with a colored hard-boiled Easter Egg for the Saturday matinee preceding the holiday would be admitted free. The Eggs later were turned over to charitable organizations.

This year tie up with a local confectioner to make an Easter special. Announce that all kids bringing these confections to the theatre will be admitted free, further announcing that the confections will be distributed to the local orphan asylums, poor families, etc.

The confectioner, of course, pays part of the admission for each child passed into the theatre. Thus the confectioner benefits by large sale with small profits, the theatre gets some direct return for its efforts and the charities come in for their share.

Kid Business

1. Serial: Book in a serial to run throughout Lent, on Saturday afternoons. Give

VOGT APPLIED BIG TOWN SALES IDEAS TO TOWN OF 5,000

Enclosed in the letter containing the application of John Vogt, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Gladstone, Mich., for membership in the Club, was evidence that this newly elected Round Tabler is doing some effective campaigning in the interests of his box office.

Newspaper tear sheets and a photo disclose that John put over a corking double truck and window displays in a co-operative deal among local merchants when exploiting "Big Broadcast." The big spread of ads was sold on the slogan: "Buy and Shop in Gladstone—Tune in on These Bargain Values—3 Big Days." The idea, you see, was to have the sale day and date with the three-day engagement of the picture and the merchants went for the scheme in a big way. Suffice to state that the splurge produced excellent results for both stores and theatre, grossing for the latter larger receipts than the box office had taken in in some time.

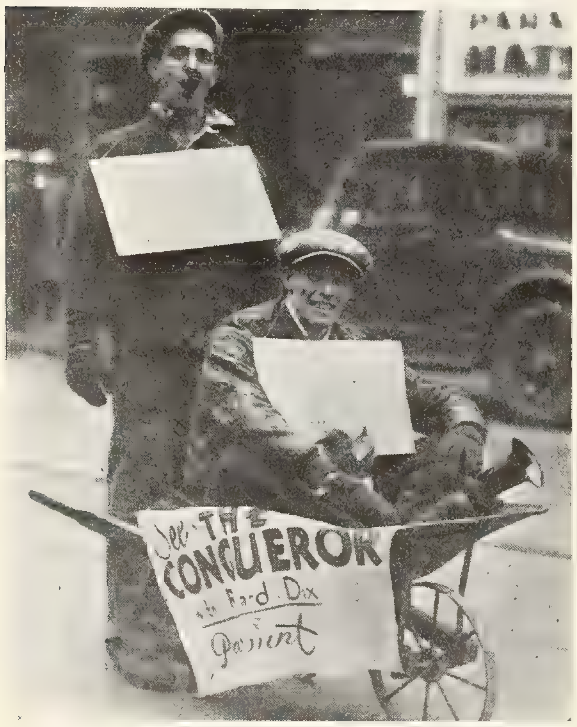
In addition to the splendid co-op heralds were used as inserts in the newspaper two days in advance; a loudspeaker was rigged up and records from the picture played through it, together with announcements of play-dates and starting times; three attractive window displays were secured, including a particularly effective one with a big dealer in radios. All copy tied in with the three-day bargain sale and showings of the picture. Two candy kitchens were also tied-up for a special "Broadcast Sundae."

Considering the 5,000 population of Gladstone, it appears that a proportionate amount of credit should by all means be chalked up to Vogt for putting over such an effective campaign. We'll hope to hear more from this new member.

ELECTION BET GAG A GOOD BALLYHOO FOR ELLIS BRODIE

One of those freak election bets came along just about the time "Conqueror" was played by Ellis Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Haverill, Mass., and this enterprising Round Tabler was quick to sell the two young fellows on the advantages of a tie-up.

The photo shows the results of the bet made on this hotly contested Mayoralty race. The loser had to push the winner over a designated route to the front of the post office building, where they shook hands with themselves, the winning candidate and bowed to an applauding crowd. Note the banner on the wheelbarrow, the title of which tied up most appropriately with the occasion.



On the job as usual, weren't you, Ellis? And we don't doubt for one moment that the stunt was good for plenty of publicity.

Mickey Invades Orient!

After establishing approximately 1,000 Mouser Clubs in the United States and Canada, the well known and popular Mickey Mouse invaded the Orient and his fellow rodents are now numbered among the Chinese, Eurasians, Indians and Malays. Only last month more than 200 youngsters got together at the Marlborough Theatre, Singapore, and started an association which since has grown over the 500 mark. Nearly 100 grown-ups had to be turned down.

SUGGESTIONS FOR LENT!

each kid coming to the first performance a ticket to be punched at every subsequent showing of the serial. Announce that kids who get every punch made on their cards will be admitted free to the last chapter. Experience of exhibitors with this stunt shows that it stimulates attendance, but that very few kids get every punch made.

2. Kid Club: Put steam into your kid club during Lent, or if you haven't one get it organized. A good idea is to bring in a merchant as co-sponsor. He donates prizes to be awarded at each meeting, to winners of such contests as pie-eating, best athlete, spelling bee, best student, balloon blowing, apple bobbing, ice cream eating, harmonica.

3. Vacation Matinees: Extra special effort to get the kids should be made during Easter Week, when they are home from school. It would be a good idea to hold an extra kid matinee or kid club meeting in the middle of this week.

4. Special Merchant Tie-up Matinees: Many exhibitors have wished they had more seats in the house after putting on a Coffee Can Matinees, Bread Wrapper Matinee, Milk Bottle Cap Matinee, etc.

The theatre ties up with the distributor (of milk, coffee, bread, etc.) to admit free any kid bringing an empty coffee can, milk bottle cap, or bread wrapper of the merchant's. The distributor pays the theatre an agreed price for each such coffee can, milk bottle cap or bread wrapper presented for admission.

In addition, the co-operating distributor announces the matinee in co-op ads and heralds. There is one case on record where a theatre tied up with a flour distributor on this stunt and the demand for the particular brand became so great that local stores which did not carry it were forced to take it in stock.

5. Tie up with fraternities, classes, schools, clubs, etc., for special theatre parties. If you hear of one of these youngster groups planning a party of some sort, convince their leaders that a theatre party would be just the way to start the evening. Offer them the inducement of a specially roped off, reserved section for them provided they buy a block of tickets in advance.

Original Stunts

The stunts suggested in this manual by no means exhaust all the possibilities. They need not be worked precisely as given here nor need they alone be used.

Run over the list again, picking out the ones that seem to fit your individual theatre and town. Then adapt them to your situation, or devise others. If you do, Lent shouldn't hurt your business too greatly.

NEW JERSEY GO-GETTERS!

by AL ZIMBALIST

The results of the first "Go-Getters" column seemed to have quite an effect on the Jersey Boys . . . notwithstanding . . . New York. Before the day was done the writer had telephonitis. The column evidently had a great effect on the boys, for they were more than willing to pass on hints of exploitation, advertising and salesmanship in the theatre. Now we're getting somewhere!

But let's get on with the news. . . . Bill Phillips, the demon Loew showman in Newark, has arranged one of the most eye-provoking window displays we have ever seen this side of the Hudson. . . . Janice Rentchler, crackerjack pressagy of the Skouras Terminal, deserves much of what the executives give when a picture is properly sold. The pix was M. in Uniform. . . . Clem Murphy of Warners' Branford hit the ball right between the orbs on "Hard to Handle." . . . He borrowed an ass . . . and covered it with the following copy: "If you think this ass is hard to handle . . ." see James Cagney at the Branford, etc., etc. The stunt drew many laughs and plenty of kopeks at the b.o.

Eddie Kane promoted a Cranford Romance film and had his young daughter play one of the baby leads . . . the result of which, of course, really brought in a lot of extra dough (Can You Take a Tip). . . . Here's the new line-up of District Managers for Warners' in Jersey: C. L. Dooley, Tony Williams, Bob Paskow and Eddie Batlan. Cam Dooley was moved up (or down) the line as chief booker with Artie Siegel as associate. . . . Maurie Stahl giving the Terminal the twice-over . . . but smiled joyously when he couldn't get into the theatre. . . . M. in Uniform did the trick. . . .

HOW MANAGERS GET GRAY YOUNG:

Too many attractions billed in front of the theatre at one time, dividing interest and causing confusion . . . not enough attention given to most important selling medium—the attraction board or marquee (to you). . . . Copy not made up by manager, but left to some other attache; poor spelling and phrasing; copy without punch or selling value; letters not properly spaced or firmly joined, light leaking out; one idea not followed throughout campaign.

Lights out in sign on marquee . . . front light on too early or too late . . . former means a waste of current, latter a loss of patrons. . . . Should be checked by manager personally . . . front billing not changed until morning of the show; change should be made immediately after closing performance . . . not opening box-office punctually; closing box office before scheduled closing time . . . no sign on box office announcing time of opening and start of performance. Should be prominent announcement of this at all times during closed hours . . . cashiers carrying funds from the box office alone. This should be done by manager. And if you're not bored by the foregoing (not fiction) facts . . . drop us a line and we'll continue. . . .

Journeyed down to Ridgewood two Tuesdays ago at P. M. time to get another glance at the new Warner there. Arrived just in time to enjoy the crowds milling about b.o. REASON: Frank Costs, the manager, tied up the town newspapers and ran a double reviewers' contest . . . the people rushed to see if they were winners. . . . Elliot Kadison of the Stanley Newark still clinging to Postal cards as a special inducement to doctors and professionals. Larry Conley and Mickey Kippel are hitting them high, wide and handsome in Jersey City with Round Table and original ideas. . . . The George Kelly stampede for business has made the Skouras Fox-Hackensack management sit up and take notice. . . . Here's how he's doing it: "New Theatre Front (promoted)—Stage Weddings; Fashion Show, Victor Recording Contest; Famous Band Night (a promotion) and other public inducements.

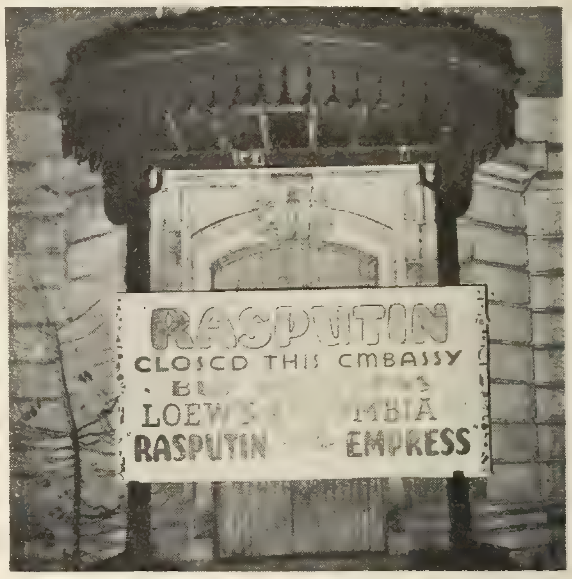
And so to bed with this supposed column with hopes that Maestro Lewis will be pleased with these views. . . . See you again, you showmen from other territories . . . who will certainly have to step on it to come half way near New Jersey!!!

SENSATIONAL STUNT PULLED BY GILMORE IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

When "Rasputin and the Empress" was road-showed at Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C., Eddy Gilmore, publicity director, pulled a stunt that the gang over in the Capital City are still talking about.

Eddy reminds us that when the Czar's regime in Russia went up in smoke his Washington ambassador made a midnight exit and hasn't been heard from since. Meanwhile the Embassy stands vacant in all its gloomy glory on exclusive Sixteenth Street. The state department is holding the property for the Romanoff heirs.

The fact that Rasputin played such an important part in Russian history and the downfall of the Czar intrigued Gilmore's fertile imagination to such an extent that during the picture's engagement in the city a 10-foot by 5-foot sign found its way across the entrance of the Embassy. How it got there Eddy will never tell you, but he will testify that pictures of the stunt appeared with INS, AP, Underwood and Underwood and Wide World. Police rushed around and took the banner down as soon as it was reported to headquarters, but not before the cameras clicked off a film record of the scandal.



We think all the fellows in this organization will agree that the above was a cuckoo of a stunt and the accompanying photograph is ample proof that it happened. Thanks to Gilmore for sending us the evidence and we'll certainly hope to hear again from this resourceful showman.

SAM SUGGS REGALED PATRONS WITH OLD TIME STAGE WEDDING

We note that our old friend, M. S. "Sam" Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., recently entertained his patrons with a Stage Wedding, garnished with all the most up-to-date trimmings.

Approximately twenty merchants were tied-in for the promotion of gifts to give the bride and groom a good start on their merry-go-round, including a two-way trip to a neighboring city, the best of hotel accommodations, etc. One of the most prominent ministers in the city officiated at the ceremony and a local florist contributed an entire setting of palms, cut flowers and flowers for the bride and her attendants. A stage set was made up of white scrolls at each side of the palms, with effect background of a rising sun. This was thrown on the magnascope curtain when the ceremony was under way, during which time the organist started playing "At Dawning." A capacity house greeted the affair.

We also hear that Sam recently tied-up with a number of merchants for give-away of two new automobiles during the past two months and will look forward to hearing in full concerning the campaign he used. In the meantime we're taking this means of letting him know that the Club is mighty glad to get a line on his activities.

Gilmore's Gag!

Eddy Gilmore, who handles publicity for Loew's Theatre, Washington, D. C., put over an effective scheme for "Cynara" by offering free admissions to every man, woman or child who could and would recite word for word Ernest Dowson's poem. Several hundred applied to Manager R. R. Drissel but only one succeeded in getting away with a perfect recitation.

Talking "Mummy"

When "Mummy" played the Mayfair Theatre, New York City, it was arranged to have a man impersonate the character and enact the catchline—"It Comes to Life"—by means of a "mike" and loudspeaker hook-up.

At the side of the main entrance, about on the level with head and shoulders, a replica of the Mummy was placed in a large shadowbox effect. Pedestrians were invited to ask questions and the character agreed to answer to the best of his ability and to describe what kind of clothes the person was wearing, etc.

The "mike" picked up the questions, took them to a man concealed at another point, from which the answers were shot back to a loudspeaker hidden within the box. A special police detail was necessary to handle the crowds while the gag was in use.

THORSTAD STARTED SOMETHING WHEN HE BECAME AN EDITOR

Every now and then the Club's attention is called to instances of newspapers started by theatre managers to fill some publicity want in their localities. This time, ladies and gentlemen, permit us to present our most recent recruit to the editorial ranks—Dick Thorstad, manager of the Grand Theatre, West Palm Beach, Sunny State of Florida, U. S. A.

Dick runs a theatre catering to colored trade only. A short time ago he made some alterations, including new rest rooms, repainting and other decorations and could not get any publicity on the change because, for perfectly good reasons, he doesn't advertise his attractions in local newspapers. So he started a local colored weekly and found that a newspaperman's career, in addition to managing a theatre, wasn't to be taken too lightly. He kept it going for three weeks and then turned it over to one of the local negroes who was equipped to handle the entire job.

As a result of the above move the paper has become very popular in Dick's community and is a going concern, according to his own word for it and judging from the amount of advertising carried in the copies we have at hand. In return for getting the paper started Dick formed an agreement with the new management to carry his programs and other publicity free of charge. The paper has paid for itself from the start.

All of which is very interesting for reason that Thorstad solved his publicity problem and not only came out a winner but provided his community with a popular news and advertising medium. Good work, Dick, and let's hear from you some more.

REPLICA OF A SWEAT BOX SECURED PLENTY PUBLICITY FOR HOWE

An improvised "sweat box" built along the lines allegedly used by some prison camps, proved a live means of enlisting publicity both on part of passers-by and in local newspapers, when used for "Fugitive" by Walton B. Howe, manager of the Uptown Theatre, Gardner, Mass.

He secured some old lumber from a local building wrecker and with his helpers went to work on a box and all the accessories which are supposed to go with the scheme, such as a stock, chains, etc. A small card read: "Reproduction of a Prison Sweat Box Used in Prison Camps—Don't Fail to See 'I Am a Fugitive.'" (Dates.)

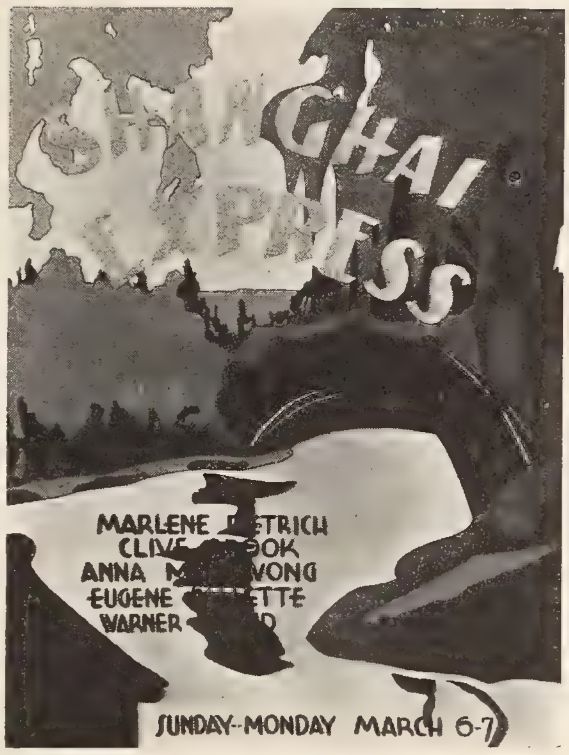
The gag was good for a number of stories in the local paper and the High School class in Civics, making a study of prison camps at that time, came down in a group to see the exhibit.

Howe wisely advises that no particular prison camp be named in connection with this sort of exploitation.

Just Like Old Times!

Approximately 25 big Texaco tankers and several pieces of fire-fighting equipment crashed up Broadway last week to Columbus Circle, cut through the Park and turned into 5th Avenue in celebration of Ed Wynn's personal appearance at the Capitol Theatre. As most everybody knows, Ed has an iron-clad contract with Texaco on "Fire-Chief." It was the biggest bally seen on Broadway in many a moon.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!



drawn by ARCHIE SCHULER

A DISPLAY and a poster occupy the stage for this week's Poster Art series. The display, above, is from the workship of Archie Schuler of the Strand Theatre in Crawfordsville, Ind., and is typical of the fine work he always turns out for that theatre.

The poster below is from a frequent contributor to this series, Darryl Horsfall of Warners Theatre, in Elmira, N. Y.

Darryl's fine likeness of Jimmy Cagney is really an inspiration to other artists who are striving for the same realistic results in their posters. There is a real box office pull to the poster and is one of the many good reasons why the fronts of Warners theatre in Elmira are always attractive.

ELECTION PAST, BUT WE MUST TELL WHAT MONTIEL PUT OVER

News of what showmen did around election time to put their theatres before the public is somewhat belated at this season, but we cannot pull the curtain on activities of '32 without commenting on the fine tie-up made by Ricardo Montiel, manager of the Saenger Theatre, Mobile, Ala., to provide returns for a host of local citizens interested in receiving returns hot off the press wires.

Monteil made arrangements with a local newspaper to hold a rousing theatre party at reduced admission for this occasion and received in return front and full-page publicity for his house and current attraction. The concession in admission, stated the first time this had ever been done, was absorbed by the newspaper, presumably for giving the theatre such fine publicity for the party.

This is the first time we've received word of Monteil's activities in a long time and his election stunt would have been commented upon many weeks ago had it come to hand then. We hope he will keep in touch with the Club more regularly in the future.

EARLE OSCAR STOOD 'EM UP AND OUT WITH AN AUTOMOBILE NIGHT

A flash from Athens, Ala., where Earle Oscar serves out amusement to the Athenians at the Ritz Theatre, informs us that the final night of an auto give-away campaign found over 400 patrons, with cash in hand, excluded from witnessing the show because of lack of even S. R. O.

The campaign ran for thirteen weeks and a tie-up with merchants featured the give-away of $25 every Monday for the first twelve weeks, with the auto climax act on the thirteenth.

We take it that Earle's customers were keenly interested in owning a new automobile, and who wouldn't be in these times! In addition, interest was kept at the proper pitch by the twelve consecutive minor give-aways promoted from the merchants. Good work on the part of Oscar, and we'll be looking for more regular reports from Athens in the future.

GREATHOUSE FOUND MISSING CHILD WHO SAW FILM 4 TIMES

A recent note from A. H. Kaufman, of the Educational Film Exchange of Kentucky and Tennessee, calls the attention of Miss Anna Bell Ward, vice president and general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., to editorial page mention concerning one of her theatres in a Louisville newspaper.

It seems that Guy Greathouse, manager of the Virginia Theatre in Somerset, received S.O.S. over the telephone one Saturday night from a distracted mother of a missing 10-year-old daughter. "I wish you would see if you can find her," said the mother. "She left home at 1 o'clock to attend the matinee at your theatre."

Getting a complete description of the girl, Guy began a search and finally discovered her in the fifth row, where she was seeing the picture for the fourth time. Greathouse prevailed upon her to report to her mother.

NO FEE; NO DUES; JUST SIGN BLANK!

H. R. MARTIN
has the job of helping Bert Silver manage the Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich., and we want him to know that he, too, is a most welcome addition to the ranks of the Round Table army. We haven't much data to pass along concerning Martin but trust that he'll shoot along additional information in the future. With two Club representatives in Greenville this department ought to be kept informed on what's going on in the show-business out there and we'll be looking to both Martin and Silver to fulfill their obligations as newly elected Round Tablers.

is assistant to the general manager of the Alamo, Mozart and Lincoln Theatres, Milwaukee, Wis., which is euough of a job to keep any one man's time pretty well occupied. We also have his application for membership in the Club at hand and now that he is a duly elected Round Tabler we'll be looking forward to hearing what he and his chief are doing to sell shows in their Milwaukee neighborhoods. Jot down accounts of what stunts you've been using in recent weeks to boost trade, Earle, so we can pass the word along to your brother showmen. We'll be looking for your next letter.

WALT. B. BRADLEY
operates the Moon Theater out in Neligh, Neb., and he's another showman to join this week's crop of newly elected Round Tablers. Neligh is where J. C. Jenkins, the Herald's roving representative hangs his hat when he's not roving, so we're going to look for some hot reports from Bradley and serve notice on J. C. right now to see that his home-towner doesn't fall down on the job. With all the sights that J. C. sees the two of them ought to be able to cook up some mighty good stunts. So let's hear from you, Bradley.

is the manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Robinson, Ill., and we're also taking this opportunity to let all Round Tablers know that Joe is now a full fledged member of this outfit. He is thoroughly in accord with the work being done by this organization, has found this department helpful in the past and now wishes to put his shoulder to the wheel. Okay, Hewitt, and the way to do this is to shoot along an account of that last stunt you used to get good results at the box office. Let's hear from you.

holds down the job of production man for Howard Waugh, alias the "Old Colonel from Dixie," manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and his name was proposed for Club membership by none other than "Old Doctor Penetro" himself. Welcome to the gang, Jean, and now it's up to you to keep your Club informed on what you are doing to carry out your end of the many excellent campaigns planned by the "Old Maestro". It is interesting to note that you, too, are a graduate of Old Doc Penetro's famous university and we'll await your contributions to this department with much interest. Shoot them along.

is located out in Carson, Iowa, where he operates the Dreamland Theatre, and we also have his application for Club membership at hand. Harold doesn't class himself on his card as manager, so we'll assume that he's an owner-manager. The Club will be glad to hear what he is doing to boost box office receipts at his theatre, and if he'll send this information along we'll see that it's passed on to his fellow showmen.

HARRY BLACK is the assistant manager of the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, Canada, and we're also glad to add his name to this week's crop of new Round Tablers. At the present time and until a permanent appointment is made, Harry is functioning as skipper of the house and has his hands full trying to keep over 1,600 seats filled with paying customers. Here's hoping he gets the appointment himself and, in the meantime, will be looking for word as to what he's doing for the good old cause of showbusiness. Calgary is Round Tabler Pete Egan's home town and through Pete's frequent contributions we have a line on what's going on at the Palace. News of the Capitol will be a welcome addition, so let it come along, Harry.

hails from out in Gallatin, Mo., where he operates the Courter Theatre. Since the theatre bears his name, we're going to take it for granted that he's the owner-manager and let him know right now that we're glad to add his name to the ever-growing list of new members of the Round Table Club. We hope he'll take time off at the first opportunity and let his fellow Club members know what he is doing to keep the wolf away. What do you say, Courter? Send along a batch of your ideas on what it takes these days to stay in the black.

is the skipper of the Silver Family Theatre in Greenville, Mich., and we're going to assume that his house is something of a "Family" affair, judging from its name and independent policy of operation. Bert, too, has sent along his application for Club membership and we'll soon be telling his fellow showmen what he and his assistant, H. R. Martin, are doing to boost box office trade out their way. We note that he carries a 10 piece orchestra, which is interesting in view of the 550 seats. Perhaps next time he gets in touch with his Club he'll furnish some information concerning that end.

HERE'S THE BLANK

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

Name ....

Position ....

Theatre ....

Address ....

City ....

State ....

AVECE T. WALDRON
is the manager and part-owner of the Blue Moon Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., and we are glad to record that with her application at hand the Club has another showwoman in its ranks. An interesting letter indicates that Miss Waldron will become a valuable contributor to this department, for it not only contained her membership application but outlined a stunt she recently employed to good advantage. We will see that this is published in a forthcoming issue. Miss Waldron also expressed her approval of the "What the Picture Did for Me" section of the Herald, which will be duly passed on to that department.

is another assistant manager to enroll among the many assistants already listed in the Round Table Club and we want him to know that we're mighty glad to have him with us. Griffith helps Jack Sanson, who is one of the old timers in this outfit, manage the Roger Sherman Theatre over in New Haven, Conn., and was promoted to his present position from the post of chief of service. With Sanson's able coaching we predict it won't be very long before we'll be mailing Griffith one of the "framed certificates". In the meantime this department will depend upon both him and his boss to send word of what they're doing to boost trade at the Roger Sherman.

manages the Broadmoor Theatre over in Bloomfield, N. J., a house owned and operated by Rhonheimer, Rapf and Rudin and formerly managed by David Becker, resigned. We are also taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club and want him to know that he's a most welcome addition to the ranks. Russell is working under circuit supervision of Harry Stearn, whom you've read about many times in this department. Harry did some great work while down in Pennsylvania cities and he's still turning out the same brand of showmanship over in Jersey. Edwin has been associated with Warner Bros. theatres for the past five years in various capacities and worked his way up from the ranks. We'll be telling you more about both these members in forthcoming issues.

hails from out in Sunnyside, Wash., where he manages the Liberty Theatre, and we are indebted to Arch Bartholet, division manager for the Mercys, for forwarding Carl's application for Club membership. News from the Yakima Valley has been a bit scarce since Frank Hill departed and we're mighty glad to have another interested representative at Sunnyside. Jones is comparatively a newcomer to showbusiness and we hear he likes this department. That's always gratifying to hear and we shall hope that he turns out to be a live member of this outfit. Shoot along word of what you are trying out in the way of box office stunts, Carl, and we'll pass the information along.

is another new recruit to join the ever-increasing army of Round Tablers and he's the fellow who turns out all that interesting art work for Howard Waugh, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn. If Earle can persuade the "Old Maestro" to charge up a little photography now and then to that portion of the weekly budget, we'll predict that this department will be in line for some interesting material. Earle is also a graduate of "Doc Penetro's" school of showmanship and if you know anything at all about the Old Doc, you'll know what we mean. Let's see some of your work, Earle.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified

DECENTRALIZING SEEN IMPORTANT

Approbation of decentralization in theatre operation, currently engaging the attention of the industry, is indicated in the conclusion that "more of the personal element in the operation of the theatre will help bring back the large audience once conditions improve, and the trend is in that direction," in an article on the motion picture business in the New York Evening Post, one of a series surveying key industries of America. Predicting the motion picture will be the first to show a steady comeback, the article continues:

"History of the theatre . . . shows that entertainment is one of the first things sought following any sort of debacle. . . . Psychologically the mass will want to be entertained as soon as it can get some of the economic worries off its mind. There apparently is no reason that with fair judgment the industry cannot overcome its present derelictions and be among the first to show a steady comeback. It was the last big industry hit by the decline and should be among the first to feel the upward trend."

Freuler to Supervise Company Product

Supervision of all Freuler Film Associates production will be personally undertaken by John R. Freuler, president, who leaves New York for the Coast next week and will make his headquarters there. Charles L. Glett, vice-president in charge of distribution, will remain in New York to handle sales and executive operations.

Freuler Films will leave the International Studios, Hollywood, where the present product is being made, to take over complete operation of another independent studio and establish three permanent production units.

"No longer will we depend on someone else to make our pictures," Mr. Freuler said this week. "There may be exceptions to this, of course, but in the main we will make our own product. Every studio employee will be on our payroll, and our directors will be signed for a given number of pictures."

Plans are underway for a convention of Freuler sales executives.

Burton King, present production head of Freuler Films, will sever his connection with the company upon completion of "Deadwood Pass," now in production. There are 24 Freuler features scheduled for the 1933-34 season.

Stevenson To Lecture

Edward Stevenson, president of Visugraphic Pictures, Inc., begins this week a series of five lectures on the motion picture in advertising at New York University. Films illustrating the subject will be used.

Robert North with Columbia

Robert North has joined Columbia as a supervisor and production executive at the Coast studio. Long connected with the stage and screen, Mr. North goes to Columbia from Fox. Previously he was with First National.

BROADWAY BAD—Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez, Ginger Rogers. Three great troupers surpass themselves in a story of the heart, hardness and glitter of the world's most notorious street.

HUMANITY—Ralph Morgan of "Rasputin," Alexander Kirkland of "Strange Interlude" and Boots Mallory. This throbs with every emotion known to the human heart.

PLEASURE CRUISE—Genevieve Tobin, Norman Foster, Roland Young, Herbert Mundin, Ralph Forbes, Minna Gombell. A shipload of names and a boatload of merry thrills. Packed with timely exploitation.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST—Loretta Young, Gene Raymond, O. P. Heggie, Jesse L. Lasky's first FOX production—a guarantee of super showmanship.

BONDAGE—Dorothy Jordan, Alexander Kirkland. Beyond question one of the most powerfully unusual and strikingly dramatic stories of the year.

SAILOR'S LUCK—James Dunn and Sally Eilers reunited . . . with Sammy ("What Price Glory") Cohen and Victor Jory. Made by the director of "What Price Glory" and "Cock Eyed World." In the Bag.

ADORABLE—Janet Gaynor and Henry Garat. A new sweetheart for Janet Gaynor in a gay, musical, sprightly romance . . . entertainment.

5¢ A GLASS—Another with music and a title that foams over with showmanship. Cast to be announced.

THE POWER AND THE GLORY—Spencer Tracy, sensation of "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," in a role that brings out every ounce of his dramatic genius.

Now you know why the man who plays the FOX Cavalcade of Hits is the envy of the trade.

PITKIN, WOMEN, MOVIES

AN itinerant salesman stopped his Ford in front of a crossroads cabin in the Ozarks and sat a moment regarding a native sitting in the sunshine, chair tilted against the wall and chewing a snuff stick. A lop-eared dejected hound sat alongside, giving forth doleful sounds.

"What's the matter with that dog?" the salesman asked. "I've been hearing him from a mile down the road."

The native dipped his snuff stick again and looked at the dog.

"He's a-setting on a chestnut burr an' he's too damn lazy to move."

For the same reason we sometimes listen to the radio and suffer rather than cross the room to turn it off. It has an incidental value, however. A sample of the air and its wares tends to build up vastly one's respect for the comparative intelligence of the motion picture. Further, if one enjoys getting indignant, and one does, there's always something on the air fit to be sworn about.

The other night, Monday, 9:15 E.S.T., WOR, which means Bamberger and Macy (6% less) department store merchandisers, had a "book hour" and before we were aware of the approach on came the voice of our belligerent book-writing friend, Dr. Walter B. Pitkin, of Dover, N. J., and Columbia University, to say things about his "Life Begins at Forty," a current best seller.

That would have been all very well, but egged on by the book peddlers, he felt it necessary to indicate something about what women might do, "after forty," besides play bridge. Dr. Pitkin's book, like most of his writing, is about and mostly for men. It ought to be. He knows men. But as a homeloving father of a large family, what he knows about women is not a book.

"Unfortunately," quoth Dr. Pitkin on the air, "for many thousands of women life does end at forty—but it does not need to. There are many useful activities available. They can for instance concern themselves with cleaning up the government—and the movies."

We know what's the matter with the government—the human race. But our real concern is the screen. One wonders what makes erudite Dr. Pitkin, and many others, believe that the approach of the menopause brings on a state of special qualification for supervision of the art and industry of the motion picture. Certain related biological and social phenomena are observable through all forms of life. In the barnyard, for instance, it is not uncommon for old hens past the egg producing stage to grow spurs, learn to crow and start to pick fights. They remain, however, imitation roosters.

The motion picture can well concern itself with the tastes, impulses and expressions of women, the women of the vast majority, busily concerned with the interests of their offspring and the life of the family. But the attitude of the feminine mind detached from those concerns is typified in the old saw about "old maid's children." For that reason mothers are vastly more important to the screen and of proper influence than those about to be grandmothers. The motion picture, discussed from press, pulpit and club rostrum, is accursed by the attentions of persons busy about it because they can find nothing else to do. Bridge is a blessing and a revival of the art of knitting would be cosmic relief. The world and its art of the screen properly belong to those engaged in living, not in talking about it or self-delegated to ordering the lives of others. Regulation of the motion picture is not a career for the sterile years. Let bridge begin at forty.

SHUBERT'S RETREAT

NOW comes word that Mr. J. J. Shubert, the theatrical producer, has abandoned his New York headquarters and will center his dramatic activities in Chicago. He has gone, it is quoted, "because New York is too sophisticated" and because, in consequence, "plays that go over big on Broadway get a cool reception from the rest of the country."

What with this and that in the Shubert situation one can observe that this is the press story and any number of other factors may be concerned, but the fact does remain that that which is Shubert has gone west.

If Mr. Shubert is looking for a capital of the stage, the stage on which the institution of Shubert rose, prospered and grew arrogant in success, he is really off to a Never-never land. When Charles Frohman went down on the Titanic, no successor developed. When David Belasco went out a couple of years ago, his passing closed a chapter of tradition, ended a career, but left no open niche of opportunity. We are presently to find, too, that that is the story as well of Florenz Ziegfeld. The stage, the old stage of the ages, dies and its masters with it. The capital of the stage, as maybe Mr. Shubert will discover, is a place in history, not geography.

The beginning of the end was written clearly back in 1903 when the story picture was born in the Edwin S. Porter drama of "The Great Train Robbery." Formal entry of the passing over of the custody of the drama to the new medium was made the other night when Mr. Percy Hammond, a dean of dramatic critics, sat down to write for the Herald Tribune of New York what he thought of "Cavalcade," as presented by the screen.

Mr. Shubert can flee Broadway, but he cannot turn back the years. There is no "Road" and it goes nowhere. For better or for worse, the burdens of the dramatic art are upon the screen. Nothing can be done about it but to make pictures.

Motion pictures are being forced to pay 10 to 100 per cent more for newspaper advertising than other businesses. This despite the efforts of the theatres to fight off the depression with an actual increase of advertising at a time when all other classes of advertisers have made drastic reductions in their budgets.

Now, confronted with refusals of rate reductions while merchants have received them, the theatres have had to reconcile their appropriations to the lower patronage, though not in the same proportion as other users of the columns of the daily press.

True, some progress has been made toward a more equitable level. A few of the more important newspapers are beginning to recognize the passing of the old days when the phrase "amusement rates" had a velvety meaning all its own and that theatres are not to be classed with itinerant peddlers and bootleggers. But that discrimination against theatre advertising continues as a general practice is evidenced in the accompanying table.

10 to 15 Per Cent of Gross

Proper merchandising of the theatre's program in most situations requires the expenditure of a prohibitive percentage of gross. The theatreman raises the question: What other business, paying taxes on large real estate holdings and other investments, spends 10 to 15 per cent of gross receipts in newspaper advertising? Many theatres are doing this today.

The "amusement" or "theatrical" rate is a relic of the pre-picture days when theatrical advertising consisted of "legit" road shows, circuses and other itinerant attractions. Local business men resented the fact that the receipts of these enterprises were going out of town. There was little, if any, financial responsibility in many cases, so the papers demanded cash in advance and at a premium rate. Theatre advertising in those days was confined to small space, almost directory cards, and the publicity given was frequently many times the paid space.

Outdoor advertising had the biggest play and got most of the theatrical money.

The "Free Publicity" Misnomer

With the advent of the screen, some newspapers established a motion picture rate, slightly lower than the "amusement" rate, but still far above the commercial or "merchants'" rate. The majority of newspapers, however, applied the standing amusement rate, though the motion picture enterprise used larger space than regular amusement advertising, and never missed a day in the dailies. Theatres had to fight for publicity representation; it was only when the public demanded film news that the newspapers really established motion picture departments comparable to the so-called drama columns.

The only general explanation offered for the excess rates is that newspapers give "free publicity," though some publishers do say that the higher charge is due to grouping of the advertisements on one page, thereby giving theatres more favorable position. But all newspapers themselves prefer this arrangement as they know the value of a theatrical page with all advertising concentrated upon it. There are exceptions—where the theatre and commercial rates for similar lineage are the same or nearly so. But in those cases the theatre seldom receives any reader space worth mentioning.

In the great majority of instances, theatres are paying not only excess rates, but also for every line of publicity received, and they must beg for it even while actually paying for it, and when it does get in, for the most part it has been accepted only because of its news value.

Editorial independence of advertising is a fine ideal, but why charge the excess rate and still reserve the right to reject all publicity? the advertiser asks. He goes farther than that and says that in most situations he would gladly sign a commercial rate contract with the newspapers and promise never to present any "publicity" matter.

Theatres in Yonkers, N. Y., for example, recently signed just such a commercial contract at a rate of 98 cents an inch, as compared with the theatrical rate of more than $2.

In New York City, where a step forward has been achieved in winning business-like recognition of theatres, all but two newspapers now have a contract run-of-paper rate for theatre advertising. This has resulted in rate revisions which have encouraged theatres to use more lineage. The New York American has a theatre rate of $1 a line and the run-of-paper contract calls for 65 cents a line; the News, with 1,250,000 circulation, recently established R. O. P. rates and neighborhood theatre rates. First the News granted all theatres a 5 per cent rebate and then the R. O. P. rates brought the original $1.60 a line rate down to $1.42. In cases like the Bronx theatres, which paid the full $1.60 rates, they now pay 90 cents; in Brooklyn, rates are now at 70 cents as against a previous 90 cents (the News has 500,000 circulation in Brooklyn). The New York Journal's R. O. P. rate is now $1.25 against the original $1.50 rate, although the Journal has not yet given the theatres the same rate consideration it has granted to other classes of advertisers.

The run-of-paper rate idea (on advertisements of 100 lines or more) has made little headway outside of New York City. In Washington, the Herald and the Star have found it a profitable experiment. The Washington News has just lowered its contract rate from 25 cents to 22 cents.

Many newspapers that give their agency advertisers and others a 2 per cent discount for cash by the 10th of the month following publication, refuse to grant the theatres the cash discount, but insist on weekly payment.

There are still some papers that dictate to the theatres what size advertisment they must use on Sundays.

In Kansas City the Star demands a 500-line "ad" on Sundays if the theatre is to get the benefit of a 50-cent rate. Any smaller lineage is 75 cents a line, out of all reason for the city circulation involved. Though Friday openings are in general vogue at the present time, the publisher says, "We don't want your big advertisements on your opening day; we want them on Sundays." Even when theatres guarantee to spend the same amount of money and only ask the right to apportion their lineage on the days when it will do them the most good for their opening, the publishers turn a deaf ear.

And with all the unreasonable rates and burdensome restrictions on theatre advertising, in most instances those conditions not only do not increase the newspapers' revenue, but actually tend to cut the size of the advertisement and prevent the theatre man from properly selling his shows.

In prosperous times theatres used their money freely and without question on advertising, but under present conditions they are now spending all they can. If they received more favorable rate consideration, they probably would not reduce their budgets, but would use more space in order to improve attendance. Empty stores appeal to newspapers, while, apparently, empty theatres leave them cold, as far as rate concessions are concerned.

There are a few exceptions, for instance in Boston. Two years ago, after considerable controversy in which the Publix theatres carried the torch, the situation in Boston was improved. The Herald-Traveler, which for years had extracted $1 a line for less than 300,000 circulation, cut that rate and the theatres are now paying 60 cents on contract. Even this is far above the local mercantile rate or the national commercial rate. The Globe followed with a reduction from 60 cents to 50 and other papers did similarly, but the Boston Transcript still charges the local theatres more than 100 per cent above its national commercial rate and gets practically no theatrical lineage as compared with other papers.

In Baltimore the Sun newspapers (morning and evening) charge the theatres $1 a line with less than 150,000 circulation for each paper. Merchants pay from 20 to 25 per cent less than theatres. The Baltimore News, with only 150,000 circulation, charges 60 cents a line for theatres, just a little less than the New York American with nearly 400,000 circulation. The Baltimore Post, with about 75,000 circulation, charges 30 cents a line, recently reduced from 40 cents. This might be compared with a 31-cent rate for 150,000 circulation of the Cleveland News, but even Cleveland merchants pay less than the 31-cent theatrical rate.

The policy of the Hearst papers outside of New York City presents a contradiction. Despite Mr. Hearst's heavy financial interest in theatres and motion pictures and his known sympathy toward the show world, his papers, outside New York, have refused to give theatres a lower rate in the present emergency.

Hearst papers always have got a premium rate from the theatres and in some cities have granted important rate reductions to merchants.

Reductions and Lineage

The Hearst Detroit Times' refusal to give theatres there some relief has resulted in the Times carrying only about half or 60 per cent of the lineage used by leading theatres in the Detroit News, the other evening paper in that city, which has granted a reduction to theatres.

The New York Times is one of the few papers in the country which has for a long time had a theatre rate that is almost the same as the mercantile rate. The theatre rate at present is 95 cents and the mercantile 90 cents per line. For this reason the Times has no run-of-paper rate to theatres. When a recent reduction was made to all advertisers the theatres were included. The New York Herald-Tribune has made no R. O. P. contracts with theatres but granted the same rebate reduction as given to merchants. In New York in general theatres rates come closer to a parity with other lines of business than in any other city.

But an example of wide spread between commercial rates and theatre rates is found in Washington. The Post charges 40 cents a line, with 68,000 circulation, but the national commercial advertiser can buy the same space at 22 cents, less 15 per cent commission. The News, recently cutting the amusement rate to 25 cents, still sells space to its national commercial advertisers at 18 cents or less. The Star sells to national commercial advertisers at 25 cents, less 15 per cent commission, but charges the 365-days-per-year theatre advertisers 40 cents for the same circulation. The national advertiser has no local investment usually, but the theatre circuits are big property owners and taxpayers in most instances, and employers of local labor.

And the theatre advertising manager says that nobody yet has been able to give a sensible answer to the question "What is a theatrical rate?"

PRODUCTION COSTS NOT CUT, MUST BE HALVED, SAYS SAMUEL GOLDWYN

Producer Commends Schenck's Management; Says Distributing Any Sam Katz Pictures Will Depend on Product

Declares Large Theatre Circuits Are Menace, Hollywood Not Competent to Make More Than 50 Pictures a Year

Production costs have not been reduced, but they must be—50 per cent—for producers are still putting $600,000 into a picture that could be made for $300,000. This from Samuel Goldwyn, in New York from Hollywood to begin a four to eight-week search here and abroad for stories for next season. But before starting on the story expedition the producer set about to put an end to some rumors concerning United Artists—financially and otherwise—and then, quite heatedly, to debunk the picture situation in Hollywood, New York and points north and south. Mr. Goldwyn had no qualms about being quoted; he even suggested it, but he did insist on more than one occasion that he be quoted correctly.

Mr. Goldwyn, evidently acting on behalf of all of the owners of United Artists, brought east a vote of confidence in the management under Joseph M. Schenck, who variously has been reported in recent weeks as preparing to retire, resign or become inactive as president of the distributing corporation. "Joseph M. Schenck will not resign; that's definite and positive," said Mr. Goldwyn. "All of the owners of the company, and these include Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, D. W. Griffith and myself (besides Mr. Schenck) have great respect and a great affection for him. We have no intention of his leaving us."

Points to $3,000,000 Surplus

Mr. Goldwyn explained that, as chairman of the famous jockey club at Agua Caliente, Mr. Schenck is merely engaging in his favorite sport of horse racing, as a hobby, and that this in nowise influences Mr. Schenck's activities at United Artists. "Mr. Schenck has as much right to do this as Mr. Belmont and other leaders in American business."

When Mr. Schenck became head of United Artists on the afternoon of December 5, 1924, the company had a deficit, and now, according to Mr. Goldwyn, it has a surplus of $3,000,000, with cash in banks totaling $2,500,000. "There are not many companies that can show that record in the face of the depression," he added.

"We don't owe a dollar to anyone, there are no bonds or preferred stock outstanding and the owners got back their money long ago, which means that everything now is all velvet."

As to reports that United Artists is preparing to expand its production activities, Mr. Goldwyn said: "We still believe in the old policy of fewer pictures, fewer theatres and better pictures. We believe we are the logical and most advantageous organization for the great star as a distributing medium. We would welcome any great director, great player, great writer, or great picture, but we are definitely not interested in beginners."

At this point, Mr. Goldwyn digressed from the American situation to discuss motion pictures internationally. After telling about the success he has had in having instructors teach English to his newest importation, Anna Sten, who hails from Soviet Russia, Mr. Goldwyn voiced a need for bigger and better support of quality foreign pictures. "They are definitely making progress abroad," he said, "and we should and must lend encouragement."

Speaking officially for the corporation, for Mr. Schenck, the owners and for himself, Mr. Goldwyn said: "Our company is not interested in promotion schemes or stock manipulations, nor will we encourage or permit any one in our organization to go out and manipulate or use United Artists in any way to raise money for the making of motion pictures. United Artists pictures produced independently by the owner members are financed by them."

He said that the company has weathered the economic storm without losing any money and is not now losing on its operations. Mr. Goldwyn referred to the distributing organization.

Up to the Product

Recently there have been circulating on both coasts many and different stories, all unconfirmed, regarding a pending tieup by Sam Katz and United Artists. Mr. Katz decided to engage in production following his resignation at Paramount, where he was known principally for his circuit operations, later assuming additional duties in connection with Paramount pictures. Mr. Goldwyn was most emphatic in clarifying this situation, saying that no deal was under way with Mr. Katz.

The reports had it that Mr. Katz would join United Artists either in an important executive capacity, or as a co-producer with the United owners. When asked whether the company would distribute motion pictures which Mr. Katz might make, Mr. Goldwyn said: "We'll decide that if and when the time comes and after we see the product. Surely we're not going to sign Mr. Katz just on his record as a producer."

Quartered in a luxurious many-roomed suite in the tower of the Waldorf-Astoria on Park Avenue, Mr. Goldwyn engaged in a vigorous tirade at certain current conditions in the picture business. "Anyone declaring that productions costs have come down is a liar, because they haven't. But they will," he said. "Don't believe what they tell you about production costs coming down. They have not been reduced, but they will be—they must be. Reductions of 50 per cent must be effected. They're still spending $600,000 on a picture which could be made just as well for $300,000."

Of the theatre situation Mr. Goldwyn said:

"One-third of the theatres in the country will have to close down, then the other two-thirds will make money, and obviously that's much better than all losing. Big business is over for motion pictures—definitely and positively. The large circuits have failed in their mission and they must now return to the original method of individual operation. These circuits have been a menace to the business. They have been operated unintelligently by standard rules and regulations issued from desks at Times Square and were supposed to govern all situations out in the field, and we all know that one situation differs from another."

Hollywood, particularly, came in for denunciation from Mr. Goldwyn, who said that the production center is not competent to produce any more than 50 pictures yearly, "because there is no more brain power than that available." He added: "Hollywood not only hasn't the mentality to force through 300, 400 or 500 different pictures every year, but, unless this policy is ended, Hollywood will go broke, too, just like the big circuits which over-expanded." Continuing, Mr. Goldwyn said:

"Those theatres throughout the country which were built as monuments in memory of somebody or other must be closed down. They're no good for talkers, anyway—not intimate enough."

"Personalities are killed off quicker in our business than in any other business in the world," he said, and when asked for the solution, he again referred to limited production of good pictures, handled intelligently, suggesting that the large companies should not turn out any more than 10 or 12 features yearly and that these should be roadshown at 25 or 50 cents.

"Half of the people in Hollywood don't belong there. They are incompetent and are just out there collecting salary without contributing anything. The more money some people get, the lazier they get.

"More than half of the writers who are brought to Hollywood go back home without having done anything more than collect salary checks.

Must "Squeeze Out the Water"

"The water must be squeezed out of the entire situation, and squeezed tightly.

"Theatre owners should encourage fewer pictures and longer playdates.

"Not until the day arrives when producers get 50 per cent of the gross intake for their pictures, and theatres get the other 50 per cent, and operate accordingly, will the general situation be corrected in the business. Theatres have no monopoly.

"Many of the 'great' theatre operators are more concerned with the art which is in their lobbies than with the art on their screens.

"Theatre operation is nothing more than good management by a single manager, who can operate more successfully independently; granting, of course, that he has good pictures.

"This is not an industry; it's the show business, a showmanship enterprise for individual handling. Nor is it intended purely for stock manipulations."

RECONSTRUCTION—AND THE STUDIOS

Written at Hollywood

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

INDUSTRY READJUSTMENTS IN THE FORM OF RECEIVERships or otherwise, now taking place, are of very pertinent concern to Hollywood. In fact, until the influence of these readjustments encompasses the production situation they will not have served various of the major purposes intended.

In face of all of the written and spoken criticism which has been expressed in the direction of Hollywood there appears in sharp relief at this time the fact that Hollywood with all of its errors of both omission and commission has contributed only in a decidedly secondary manner to those conditions which have placed the industry in jeopardy.

The mad, headlong plunge into expansions in the theatre field, coupled with the latterly developed incompetence to deal with the problems of operating a vast, far-flung circuit of theatres, has been the principal factor. But the collapse in that direction has been so definite and complete that there remains no likelihood of a return of this policy of destruction at any time in the near future. Meanwhile, however, tremendous losses must be sustained; a huge accumulation of what amounts to hardly more than debris must be cleared away. To the end of making this course practicable the readjustments above noted have been put into effect.

BUT THE RETURN OF THE INDUSTRY TO THAT PLANE AT which it once enjoyed great promise and profit does not involve alone a change in the map of the theatre field—and incidentally the banishment to St. Helena of a number of petty Napoleons—but it also must provide for the correction of a long list of abuses which have grown up in various quarters of the industry, including Hollywood.

The motion picture business issued from the status of a racket in its very early days. Many of the people in it, however, have remained so oblivious of the march of time that to this day they feel they are still in some kind of a racket. They are the persons who build petty dynasties about themselves; persons who are content to see a corporation wrecked provided only they can collect heavily before the day of reckoning arrives and persons who believe that principle and character may be all right elsewhere but that they have no place in the motion picture business.

These and a few other similar specimens are going to figure prominently in the readjustments which are now in order. Those artifices which hitherto have proved adequate defenses for themselves and their rackets are going to be found decidedly insufficient.

The production colony must adjust itself to a changed order —an order which is changed not only for motion picture production but changed for men and affairs the world over. It was not to be expected that despite rumors of disturbed conditions which have percolated through the Rockies into Hollywood that Hollywood should have become particularly excited so long as the heavy remittances from the East continued duly to arrive here. But there will be less money coming to Hollywood out of the East and it will remain for Hollywood to make the best of it.

The creative artist must be compensated substantially—in direct proportion to his or her appeal at the box office. But that vast army of camp followers who have hitched their wagons to the stars of acting, writing and directing are in for a readjustment which we fear in many cases is going to be acutely painful.

Hollywood has made a name for itself—in more ways than one. This is going to result in what may be regarded as a major surgical operation. With the business of motion pictures having become for the time being a losing business and with Hollywood—rightly or wrongly—having a name for reckless expenditure it does not require the services of a prophet to see that the businessmen who are now feeling the pulse of this ailing industry are not going to allow Hollywood to escape without severe attention.

But there remains for Hollywood the satisfaction of knowing that the vast array of figures and data of various kinds which are now being pored over by officials who are going to dictate immediate policies for the industry make amply plain that the attraction on the screen is the one thing that mainly dominates results. While Hollywood has persisted in too many instances in cock-eyed judgments on what to make there is no questioning its mastery in making what it sets out to make. Hence there is no likelihood of Hollywood being submerged.

IN FACE OF ALL OF THE EXISTING TROUBLESOME CONditions there is no more heartening fact than that the business of producing and distributing motion pictures continues right up to the present moment as an exceedingly good business. If the industry were not now afflicted with the havoc due to the vain struggles for power and control in the theatre field it would come very close to earning the palm of being a depression-proof business.

Hence, while immediately a condition of widespread and severe readjustment must be faced it is by no means idle talk to say that as soon as the present emergency is bridged there is every good reason for believing that the industry will again be set on the high road to profitable operation.

This, however, can only be accomplished by, through and with Hollywood. Intelligent and reasonable cooperation on the part of Hollywood in the job of readjustment which now faces the industry will both make possible and will facilitate the reconstruction now in progress.

To the end that Hollywood will continue to be regarded as a partner in the fortunes of the industry, and not as a self-centered obstructor, it is greatly to be hoped that the production colony will enter heartily into the reconstruction processes which are now in order.

MARCH of the YEARS

A review by TERRY RAMSAYE

THE thrills, the laughs, the glamours of yesteryear are born anew on the screen, in a new motion picture conception, just brought into production and christened "March of the Years," a two-reel periodic release.

Many and many a year ago, Mr. H. G. Wells, emerging from his profession as a teacher of science and becoming by tentative steps a writer, evolved a story destined to make him famous. It was entitled "The Time Machine," being the account of the adventures of a scientist with a device by which he could travel backwards and forwards in time, quite as we may in space. "March of the Years" is in essence a time machine. It travels mostly back down the vista of years re-creating for the spectator dramatic moments in what was once the great news of the day.

"March of the Years'" first issue, previewed to a theatre audience at the Playhouse in New Canaan, Connecticut, this week, contains:

BOSS TWEED, CZAR OF NEW YORK—1870. How William Marcy Tweed, the greatest political boss of all time, corrupted the courts . . . how he padded city contracts to the tune of millions . . . how he bought and manipulated votes . . . how he ran the whole town. How Tweed and his henchmen failed to bribe the courageous editor of the New York Times—the newspaper that finally brought about his conviction. How Tweed escaped from prison . . . how he was captured aboard a Spanish freighter . . . and how, at last, bereft of wealth and power, he spent his last days, friendless and alone, in the Ludlow Street Jail.

HOW PROHIBITION GOT ITS START—1880. The indignation of the good, pure damsels of the 80's lights the spark that eventually explodes into national prohibition.

GABY AND MANUEL, A ROYAL ROMANCE—1908. How Manuel II, the last king Portugal ever had, fell in love with the little Parisian actress Gaby Deslys . . . how he took her to Portugal and threw his country into turmoil by giving her the valuable Braganza crown jewels . . . how his family and his advisors pled with him . . . why he had to abdicate and why Gaby had to flee to Paris . . . and what eventually happened to them both.

A STARTLING INVENTION—1896. How an inventor tried to make gallantry easier for gallants with an automatic hat-tipping device . . . how his invention worked . . . and how, believe it or not, it looked.

THE LIZZIE BORDEN SENSATION—1892. The brutal murders that shocked the country. How the mutilated bodies of Andrew Jackson Borden and his wife, Abby—respected citizens of Fall River, Massachusettes—were discovered by quiet, church-going Lizzie Borden, Andrew's daughter by his first wife. What the neighbors said and thought and how and why suspicion fell on Lizzie. How Lizzie was arrested and brought to trial . . . the maze of strange, conflicting testimony that came out of hearings, inquests, and trials . . . the nation-wide controversy that was started. How Lizzie was acquitted after a whole year of litigation.

A BOYISH DREAM CREATES A NEW ERA—1893. How two Dayton, Ohio, brothers, Orville and Wilbur Wright, simply would not stick to business.

The Yankee audiences of three shows at New Canaan liked it immensely after the first few moments of adjustment to the idea that the screen had been invaded by something new.

These re-creations of the sensations and whimsies of yesterday are studio performances by competent casts and produced with all of the facilities and glossy smooth technique of feature picture making. In the role of issue number one appear such players as Mr. and Mrs. Charles Coburn, Doris Rankin, Edward Everett Hale III, Greta Grandstedt, Margaret Mullen, Pedro de Cordoba and Marjorie Lytell—to say nothing of Peter L. Naphen, president of the March of the Years concern, previously a banker and now an actor by dint of his screen demonstration of the trick hat lifter of 1896 in this issue. The effective use of Banker Naphen as a player may be taken as delicate suggestion to the Chase National Bank. That's an idea of what to do with vice presidents. The Guaranty Trust Company alone could supply the screen for years.

To those familiar with the radio programs of Time Magazine, put on the air as "The March of Time," there will be observed considerable kinship of this product in the medium of picture and sound on the screen. "The March of Time" is a sound dramatization of highlights of today's news, while "March of the Years" goes beyond and back of that technique by being in a sense retroactive and serving both eye and ear. This new screen product is of course a derivative idea, evolved, incidentally, by two bright motion picture men who observed that with this and that and the depression they had better have a new notion soon. That is distinctly reminiscent of another big day in screen evolution about 1903, when Edwin S. Porter, cameraman-producer for Edison, observed that the motion picture business was dying on its feet and that if he were to get anywhere he had better start something. The something he started as the result of this distressing condition was "The Great Train Robbery," first of the "story pictures" or photoplays, which have come, as we notice, to be quite an element in the industry. "March of the Years" will achieve no equivalent revolution and re-birth of the art, but it bears promise of doing a deal to the betterment of the generally dull and unhappy aspect of short production. Now that newsreels increasingly tend to interviews with politicians standing against brick walls and a preponderance of shorts is concerned with the process of canning the decomposing remains of vaudeville, there would appear to be special opportunity.

This "March of the Years" is produced by a considerable staff of contributors of effort and ideas, including the two young men referred to above, Louis DeRochemont, variously a naval officer and adventurer of the camera from Raratonga to Paris and New York, and Beverly Jones, for some years a screen editor and director, subsequent to a career with the snare drum in a California University orchestra, where he took an A.B. and a ticket east. Both are members of the Fox Movietone organization, the studios of which concern produced "March of the Years" under contract. The production staff also lists the sardonic and able Michael Clofine, editor of Hearst Metrotone News. Mr. Clofine was once a member of Mr. Hearst's battalion of itinerant managing editors, who, under the ministrations of the late Foster Coates and the then considerably aggressive Arthur Brisbane, flitted about the American landscape putting punch and sensation in Hearst's papers.

Others of the production staff are Ida Jaedicker, Lynn Shores, Herbert Andrews and Joseph Holton, musical component of the product, which considerably contributes to its emotional content, is under the supervision of John Rochetti, conductor, who also cooks a handsome line of spaghetti in his off hours.

"March of the Years" is to be released at intervals yet to be determined. Release negotiations are in progress and presumably will be announced shortly.

First great stellar name of motion pictures goes out with

JAMES J. CORBETT

by TERRY RAMSAYE

WHEN JAMES J. CORBETT DIED IN HIS sixty-sixth year at his home in Bayside, Long Island, last week, the first great stellar name of the motion picture went out. It was at the very dim beginning of the motion picture, so long ago and obscurely that the screen world does not remember, but it was the great name and fame of Corbett which motivated developments of great consequence to the motion picture.

The passing of "Gentleman Jim" is a loss to the Broadway of tradition. He will be missed about the Lambs and the Friars, and by the worshipful youngsters of the streets of Bayside. For almost a generation Jim Corbett has been a great American personality, the exponent of the sport of the prize ring who first conferred upon it some aura of respectability and honor, and who lived, alas, to see it flounder through ill-fame, scandal.

The end had been approaching for a long time for "Gentleman Jim." His death was caused by a cancer, kindly cloaked for him by his doctors as "heart trouble." The first star of the screen, Corbett last appeared before the camera some three years ago, with Mrs. Corbett, in his Bayside garden in lilac time, for a magazine reel.

Corbett's first impingement on the motion picture was in 1895. And how the years do stretch away back yonder! This famous fighter, just now laid to rest in 1933, is the man who defeated the great John L. Sullivan who is the man who beat Jake Kilrain, of Richbourg, Miss., in 1889.

THAT EARLY DAY MOTION PICTURE career of Corbett's was so long ago that even he forgot the earlier facts of it when he came to write his notable biography, "The Roar of the Crowd," a half a dozen years ago. It happened thus. Back in 1895, the Edison peep show Kinetoscope had just emerged upon the market with a "parlor" at 1155 Broadway. Two young-men-about-Broadway, brothers, Grey and Otway Latham, merry frequenters of the Hoffman House, strolled in and hit upon the notion that this new born art of the motion picture could very well purvey pictures of prize fights. They became concessionaires of the Kinetoscope Company and opened a peep-show parlor at 83 Nassau street, presenting a synthetic fight between Michael Leonard and Jack Cushing, a round to a machine, with six machines in the battery. Success prompted ambition and the Lathams sought a better drawing card, the champion, Mr. Corbett.

Corbett signed with the Kinetoscope Exhibition Company, the Latham concern, an exclusive contract to appear in motion pictures for no one else, and to fight six rounds of one minute each—the capacity of the peep show machines — with Pete Courtenay in the presence of the Edison Kinetograph, the recording camera, on a flat car at West Orange.

The Corbett-Courtenay fight, with Gentleman Jim delivering the knockout in the sixth machine, was the sensation of Nassau street and the adjacent region. Crowds stood in line to file past the peep show machines.

This line-up outside the doors gave the Latham brothers something to think about. They decided that the films should be hooked up with a magic lantern so a whole roomful of the spectators could be entertained at once. A lot of involved motion picture history is concerned.

THOMAS EDISON HAD A HALF-COMPLETED projection machine and ample knowledge of the projection problem, but he was not ready to launch such a device while the peep shows were prospering. The Lathams could get no aid in that quarter. They called in their father, Major Woodville Latham, a chemist and scientist, who had a disapproving look at the fight pictures and set about the problem of building a projector, with meanwhile the attentions and services of the technically minded Enoch J. Rector, a college friend of the Latham brothers from Virginia.

The Latham "Pantopticon," a faulty approximation of a projection machine. did manage to put a flickering version of yet another fight on the screen at 156 Broadway, present site of the Westinghouse building, on the astonishing date of May 20, 1895, a full year ahead of the real dawn of the screen's Broadway career up at Koster & Bial's Music Hall in Herald Square.

Meanwhile the Latham projects waned, for reasons that are no part of our story. Enoch J. Rector and another stockholder, Samuel J. Tilden, Jr., son of the famous Tilden who was elected president and counted out of it, departed from the company, acquiring the Corbett contract as they went.

It was the autumn of 1895. Freckled Bob Fitzsimmons, up from Australia came challenging. Dan Stuart, promoter, arranged a fight with Corbett in Texas and got into a legal muddle. The fight was called off and Jim Corbett got considerably annoyed. He handed over the belt to Peter Maher and came back to New York. Meanwhile Rector and Tilden held the rights on the fight. The Maher-Fitzsimmons fight was fought at last across the Rio Grande in Mexico. It lasted about two seconds. Fitzsimmons feinted and swung and Maher came down outside the ring. One spectator from New York sat at ringside and missed the fight entirely, having had a flask at his lips in the moment in which it occurred.

Popular clamor made Corbett resume the title again. Meanwhile Rector evolved a camera of his own, made to take long lengths of film, and a projection machine which he called the Veriscope. It used film wider than the Edison standard, to thwart the duping pirates who were copying all available films at the time.

When at last Corbett went into the ring to face Fitzsimmons on St. Patrick's Day of 1897, the canvas at the edges was painted "Copyrighted by the Veriscope Company," so that any picture made would confess its infringement.

When the battle was over Fitzsimmons was champion and Rector had 11,000 feet of film. It was the longest picture, far the longest, that had ever been made. He returned to New York with it and it ran for half the summer at the Academy of Music in Fourteenth street, on the site now occupied by the Consolidated Gas building. The picture drew more public attention for the screen than any prior effort—and incidentally put the lowbrow brand of pugilism on the screen for many and many a year. It brought the first Pennsylvania effort at restrictive legislation, flowering at last in the classic motion picture censorship of today at Philadelphia.

Corbett back in New York went under the stage management of William A. Brady, ready to promote fight or drama, and appeared in a number of plays.

Meanwhile, since we are talking screen history, Sigmund Lubin of Philadelphia, being unable to dupe the Veriscope pictures, employed two freight handlers to fight for his camera and put out what he advertised as

"The Great Corbett Fitzsimmons Fight"
(In Counterpart)

The Corbett pictures extended the scope of the camera and the projection machine and gave them for the first time the physical capacity to deal with the dramatic product which was presently to be evolved.

The old Corbett contract with the Veriscope company was never cancelled but it became considerably forgotten. In more recent years Corbett appeared in numerous parts in various motion pictures, and from time to time upon the stage.

The roughneck following of the prize ring hated him for years because he beat John L. Sullivan, but "Gentleman Jim" survived to be the best tradition of the ring, and so he died.

THE MAGIC OF EQUITY RECEIVERSHIP

Louis Nizer, Motion Picture Attorney, Presents the How and Why in Everyone's Language

by LOUIS NIZER

What with this and that, some new nomenclature, not to say new processes, are coming into the motion picture industry in these days of readjustment. Prominent among them are the processes called "receivership" and movements thereto related. For the cause of clarification and understanding, and for a realization that some of the horrendous legal words do not really imply disaster, MOTION PICTURE HERALD has invited Mr. Louis Nizer, a person of much legal experience with the affairs of the screen, to make an exposition of the subject. Mr. Nizer is a nationally known figure in the legal affairs of the motion picture, but we shall repeat here the who's who data concerning him appearing in Motion Picture Almanac, which says:

Louis Nizer, prominent attorney and an authority in motion picture law, was born in London, England, on Feb. 6, 1902. The son of Joseph and Bella Nizer, he was educated at Columbia College, B. A., 1922, and Columbia University Law School, LL.B., 1924, where he twice won the Curtiss Oratorical Prize. The United States Government cited him for his oratorical efforts on behalf of Liberty Loan drives. He formed the law firm of Phillips and Nizer in 1926 and in 1928 became attorney and executive secretary of the New York Film Board of Trade. Subsequently he took over special cases for various distributors. For a year he contributed special programs twice weekly over the radio. He contributes articles to periodicals, and continues his own general practice of law in addition to distributor representation. THE EDITOR

The obligation to pay a debt is the first principle recognized by law. Yet when debts become so burdensome that they are crushing, the law sympathetically creates machinery to relieve the debtor. Thus the law of bankruptcy permits a debtor, if he surrenders all his property, to be relieved of his debts so that he may start life over again without the handicap of his past obligations.

With the growth of huge corporations which not only own property but operate large businesses, a more complex problem has arisen. The question is not only how to relieve the corporation of its debts but how to permit it to retain its beneficial property, operate its business and divest itself of obligations which are draining its assets. The law, ever plastic to the demands of changing conditions, has again sympathetically created a device to afford relief. It is the device of equity receivership.

How magical is this comparatively new creation of law? To what extent, if at all, does it relieve the corporation of its onerous contracts and leases while permitting it to retain its valuable property? How much has the obligation to pay a debt been modified? This article discusses several important principles of equity receivership for the benefit of the business man who comes in contact with these practical questions. Because of this purpose academic exhaustiveness is sacrificed in the interest of simplicity.

The Nature of a Receivership

When a corporation goes into receivership the court takes over the administration of its affairs. The receiver is the hand of the court. He is not an agent of the corporation; he is the officer of the court to receive, collect, care for and dispose of the property which has come into the court's custody. The object of the receivership is to avoid the immediate, forced sale of the corporation's property to satisfy pressing creditors. In these days creditors must be protected against their own avarice—for only great sacrifice can result from immediate liquidation in the present market. Receivership makes possible slow and sane liquidation. Unlike bankruptcy, its remedy is applicable even though the corporation is solvent.

The court places its protective wings around the property and prevents interference from third parties, even though they are creditors. No action can be taken by or against the corporation without the sanction of the court. If anything is done in respect to the property it must be done by and through the receiver. No execution upon a judgment can be exercised by the sheriff. The immediate advantage therefore is that no creditor may seize the property of the corporation because of a judgment he may have—and claimants may not even reduce their claims to judgment until they have obtained permission of the court to sue. As one court expressed it, the appointment of a receiver has the same effect as the legislative declaration of a moratorium to prevent creditors' collection of debts during a specific period of time (Scattergood vs. American Pipe & Construction Co., 247 Fed. 712). In these days of depression the wolf may be at the door, but by means of an equity receivership at least the sheriff can be kept away from the door. In this way peace of mind is given to the receiver to work out a salvation for the harassed corporation.

The object of a receivership being to protect the corporation's property, it is frequently necessary to continue the corporation's business. A going concern may salvage its losses, retain its good will, and prevent the destructive depreciation which results from a complete shutting down. So long as the doors of a business are open, its heart beats and there is a chance for recovery. With darkness comes death. Therefore the receiver is given not only custody of the property, but frequently the authority to operate the business.

The receiver being an officer of the court has no more authority than that given to him by order of the court. Where the court authorizes the receiver to carry on the business, it vests in him the management of administrative details. (Chicago Deposit Vault Co., vs. McNulta, 153 U. S. 554). But a receiver must have more than implied power to enter into any large commitments, and authority to act cannot be predicated on mere inference (Haines vs. Buckeye Wheel Co., 224 Fed. 289). The general rule in American Courts is stated by the Supreme Court as follows:

> "A receiver is not authorized without the previous direction of the court to incur any expenses on account of property in his hands beyond what is absolutely essential to its preservation and use as contemplated by his appointment." (Cowdrey et al. vs. Galveston, etc., Railroad Co., 93 U. S. 352.)

Any expense incurred by the receiver in operating the business is an administrative expense and is paid out of the assets in his hands before any distribution is made to creditors. In other words, administrative expenses are virtually a first lien upon the assets. Otherwise no one would deal with a receiver. For who would care to deliver merchandise and then become a mere creditor with a right to share ultimately in the distribution of assets? Business men, forewarned, do not thus put their heads in the noose. Therefore the rule of priority of administrative expense is essential to the operation of the business by a receiver.

When two receivers are appointed, all decisions which commit the estate to any obligation must have the concurrence of both to be valid. But more important is the concurrence of the court.

Thus, although the receiver may borrow money, enter into contracts, engage employees and perform all other acts necessary in the operation of a business, he must apply to the court constantly for instructions. The theory is that it is the court and not the receiver which is conducting the business. This submission to the court also affords creditors or stockholders an opportunity to state their objections to any policy adopted by the receiver. In this manner an impartial court may decide from conflicting contentions what is in the interest of the corporation itself.

Not Bound by Contracts

A receiver is not obligated to perform the contracts of the corporation. He may elect to do so, or he may refuse. Indeed, it is his duty to disaffirm the corporation's contracts if they are disadvantageous, for his sole purpose is to preserve the assets and not permit them to be drained by unwise commitments. The receiver is the representative of the court and not the legal successor of the corporation, and therefore the contractual sins of the corporation are not visited upon him.

The other party to the contract cannot compel the receiver to perform for the corporation. If, for example, a landlord could require a receiver to pay rent on the corporation's lease, the landlord would be in a better position than the ordinary creditor who has merely a claim against the assets. In other words, the landlord would be receiving a preference over general creditors. The theory of receivership is to prevent just such inequality in the payment of obligations. If there are mortgages against the corporation's property, the receiver takes it subject to such liens. But no creditor can obtain priority by requiring the receiver to perform the corporation's contracts.

A Receiver May Adopt Contracts

If he decides to adopt the contract the other party is bound to it. The option to disaffirm the contract is solely with the receiver and not with the other contracting party. Thus, while the receiver may disaffirm the corporation's contracts with executives or actors, such employees or actors cannot escape from their contracts with the corporation because of the receivership. The reason for this rule is to enable the receiver to preserve the assets of the corporation. Obviously, if the corporation could be deprived of beneficial contracts because of the appointment of a receiver, the receivership would defeat its very purpose. Therefore the law permits the receiver to take the good and reject the bad.

If the receiver adopts the contract, he is held to its burdens as well as its benefits. He must pay the contract price and not "reasonable value." A receiver may enter into an arrangement whereby he reserves to himself the right to adopt or reject at any time during the re-ceivership. In this manner his performance under the contract need not constitute adoption and he has the right at a subsequent date to disaffirm (Detroit & T. S. L. R. Co. vs. Detroit T. & S. R. Co., 290 Fed. 549).

PROTECTS COMPANY AND CREDITORS

Disaffirmance of Contracts

If the receiver disaffirms a contract, he has not abrogated it. He has simply refused to adopt and perform it himself as receiver. The corporation, nevertheless, is still bound on this contract, and its breach is not forgiven, but any claim or judgment is merely a charge against the estate. When distribution of assets is made the creditors receive their proportionate shares.

A lease is merely a special kind of contract and therefore, like other contracts, the receiver may disaffirm it.

The receiver may not be able to determine immediately whether adoption is a wise policy. The law therefore permits him a reasonable time in which to make up his mind whether to adopt the lease or disaffirm it and surrender the property to the landlord (Sunflower Oil Co. vs. Wilson, 142 U. S. 313). The Supreme Court has stated the rule as follows:

> "The general rule applicable to this class of case is undisputed that an assign or receiver is not bound to adopt the contracts, accept the leases, or otherwise step into the shoes of his assignor, if in his opinion it would be unprofitable or undesirable to do so; and he is entitled to a reasonable time to elect whether to adopt or repudiate such contracts." (Sparhawk vs. Yerkes, 142 U. S. 1.)

During the period that the receiver is in possession he must pay the rental provided for in the lease as an administrative expense (Mathews vs. Butte Machinery Co., 286 Fed. 801). As we have seen, this means that the landlord is paid immediately and in cash and is not left with a mere claim against the assets of the corporation.

If the receiver disaffirms the lease it has been broken by the corporation and not by the receiver. Therefore the landlord has a claim for rental and damages against the corporation. This is a mere claim against the assets in the hands of the receiver.

Contracts Made by the Receiver

The practical effect of this rule is very important. The receiver, operating the business, is relieved of the very contracts and leases which made a profitable enterprise by the corporation impossible. True, a claim against the assets in his hands arises in favor of the landlord, but this claim cannot be effectively asserted. It must patiently await ultimate disposition, perhaps one or two years later. In the meanwhile there is the temptation to adjust the rentals in order to receive present income rather than acquire claims to be proportionately satisfied in the future. By means of receivership the relationship between landlord and tenant undergoes an ironic change. The pressure is now upon the landlord instead of upon the tenant. The pleas of the tenant that it cannot exist with inflated rentals and deflated income no longer are likely to fall on deaf ears. For the power of the receiver to disaffirm the lease gives persuasion to the plea which the corporation never had. Thus, it may be unnecessary in many instances to ultimately disaffirm the lease. The landlord may find it to his interest to substantially adjust the rental rather than rely upon a mere claim against the assets of the estate.

The receiver operating a business must of course enter into various contracts. He may even lease the corporation's property, but should be careful not to make such a long lease as would prevent or prejudice a sale of the property if the court so orders. A clause should be inserted reserving to the court the power to cancel whenever it is deemed expedient to do so (Farmers Loan & Trust Co. vs. Eaton, 114 Fed 14).

The receiver may, of course, contract for photoplays or other merchandise necessary to continue the operation of the business. Such contracts must be within his authority and the parties dealing with the receiver must look to the extent of his authority (Erie Malleable Co. vs. Standard Parts Co., 299 Fed. 82).

The question arises concerning the extent of the receiver's liability upon contracts signed by him as receiver. The English courts make the receiver individually responsible upon his contract, but indemnify him out of the assets. The American courts, however, have created protection for the receiver in this respect by permitting him to sign "as receiver." In this capacity judgment rendered against him is merely judgment against the assets in his hands and not against the individual, and his personal property is not subject to any judgment. The rule is stated by the U. S. Supreme Court as follows:

> "Actions against the receiver are official and not personal and judgments against him as receiver are payable only from the funds in his hands." (McNulta vs. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327).

The reason for this rule is that if the receiver were held personally liable responsible men could not be obtained to act as receivers to manage railroads or other vast enterprises. Of course, if the receiver acts beyond his authority, he still is personally liable. But if he has acted under an order of the court or pursuant to implied power, he is not individually liable (Haines vs. Buckeye Wheel Co., 224 Fed. 289).

Stock Owned by Corporation

If the corporation in receivership owns 100 per cent or less of the stock of another corporation, not in receivership, what is the effect?

The stock is an asset and the receiver will receive any dividends paid just as he receives interest on mortgage or bonds.

The receiver also has the right to require that the stock be transferred to his name so that he may vote it. It is his duty, however, as in all other matters, to consult the court, even as to how to vote on any important matters.

Certain it is that the corporation not in receivership is not affected by the receivership of the corporation which owns its stock.

Reorganization

Ultimately the receiver must sell the corporation's property in order to liquidate the assets and distribute the moneys to the creditors. However, forced sale at the end of the receivership is as unwise as at the beginning, for great sacrifice is certain to be suffered. Consequently, the device of reorganization is resorted to. A new corporation is organized which buys the assets of the corporation in receivership.

The sale in this instance is not a "forced" one. It is as friendly as the receivership which was obtained at the request of a friendly creditor and with the consent of the board of directors. Various committees are organized to protect the interests of certain groups. There are the bondholders' committee, preferred stockholders' committee, secured creditors' committee, etc. There are many plans of reorganization, but usually the purchasing committee of the reorganization committee buys the property of the corporation and turns it over to a new corporation. The new corporation issues to the reorganization committee its stock and cash if any is involved. This consideration is distributed to the various creditors, stockholders, and bondholders of the old corporation.

The justification for such a friendly sale is that it may be impossible to sell a vast enterprise for cash. Since the sale is for all practical purposes fictitious, the court, in the interest of the creditors, controls the price. It determines the minimum price which must be paid by the new corporation. This is called the upset price.

The Supreme Court has virtually deprived the creditor of the power to interfere with the reorganization plan (Northern Pacific Railway vs. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482). A very recent case, now pending before the Supreme Court (Coriell vs. Morris White, Inc., 54 Fed. (2) 255), has substantially strengthened the creditor's position for the lower court directed that sufficient of the assets could be sold to satisfy the objecting creditor in the proportion that his claim bore to the upset price.

Conclusion

Theoretically the equity receivership results in an unhurried liquidation so that creditors may be paid 100 per cent of their debts. Practically the equity receivership saves the corporation which has insufficient liquid assets from the morass of bankruptcy and forced sale. Furthermore, it provides the corporation weapons with which to successfully adjust its burdensome contracts. Finally, by reorganization it enables the corporation to continue its enterprise, satisfying creditors by partial cash payments or stock representation in the new corporation.

This is the magic of receivership.

Canadians Ask Higher Standards

by W. M. GLADISH

Toronto Correspondent

Important recommendations affecting the film industry were adopted at a conference of Government officials, church authorities and welfare organizations at Toronto. The following resolution was adopted with a view to consideration by the Ontario Government:

"That it is desirable that distinctly Canadian films be produced in Canada in increasing numbers;

"That more children's films, suitable for presentation in schools and churches, be produced by the Government;

"That some better provision for the selection of suitable programs for children be worked out by the Government to insure that objectionable features be not shown at children's matinees;

"That the standards of films should be definitely and constantly improved;

"That the public be urged to continue its support of the best British films;

"That publicity in connection with moving pictures should be raised to the highest professional and ethical standards advocated by advertising associations;

"That a Canadian distributing agency, free from the domination of American producers, be established."

Bringing Them Together Was the Problem Solved in "King Kong"; the Other New Product

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Last week, after seeing a special preview showing of "King Kong" in Long Beach, I wired that in my opinion it would be one of the sensational pictures of the year. A press preview was given in Grauman's Chinese theatre in Hollywood Saturday morning, attended by practically all the newspaper, trade and fan press people who cover Hollywood activities. The praise they gave confirmed what I reported. It seems almost unanimous that, in addition to being a highly entertaining attraction, it offers unlimited exploitation possibilities far beyond the usual feature attraction.

Sid Grauman is negotiating with RKO-Radio to put it into the Chinese as the attraction to follow "Cavalcade." The deal is practically set except on guarantee terms. RKO expects also to put it into the Roxy in New York for an extended run. Plans have been under way for several weeks for a heavy exploitation campaign.

"King Kong" has been a year in the making, due to the tremendous problems in process photography involved in showing gigantic prehistoric animals and reptiles in juxtaposition with the human actors, the development of proper sound effects, music accompaniment, building of miniature sets, matching them with the full sized ones in which the actors worked. With the exception of "Lost World" there was nothing to go by as precedent, and the problems were vastly more complicated than in that picture.

O'Brien's Hobby Applied

Willis O'Brien, who did most of the technical work on "Lost World," was chief technician on "King Kong." Since "Lost World" was finished it has been his hobby to experiment further with that sort of thing. His research has been painstakingly thorough. Assisting him importantly were Mario Larrinaga and Byron L. Crabbe. The technical staff in addition to these included E. B. Gibson, Marcel Delgado, Fred Reefe, Orville Goldner, Carroll Shepphird. Working secretly, and often against seemingly insurmountable obstacles, they gradually solved the many problems involved in making a 50-foot ape, seemingly, move about in a modern world.

The picture, as you already know, was directed by Merian C. Cooper and Ernest B. Schoedsack, producer of "Chang" and "Grass" among other notable adventure-explorer subjects. Mr. Cooper, who has just been made executive producer for RKO-Radio to succeed David O. Selznick, wrote the original story in collaboration with the late Edgar Wallace.

The story is based upon the expedition of an explorer of the Frank Buck type, who finds a remote island in the South Atlantic where prehistoric monsters, including the great ape, still exist. After many thrilling adventures the ape is captured and brought back alive to New York. His admiration for a Hollywood actress, Fay Wray, brings about his downfall and capture. But what happens is made into one of the most thrilling and unusual melodramas ever produced. Incidentally, it is a triumph for sound in motion pictures, for without the music of Max Steiner and the sound effects of Murray Spivak it never could have been the sensation that it is.

Also along the preview front lately is the latest Ronald Colman picture, and possibly his last for some time, as Ronald says he is going to England for an indefinite vacation. "The Masquerader" has been produced with the customary polish and finish of Samuel Goldwyn. Richard Wallace, directing, and Howard Estabrook, doing the adaptation, have made it an entertainment which has many angles of appeal. Colman gives another excellent performance, commensurate with those he gave in "Arrowsmith" and "Cynara." Elissa Landi played opposite him, and her work is also outstanding. It looks like a de luxe Goldwyn attraction.

Drawing Room Stuff

Constance Bennett's new vehicle is a screen version of the Somerset Maugham play, "Our Betters." The story is peopled completely by persons who are stupid, silly, without conscience or principle, who try to overcome their ennui by talking each other to death. This is "drawing room stuff" from beginning to end, talks endlessly and incessantly about persons whose intrigue is mostly disgusting and certainly unimportant. Some may consider it all very smart. It started out as a Constance Bennett picture and ended with Violet Kemble-Cooper just about stealing the show. It is for the "intelligentsia," and they probably will laugh at it—so there you are. There isn't a single admirable, sympathetic character in the entire story.

Mary Pickford's production of "Secrets" is considerable of a disappointment to most of the reviewers who have seen it. It is lavishly produced, embellished to the limit, and Leslie Howard is Mary's leading man. But if you can imagine the suave and poised Mr. Howard in a wagon train crossing our continent to become a California pioneer and one of its early governors, you may have the answer to why it demanded too much imagination from the reviewers. With Miss Pickford in the role of producer-star, with Frances Marion doing the script and Frank Borzage directing, one has some right to expect more of the combination than "Secrets" offers. If it stands up it is likely to be on the basis of Pickford popularity.

In "The Life of Jimmy Dolan," Warners present Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in the role of a prize fighter. It was not a particularly happy selection. He has little opportunity to gain the sympathy of the audience, and part of the time his antics and gyrations are pretty thin and boresome. Aline McMahon does a Scotch character, but at times her accent seems suspiciously Brooklynese. It is the venerable yarn of the broken-down prize fighter.

'FOR TRADE THAT COMBS HAIR BACK'

Says DeCasseres of "Biography"; Calls "Alice in Wonderland" a Winner If Janet Gaynor Plays It

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

BIOGRAPHY

S. N. Behrman and the Theatre Guild hit a good stretch in a brittle, sophisticated comedy of art and love in "Biography." But it is the scintillant, corruscating and intelligent Ina Clare who enveloped this show—and if that performance were paralleled on the screen, this play would make a good picture for the trade that combs its hair back and high.

Marion Froude, a girl up from Tennessee, has become a painter of international renown—and she is renowned not only for her creations on canvas. She is a portrait of a Civilized Woman (as rare as a tumbler of absinthe in the White House. She has loved and laughed, and a dozen lovers are just twelve different emotions.

In floats (this is New York) Leander Nolan (Jay Fassett). Leander, who is now a stuffed shirt politician with his eye on Washington via the Senate, was Marion's first affair when she was still hayricking in Tennessee. He's a goo-gooing her again.

Richard Kurt (Earle Larimore), a magazine editor who leaves $2,000 checks on the piano (a character moulded in haggis), gets Marion to write her autobiography for his raglet. Now this serial lugs in her early affair and his prospective father-in-law, a big-time smugmug newspaper owner (Charles Richman), who hurries to New York to put a stop to the scandal.

Thenceforward some fine comedy fencing—with Marion finally tearing up the script, wishing them all a mischa machina—and back to Art!

The dialogue is cutting. There are at least four good picture situations.

Picture value, 60 per cent.

GAY DIVORCE

Here's a corking picture title. A title sometimes will open up in an imaginative scenarist's mind a gob of scenes—like a woman's name will suddenly evoke in your memories twenty reels of past performances.

Cole Porter, Sam Hoffenstein, Joe Mielziner, Dwight Taylor and the late Hartley Manners were some of the cooks that frappéd this play, with music, and dancing by Fred Astaire. It has some picture value for the sex-gigglers.

She has gone to a seaside resort to build up grounds for a divorce. She is there to meet the co-respondent (dirty work). But she mistakes someone else for the co. Old wrong identity stuff.

It's muddled out from this point with bedroom scenes, risqué quip and puiddity and jaunty neckings. The music isn't half bad.

It is all exterior sophistication and contains no more insides than the skull of a tenor. But Lubitsch could do a fine job with it—maybe.

Picture value, 30 per cent.

ANYBODY'S GAME

"Anybody's Game," by Paul Barton, is anybody's picture—that is, it might be builded into something that spins like a top, or, as Mr. Bert Lahr says, then again no. As a play it is fried soup.

The milieu, as they say at Laguna Beach, is an advertising office, where anything can happen. Jimmy, a college feller, blows into the agency to peddle silk stockings. Now good old Mistaken Identity comes on the scene. Jimmy is taken for someone else from Buffalo and gets a job as assistant to the president and trimmings, including a clear path to the girl-they-all-want in the office.

That's the gizzard of it. A good scenarist might chew it into something that would net a few ties for the producers. Edna Hibbard as the chiseling stenographer was breezy. Sam Wren was the bird that played Jimmy. It's mostly mouth-action.

Picture value, 12 per cent.

ALICE IN WONDERLAND

With all due respect to Alice herself, who has lately visited these shores, I say, and say again now that I have seen Eva Le Gallienne's incomparable production of "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass," that if Lewis Carroll had ever laid eyes on Janet Gaynor he would have said, "Here is Alice—there can be no other!"

Josephine Hutchinson's Alice is one of the greatest, most delicate and finest performances ever seen in New York. But when you are following her your mind says, "How much she looks like Janet Gaynor!"

"Alice" has never been done before as the Civic Repertory does it. It is a long show with the best drawn from both of the Carroll Alice books. Here are all the famous characters, costumed as Tenniel conceived them. Nothing funnier, more entertaining, more vivid is on our stage at the present moment.

And what the picture medium could do with these two glorious pieces of cleansing nonsense! And with Gaynor as Alice, I'll bet my last quart of Chauteau Leary, 1710, that it would out-net the biggest mazuma catch ever heard of.

Picture value (with Janet Gaynor), 100 per cent.

LUCRECE

This play ought to have a sub-title: "Lucrece; or Al Woods Vindicated!"

It has got the hottest bedroom scene in it that has ever been seen anywhere. Blush and blush and blush—and then you'll come near. Laid in rummy and lubricious Rome at the time when Young Tarquin was the great home-wrecker, it fairly yelps for Cecil B. DeMille and the Macedonian Bathtub Phalanx of Hollywood.

The thing is the old "Rape of Lucrece," by Bill Shakespeare, done into prune-juice and unstrained lobscouse by a French sports writer and transluxed into English diddledaddle by Thornton Wilder.

Lucrece (sticky-sweet Roman matron) is a-sittin' with her women and a-combin' of her hair when back from the wars sneaks young Tarquin. Now, Lucrece's husband, the General Pershing of the war, had boasted that Lucrece was fuller of virtue than the world is of applesauce.

Well, boys, Tarq., during a wet, stilly night, creeps into Lu's bed and the greatest tussle against Original Sin these aged and ogling eyes ever beheld occurs. O. S. wins.

Finally, Lu commits suicide (an old Roman custom, no longer observed on Park avenue) because she lost her chastity, and then the doughboys go after Tarq.

Katharine Cornell as Lucrece was beautiful and charming. There was a Greek restaurant chorus and tunes by Deems Taylor.

Picture value (De Mille), 50 per cent.

Erpi Plea for Continued Arbitration Heard in Court

Argument relative to the pleas made by Electrical Research Products, Inc., defendant in an action brought by Vitaphone, was heard last week in Wilmington, Del., chancery court before Chief Justice Pennewill. Erpi and Vitaphone had entered an arbitration agreement in 1927 to settle their financial difficulties. Those arbitration proceedings have continued for four years, costing it approximately $450,000, Erpi contends.

Vitaphone now seeks to discard the work of four years and have the differences settled in court, Erpi declares. Erpi, opposed, desires that arbitration be continued.

RECEIVERSHIPS FORCING UNIONS TO MEET REVISED SALARY SCALES

Irving Trust Is Publix Trustee

Election by Publix creditors of Irving Trust Company as trustee was the principal development during the week in the Paramount situation. Previously, Irving Trust had been acting as temporary receiver in bankruptcy for the Publix holding company.

The bankrupt Publix Enterprises, Inc., will be sold to a reorganization committee in approximately six months, when, it is expected, reconstruction will have been completed by the trustee, Irving Trust Company, according to a representative of the trust company. The parent Paramount corporation, which is also the principal creditor, will likely again acquire title to Publix Enterprises by making the highest bid through a reorganization committee when liquidation of the subsidiary takes place. The new trustee has title to all assets of Publix Enterprises and holds them in trust for creditors.

Charles D. Hilles and Adolph Zukor, temporary receivers in equity for Paramount, notified creditors Tuesday that a creditors meeting will be held on the ninth floor of the Merchants' Association, 233 Broadway, at 2:30 p.m. March 3. The receivers will report.

Through their counsel, Root, Clark and Buckner, Mr. Hilles and Mr. Zukor also notified creditors and stockholders of Paramount that they are required to show cause before United States district court of New York, at 4:30 p.m. March 17, in the Woolworth Building, why the appointment of the receivers should not be made permanent, and why they should not be authorized to continue the business for a fixed period not exceeding six months.

Publix Creditors in Session

The creditors of Publix assembled Monday morning in the offices of Henry K. Davis, referee in bankruptcy, at 140 Nassau street, where S. A. Lynch, former head of Southern Enterprises, opposed the election of Irving Trust as trustee of Publix. He offered the name of C. Frank Reavis, an attorney of 30 Broad street, as co-trustee to serve with Irving Trust. Paramount, principal creditor of Publix, voiced opposition to Mr. Lynch's suggestion. An adjournment was ordered, during which the Lynch interests agreed to the Irving trustee and to appointment of a creditors' committee, headed by Mr. Lynch, to work with the trust company. David Stoneman, an attorney of Boston, and Harold F. Birnbaum, attorney for Commercial Investment Trust, also were named to the creditors' committee, which is said to have claims totaling $1,000,000, as against $6,321,400 of inter-company claims of Paramount and Publix subsidiaries.

On Friday, the Publix creditors' committee will meet with Irving Trust officials to map operating policies and discuss disposition of leases and theatre properties. The Lynch group is expected to ask for a theatre expert to advise Irving Trust.

Irving Trust Company now assumes title of the bankrupt circuit holding corporation, subject to the U. S. district court, and it appears that there are strong indications the trustee will reorganize and continue operations. The bank's representatives already have begun to negotiate adjustment of leaseholds and other economic factors. However, the future policy might involve reorganization, continued opera-

Involved Circuits Expected to Benefit; Receivers with Legal Power to Disaffirm Contracts; Big Cuts Necessarily Made

The motion picture theatre receivership situation is taking the union wage problem out of the hands of the unions for the first time and as a result, circuits involved are expected to benefit by reduced scales. Projectionists, stage hands, musicians and others will be forced to abide by the dictates of the receivers who already have started campaigns to revise operating costs downward. Although heretofore the unions demanded contractual protection for their salary agreements with theatres, the receivers are vested with legal power to disaffirm such contracts, or, in the cases of bankruptcies, these contracts automatically cease.

Regularly each year, the union crafts, particularly projection operators, and the exhibitors have been at odds over salary adjustments and employment concessions, but now, the receiverships of the theatre subsidiaries of Paramount and Radio-Keith-Orpheum are beginning to take their toll of union theatre labor and theatre musicians. Salaries are being radically reduced by the receivers, and in many cases unemployment is threatened unless the crafts submit to these reductions.

In Kansas City, the widespread unemployment among theatre crafts is bringing the unions to terms. Heretofore, labor dictated its own terms, said Mort Singer, in charge of labor negotiations for RKO.

Cuts Up to 50 Per Cent

"Circuits have been at a disadvantage because of national hookups," Mr. Singer said, "but unemployment and the depression have changed the situation. No longer is it a question of cuts of $5 or $10 a week. In many instances reductions of as much as 50 per cent will have to be made if theatres are to operate on the right side of the ledger. In some cities in the Kansas City district, union members are only too willing to submit to cuts if only to keep their jobs, and in one western city musicians are working for $25 a week."

Mr. Singer and William A. Finney, Loew's district manager at Columbus, Ohio, are engaging in a joint discussion with union heads in Kansas City.

In Dallas, C. W. Koerner, trustee for the receiver of the RKO southern circuit, announced that the theatres will go non-union unless stage hands and projectionists consent to a 50 per cent cut in salaries. The local I.A.T.S.E. is reported to have made a counter offer of a 25 per cent cut, but officials of I.A.T.S.E in New York said they had heard nothing of this proposed offer.

Few Musicians Affected

The American Federation of Musicians reports that there are too few musicians in the employ of theatres to make much difference, and that any reductions of musicians' salaries were matters for local branches.

Under the operating agreements of Publix Enterprises, Inc., bankrupt subsidiary of Publix, union labor as well as stage acts and house employees will remain on their jobs with the understanding that everyone may have to depend on a percentage of theatre receipts for their salary. A majority of the theatres operating under Publix Enterprises are operating entirely out of box-office receipts, according to Sam Dembow, Jr., president.

Permanent RKO Receiver Named

Irving Trust Company was appointed last Friday permanent receiver in equity for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., by Federal Judge William Bondy. A preliminary report filed by Irving Trust showed that the corporation has book assets of $76,124,794, and that any favorable turn in business would reflect itself immediately. There was no opposition to the appointment, which results in the continuance of A. H. McCausland in charge of RKO affairs, as representative of the receiver.

The report by Irving Trust was its first on RKO's financial condition. It showed losses of $4,075,834 in 1932 from production and distribution, and of $3,669,504 from theatre operations.

Irving Appointed Orpheum Trustee

Irving Trust also was appointed trustee in bankruptcy for RKO's Orpheum circuit last week, by Oscar W. Ehrhorn, referee in bankruptcy.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum was said to be the corporation's principal creditor, at a meeting in the referee's offices, where the appointment was made. No other candidate was proposed.

Total liabilities of the bankrupt Orpheum Circuit, principal subsidiary of RKO, were estimated at $16,727,884 and assets at $22,328,067 in schedules filed with Mr. Ehrhorn on Friday in New York. Among the assets is $12,408,679 in capital stock and bond investments, for the most part in its theatre subsidiaries, a number of which are also in bankruptcy. Bills and promissory notes total $9,914,346.

Creditors' unsecured claims total $13,714,707 and comprise the bulk of the corporation's liabilities. Rental liabilities amount to $11,089,826 and bond issues make an additional $2,172,240. Miscellaneous accounts payable, mostly in inter-company loans, come to $430,861, and the balance of $3,001,239 is owed in cash to K-A-O. Orpheum's schedule states that it owns no real estate and has no cash on hand.

Discontinuing Mayfair Lease

RKO will discontinue its lease on the Mayfair theatre in New York, on March 2, on the grounds that it was impossible to get any reduction of rent. Walter Reade, who owns the property, said this week that he did not intend to release RKO from its Mayfair obligation. RKO and not Orpheum, is the theatre tenant, according to Mr. Reade. Rent on the Mayfair is $270,000 a year.

Meanwhile, abandonment of the Mayfair means that the Palace theatre, for 20 years one of the leading vaudeville houses in the country, will take its place with the first-run picture houses in the Times Square district, as RKO's Broadway picture outlet.

A rearrangement of the RKO New York division has been made necessary by the resination of Joe Lee, who has been handling the Brooklyn "junior" houses for the corporation. Louis Goldberg, formerly operator of the Bronx and Jersey houses, will take over the post left vacant by Mr. Lee. Mr. Goldberg will also take over all upstate houses, which until last week were handled by Lou Golding, now Albany city manager. Goldberg's former circuit reverts to J. M. Brennan.

H. R. Emde, an RKO district manager, will take over all New York city houses from 125th Street north, with the exception of the 58th

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

The Mind Reader

(First National)

Comedy

Here's a show that packs a dandy entertainment punch. Comedy principally, snappy mirth-provoking dialogue and clever development of situations make it continuously interesting. There is also a romantic twist and a dramatic climax that gives the entire story a logical plausibility that was appreciated by the preview audience. And like two other recent Warner-First National pictures, "The Mind Reader" is full of natural showmanship.

Warren William as Chandra is a fakir with a head full of ideas as to how to make the maximum amount of money with the minimum effort. Medicine show painless dentist at first, he is established as a charlatan who will hesitate at nothing. Then a hawker of a preparation guaranteed to straighten the kinks in colored folks' hair. Then the promoter of a flag pole endurance sitting contest, a stunt that is accompanied by much exciting hoorah. Then into the most profitable of all rackets—a crystal gazing mind reader, a game which he knows absolutely nothing about.

Romance comes as the show stops in a little town where Chandra meets Sylvia, Constance Cummings, who joins up with his troupe as an assistant. After their marriage, Sylvia realizes that her spouse is a brazen fakir and forces him to desert his racket. Becoming a brush salesman, which is exciting but not profitable, Chandra secretly reverts to the crystal gazing again. A death occurs and Chandra is willing to let his wife take the rap until he realizes how much he loves her and what a dirty deal he has given her.

This show should be circused. Ordinarily of the program classification, it can be developed into a real profit maker by taking advantage of all the showmanship which the picture itself suggests. A traveling impersonator of the "painless dentist," the hair preparation fakir, dolling it up with all the trappings that were a part of the nomadic fakir's paraphernalia of a decade or so ago. The old flag pole sitting contest. Even the door to door canvassing of houses with advertising heralds, made up a la the old circus throwaways, in the brush salesman idea. What can be done with the fortune telling angles will be limited by your own imagination; only be sure that everything is done from a comedy point of view, and if you have a crystal gazer in your lobby, be sure that he hands out ludicrous answers so that no one will take him seriously. And there's the April Fool's Day release date.

"The Mind Reader" is the type of picture on which you can afford to spend a little extra money in advertising. There's entertainment in it for the whole family, with appeal of the leading cast names and the intriguing ring of the title.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Based on a play by Vivian Cosby. Screen play by Wilson Mizner and Robert Lord. Photographed by Sol Polito. Release date, April 1, 1933. Running time, 68 minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Masquerader

(United Artists)

Comedy Drama

In modernizing this noted novel and stage play, the producers have developed a show that contains pretty nearly all the audience pleasing entertainment elements. Finely acted, with Ronald Colman again at the standard that characterized his efforts in "Arrowsmith," and Elissa Landi keeping up the good work she showed in "Sign of the Cross," the picture becomes interesting at once and holds that quality throughout. Principally dramatic, with a dual identity set up as the motivating theme, "The Masquerader" is also romantic; has just enough of the right kind of comedy, born of Chilcote's butler trying to keep the impostor covered up, and because of clever screen treatment and direction it has a thread of suspense that is ever threatening to explode the whole deception which not only would be devastating to Chilcote, but would likewise shatter the hopes of England's struggling masses for a new deal that would lift them out of the slough of economic and political despair.

Chilcote, member of Parliament, is the voice of his party and the people. A dissolute drug addict, he continually fails his leaders in crises; has exiled his wife, Eve, to Paris, and seeks solace in the company of his mistress, Lady Joyce. Disgusted after a fiasco, he wanders into London's fog and meets John Loder, a cousin, who is exactly like him in looks, manner, voice and speech. Determined to step out of his own life, Chilcote, with the aid of Brock, prevails upon Loder to impersonate him and take up his life. Much to his fear, and accompanied by some interesting sequences, Loder does. In Parliament he delivers a spech that makes Chilcote again the man of the people and his party. He moves into Chilcote's home, meets Chilcote's wife, friends and mistress. Always wanting to quit the sham, the pleadings of Brock and his growing admiration for Eve hold him fast. While all this is going on, Chilcote himself is sinking deeper and deeper. Lady Joyce, suspicious, traps Loder. Just as he is making his get-away the real Chilcote, insanely jealous of his double, unknowingly upsets the Lady's scheme. Chilcote and Brock arrive in Loder's apartment and beg for one more chance. Chilcote dies, and Loder, with Eve's love, takes up Chilcote's career.

The elements that held the unmoved attention of the preview audience are: convincing acting on the part of the entire cast; interesting drama, made more gripping by contrasting comedy; a vein of sympathy creation that makes them want to see Loder succeed in his deception and at the same time stimulates the hope that Chilcote will overcome his curse; timeliness of story; romance that always raises the question, "will it work out," and a suspense buildup that continually threatens to collapse and throw the whole thing into a turmoil.

Taking advantage of the established box office value of Colman's name, capitalizing on the current popularity of Elissa Landi, and promising a show that will please all from the adolescent age up—it's a little too heavy for the younger children—should result in "The Masquerader" doing much better than average business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

King Kong

(Radio)

Spectacle

This is an amazing show. In conception, development and presentation it is imagination-stunning. Made possible by sensational application of screen mechanics, trick photography and the most improved production technology, "King Kong" is at once a breathtaking melodrama; a dip into fantastic weirdness of a time before time began; yet it has its comedy moments; yet it is a sweet and tender "love" story.

There's only one way to understand "King Kong." It's big! As big as its eleven reels of length and 110 minutes of running time justify. You may have read some strange tales; you may remember some of the atmospheric and mechanical effects of "The Lost World," yet the picture will stun you. It's entertainment for everyone—men, women and children.

Even from the prosaic beginning, it was given such a buildup of suspense that it had the audience hanging on the edges of the chairs shortly after the first reel was under way. Denham has such a hazardous idea for a picture that even his associates think he's gone nutty. No agent will risk his reputation to provide him with a girl to go out and make this picture. How he gets that girl and screen-tests her for the horrors to come that only he has the faintest glimmer of, constitute the preliminary build-up.

fierce animal god. They would rather offer the white girl, Ann, a Hollywood blonde, if you please. They steal her, place her on the altar.

Kong, a gigantic, 50-foot ape, takes her. The mad dash to rescue Ann. Denham's party slaying a brontosaurus. Kong tenderly protecting the girl, fighting other prehistoric creatures to death as he holds her in the palm of his enormous hand. The rescue party toppled off their rude raft by some other gigantic beast of a forgotten age. Dozens lying, either in the water or in the jaws of their attacker.

Driscoll finally catching up with Kong and Ann. And Denham going back after his camera to shoot his "million dollar natural." The flight back to the native village. Kong in fierce pursuit. Kong crushing the gigantic gates. Denham frantic that something will happen to the creature which will prevent him from bringing the beast back alive. A gas bomb does the trick.

In New York. People have paid $20 a seat to pack the town's largest theatre—to see this terrible thing they have read so much about. Kong trussed up on a gigantic cross. Denham starting to tell his story, introducing Ann and Driscoll, who will be married tomorrow. The cameramen's flashlights terrorize the creature. He thinks they are trying to harm her.

Easily he bursts his chrome-steel shackles. Kong pushes out the side of the building. Radio calls for riot squads. Kong in seach of Ann. He crushes an elevated train as though it were an eggshell. He finds her, carries her to the mooring mast atop the Empire State Building. Army airplanes soaring into the sky. Machine guns roar. The bullets at first only tickle gigantic Kong. Audience sympathy is all for him. More bullets. An enormous hole in Kong's chest. He touches it. Tears in his eyes. He reaches down and pats Ann. Another outburst and Kong topples 80 stories to the street. Driscoll picks Ann off the narrow parapet.

"King Kong" is a showman's picture. It has everything—romance, drama, spectacle, unrealism, thrill, terror and "love interest," and has them all in an astounding novel way. Without another line other than the title you can shout about it as the most sensational show you have ever offered. Starting with the mystery angle, you can build up an exploitation campaign using gigantic cutouts and animations of Kong and the other prehistoric beasts. Don't let them, however, get the idea that it's just another animal picture. Do everything big so that even the smallest herald or gag you use will have the impressiveness of a 24-sheet board. It will be good business to spend extra money on "King Kong."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

A Lady's Profession

(Paramount)

Comedy

After a rather unimpressive first reel which establishes the Withers family, (Alison Skipworth, Roland Young and Sari Maritza) as a group of financially embarrassed English aristocrats, the locale moves to America and, majoring in novel comedy, becomes a pleasant program feature. It's family type entertainment which probably will find its greatest appreciation among the more mature adults, but because of its spirit of timely fun should catch the fancy of the younger folk, with proper showmanship.

The story relates the adventures of Beulah Bonnell, who unwillingly comes to the rescue of her typically dumb English brother, Lord Reggy, in the operation of a profitless speakeasy, located in the atmosphere of a stable. It presents also the romance between Cecily and Dick Garfield, and has a comedy gangster menace in the antics of Bolton and Keyhole McCluskey, and becomes exciting as the senior Garfield is "taken" by Beulah and the Lord and as the Lord unwittingly kicks over a deal to sell the "joint" to Stephens. Comedy reaches a high point as the bootleg king, the Colonel, puts on a bargain sale to get rid of his $2,000,000 "stock" before the 18th Amendment is repealed and the Government muscles in on the booze racket. It winds up in a hectic jamboree. There's a raid on the new night club, which, unknown to its proprietors, is selling hootch instead of gingerale, and is sold to Stephens while it is doing a terrific business. Cecily is kidnaped. Then it's revealed that Dick has supplied the funds to buy the place and the whole shebang sails off to Europe again, the Withers with their fortune rehabilitated, Dick and Cecily married and the elder Garfield anxious for more adventures with his new found friends.

Hodge podge, to be sure—meaningless, but funny, and it should be sold to your public that way. The title is good, and because of Skipworth's past performances, suggests much that can be done in linking the two. Young, always regarded as a good comedian, appears to better advantage than ever. The wood carving propensities of the gangster Keyhole should provide some odd exploitation ideas. The Barbier psychology should also be effective selling material. If you get good houses in to see the first performances, it will build itself.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Tatra's Zauber

The Spell of Tatra

(Protex)

Drama

In no sense should this production be considered by the exhibitor in the same light as the mine-run of German pictures, whether of the often-seen musical romance school or the ordinary dramatic type. It contains a background and a construction which transcends the average film, and has an equal appeal for the American lacking a knowledge of the German in which the dialogue is couched.

It is in the nature of a saga, a saga of a peculiarly light-hearted and yet sensitive group of people, the Gurals, natives of the Tatra range of the Carpathian Mountains, on the border between Czechoslovakia and Poland, who revere their majestic mountain homeland, in which their lives are wrapped, by which they gain their livelihood. The famed winter resort of Zakopane, lying in a gorge of the Tatras, is the center of the plot action. The performers, it is understood, are non-professionals, being the native guides of the region and several Europeans who annually enjoy the grandeur of the Tatras, recruited for the roles they play with unstudied naturalness, except in rare instances.

The story's hero, representative of the spirit of his kind, is the guide Carlo, a leader, only one among his fellows who has been able to scale the precipitous and treacherous heights of Sun Peak, highest of the Tatra range. An American engineer requires a cable to Sun Peak to construct a cable railway to the summit, and Carlo refuses to give his beloved mountain into servitude. Another guide attempts the ascent, is shattered on the rocks when he takes the wrong trail. A romance between the engineer's daughter and a doctor leads her to attempt the ascent with the engineer's assistant. A storm maroons them on a rocky ledge, while the girl swings, unconscious, from a rope high in the air over rocky vastness. To the rescue goes Carlo, saving both, finally consenting to carry the cable, enabling others, less gifted physically, also to enjoy the grandeur of the mountains.

It would be useless to attempt description of the suspense engendered, the thrill provided by the perilous ascents and descents, or the majestic beauty of the scenic effects, enchanced by splendid photography. Dialogue is cut to an absolute minimum, and even that little is translated via super-imposed subtitles. It is a picture, in fact, which requires no dialogue, no subtitle.

Any exhibitor, no matter where his theatre, may well play the picture, offering it as something unusual, calling on community organizations for support of a really fine example of cinema output. Its story, the slight romance, involving the doctor, and of Carlo and a local girl, make the film something more than a scenic.—Aaronson, New York.

The Ghost Train

(Gaumont-British)

Thrill Melodrama

Typically an English motion picture, "The Ghost Train" has its origin in the stage play of the same name, authored by Arnold Ripley, which some time ago enjoyed a certain success on Broadway. At times the English accent causes the dialogue to become almost obscure to the American patron, but on the whole the picture moves with fast pace, particularly as to its climax, and has a certain element of mystery and a melodramatic thrill or two.

The cast, of course, will be wholly unknown to the audience on this side of the water, the film having been produced entirely in England, yet they turn in fairly satisfactory performances. Comedy is injected with reasonable amusement resulting, though the chatter of Jack Hulbert, one of the top-rank British players, tends at times to become a trifle wearisome.

An assortment of people, including a spinster, a doctor, an attractive girl, Hulbert, a honeymooning couple and a friend of the girl are involved. Missing a train, they are marooned by a storm in a deserted wayside station, the station master of which tells of a ghost train which sometimes passes in the night bringing death to all who look upon it. A mad girl enters, tells of seeing the train before, expecting it that night. The station master tumbles through the door, apparently falling dead, then disappears shortly afterwards. Nerves begin to tighten, and the roaring train approaches. From that point on the story moves with commendable speed to the conclusion, with Hulbert revealed as a detective, and the ghost train as a gunrunner, protected by the fiction of the haunted station and the specter train. A bit too much dialogue of not too great intelligence, particularly on the part of Hulbert, slows the action, takes too much unnecessary footage in the earlier sequences. Highlighting the climax is a rather realistic-appearing train crash, as, opening the drawbridge, Hulbert and the girl send the train crashing into the river.

The exhibitor selling this picture will have to rely for the most part on a curiosity-melodrama build up about the title, which has elements of attention focus, the mystery inherent in the story, the crash, the detective incognito and the like. The cast names will be of no assistance, and it would be advisable perhaps to avoid too strong indication that this is a London-made production.—Aaronson, New York.

L'Italia Parla

Italy Speaks

(Enrico Cutali)

Naval, Air Maneuvers

In this official Italian photographic record, Italy speaks much in what the rest of the world has come to believe is the language of its dictator, Signor Benito Mussolini. The government cameramen were very much on deck during the naval and air maneuvers of the Italian forces in 1932, and the result is at least interesting, as a display of naval strength, always a moving sight to the theatre-goer.

There is, of course, no semblance of a story involved, and comparatively little dramatic action in that direction. However, the cameramen have done a splendid job, achieving numerous highly unusual shots from various difficult positions. The air fleet in action provides several magnificent moments of formation and stunt flying. The film, with approximately two hours of running time, too long for comfortable absorption by an average audience, is divided roughly into two main divisions. The first half retails the hypothetical "battle" between the "A" and "B" fleets, each with its thunderous complement of air force. The second portion is devoted to something which the American best knows as an "air circus," land planes engaging in daring formation and stunt flights, which are not without thrills for the spectator.

No dialogue is employed, the explanatory matter being confined to subtitles in both Italian and English. At the same time, natural sound, recorded on the field, has been employed very nearly throughout the picture. Incidental music accompanies the subtitle footage. King Victor Emanuel and Signor Mussolini have their moments before the camera, reviewing the fleet.

Italian nationals in this country will doubtless find in the picture a great deal to stir their blood, quicken their pulses, arouse their enthusiasm. For others it is still an interesting record of fighting forces in action, and of the power that is Italy—and Mussolini.—Aaronson, New York.

French Comedy Drama

A rather unexpected conclusion aids materially in imparting a spark of added entertainment to this wholly French comedy drama, set entirely amid the strange, heavily religious mysticism of Morocco, France's often troublous principality on the northern coast of Africa.

It is a rather inconsequential tale involving romance and the operations of four clever crooks, who come very near to getting away with a large sum of money through a ruse. It has certain elements of the travelogue, in its pictorial descriptions of the manner of worship, of the schools, of the architecture and the strange dances of the natives, designed as a religious manifestation, and thereby gains from the atmospheric standpoint and loses from the dramatic point of view.

A wealthy young man, traveling to Morocco, meets a planter and his attractive niece aboard, and promptly falls in love with the niece. Aboard ship, also, he comes into contact with four men, who likewise are Morocco bound, and the five arrange to see the sights together. Watching a ceremonial dance, a disturbance develops, and a beggar calls down a curse upon their heads, indicating that they all will die, in turn, the wealthy young man last. When first one falls over a balcony, then another crashes in a plane, the young man becomes frightened. The man he is to follow into the beyond attempts to commit suicide, obtains a large sum from the young man to settle a gambling debt. Hunting for the sorcerer who cast the spell, the victim accidentally discovers that the whole thing was a hoax to mulct him of his money. An absurd chase over the house tops of the city concludes the picture.

Selling possibilities are confined entirely to those metropolitan intimate cinemas which can draw a certain number familiar with French. They will probably find the film amusing, entertaining.—Aaronson, New York.

Ich Will Nicht Wissen Wer Du Bist

Don't Tell Me Who You Are

(Interworld Productions)

Musical Romance

From the same producers who brought forth "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," of rather recent and notable memory, comes another, tunefully musical, gayly entertaining, romantic and never becoming very serious. Featured are two highly popular German players, Liane Haid and Gustave Froehlich, the first extremely, blondely attractive, possessed of an effective singing voice; the latter with feminine appeal plus, unusual histrionic ability and great natural charm.

The romantic story is inconsequential, but the effectiveness of the picture in no wise is damaged thereby. Froehlic, a count in pecuniary distress, is a chauffeur whose attraction for women is fatal—to the women. Accidentally he meets Miss Haid at a fashionable restaurant, and the two find a lot in common, both remaining unidentified. Becoming her uncle's chauffeur unknowingly, Froehlich is alternately pursued and cold-shouldered by the wilful Miss Haid during a motor trip to Lake Como.

Incidental comedy of amusing proportions is contributed by one Szoke Szakall, Froehlich's retainer, who poses as the count to insure his master the job, then joins the motor trip into the Alps. Magnificent, beautiful is the scenery of Lake Como and vicinity, and wisely have the producers taken the opportunity to make it an incomparable background for numerous sequences.

Miss Haid sings several highly tuneful melodies, with fortunately little appearance of the numbers having been taken up by the heels and thrown into the picture. The settings are in each case appropriate for the singing, the justification ample, making for unobtrusiveness, also true of the background music. English subtitles aid materially in appreciation for the person unfamiliar with German.

The exhibitor has here a sprightly, entertaining musical romance, with two performers very well known to that part of the American audience familiar with the German output. The fact that it came from the same source as "Two Hearts," is a valuable selling factor.—Aaronson, New York.

Jungle Bride

(Monogram)

Melodramatic Romance

In this melodramatic romance, the real action of which starts with a shipwreck, the eternal triangle is presented in a different guise. It previously has been established that Wayne is under arrest, charged with murder and that Franklin, his captor, is in love with Doris. The trio, together with Stevens, the comedy relief, find themselves cast upon a desert island. Against the background of jungle animals, the main feature of which is a fight between Wayne and a lion, Doris gradually loses her affection for Franklin and transfers it to the suspected criminal.

Much drama ensues, depicting the reactions of the quartet to their primitive life, with the idea being suggested by the card-reading Stevens that Doris and Wayne are something more than platonic lovers until the derelict of their wrecked ship is sighted, which provides an opportunity for the pair to be legally married by the still surviving captain. Of course the jealous fight between the lucky and disappointed lovers follows with Wayne the victor, with a rescuing boat heaving into sight to take Franklin and Stevens off the island and leave Doris and Wayne to enjoy a jungle honeymoon.

The story is well put together, acting and direction are satisfactory, and it should prove adequate entertainment for the theatres in which it will be shown. The dialogue will provide some unusual advertising copy if such exploitation is desired. With a good surrounding program, "Jungle Bride" can stand as a single feature. As part of a dual bill, with a picture of different theme as a companion, it will constitute a well rounded out program.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

COLUMBIA TO CALL PATRONS BY RADIO

Renewal of Cinema Habit Is Aim in 24 Talks, Six Daily For Four Days, in 30 Cities Over NBC and CBS Network

In the subjoined article Mr. Jack Cohn uses for his take-off the assertion that MOTION PICTURE HERALD views the radio, as motion picture competition, with alarm. That will be permitted as poetic license, but provocation enough. The same issue with the news story reporting various views presented on editorial in which the HERALD suggested that every public fancy, vogue and rage, from mah jong to jig-saw puzzle, was competition and nothing to be deeply worried about. Nevertheless, this does not invade the interesting observations of Mr. Cohn concerning the radio and what his company chooses to do about the matter. TERRY RAMSAYE

by JACK COHN

Vice-President and Treasurer

Columbia Pictures Corporation

In an article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD recently it was stated that radio broadcasting has become a serious competitor of the motion picture screen. The article intimated that radio threatens the very life blood of the industry. Whether the condition is as serious as this is open to discussion. However,it must be admitted that there is a steadily increasing number of motion picture patrons who are remaining at home to listen to the radio.

If the motion picture industry is at all far-seeing, it will not take this threat lying down. It is possible to use radio as a means for promoting theatre attendance.

When Benito Mussolini took control of the Italian government he was advised that Italy's weakness as a manufacturing nation was due to its lack of coal. He was told that Italy could never meet the competition of coal-producing countries. He proceeded at once to turn Italy's weakness into its strength. The competition of coal has made Italy a manufacturing country based on electrical power. Just so the moving picture industry can take advantage of radio and make it an asset and a means of increasing motion picture attendance.

Would Protect Patronage

Columbia Pictures is inaugurating an innovation in promoting motion picture patronage. We are going on the air with a sales talk in the attempt to remind theatregoers that an evening of entertainment is waiting for them at their nearest moving picture house. We hope to renew the cinema habit among the thousands who, through economic disturbances, have been weaned away from habitual motion picture attendance. The experiment will begin in 30 key cities over both NBC and CBS. There will be 24 talks; six each day for four days. The broadcast will be timed with the opening of Wheeler and Woolsey's "So This Is Africa!" and tied directly to the local first-run theatre, beginning two days previous to the opening of the picture and continuing through the first two days of the run.

Although moving picture companies have tried radio before, it was never treated as a 100 per cent sales proposition. Several years ago they brought their stars to the "mike" in the effort to attract patronage. This policy proved a boomerang; the radio audience discovered that it could be entertained by moving picture stars at home and there was no reason for visiting the theatre. And, to be very frank, many moving picture performers unacquainted with microphone technique were not the best of ads. Columbia's plan is entirely different. Columbia intends to sell motion pictures and not provide additional competition for the theatres. It is our intention to remind the stay-at-home that an enjoyable evening is waiting for him around the corner; we hope to provide the impetus toward donning a hat and coat. Instead of supplying incentive for remaining at home we are going to suggest a reason for going out.

Whether radio or the depression has been the chief reason for the falling off of theatre attendance is open to discussion, but it is possible that with the proper drive neither of these factors should affect the movies. The loss of the thousands who feel that they should remain at home for economic reasons should be compensated by an equal, if not larger, number who must turn from more expensive pastimes to moving picture entertainment. The greatest loss of patronage has been due to the breaking of the moving picture habit.

Habit Breaking Is the Danger

Theatregoing is a habit. A fan is a person who has grown to rely on a definite number of weekly visits to a moving picture theatre for his entertainment and personal happiness. Unfortunately, it is a habit which, once broken, is apt to remain so. For the protection of the industry it is up to the moving picture producers to see that it is not permitted to be lost. Columbia intends to employ the radio to counteract any tendencies to be won away from motion pictures; we are going to remind the lost theatregoers of the pleasures to be had at the moving picture houses and win them back into the fold.

The trailer is employed in moving picture houses to feed the fires of the fan's interest. They are effective, but, naturally, can retain only the interest of those already interested. Radio is now to be used, almost like a trailer, to attract new patrons and regain lost followers.

Radio, it is the belief of the distribution and advertising departments of Columbia Pictures, can never be the competition generally feared. The American public is a pleasure-loving public; they prefer having their entertainment in company with others. They prefer bright lights and where crowds gather. They will never be satisfied with the radio as the main source of their amusement. Americans want to go places and do things.

No matter how entertaining a radio program may be, it is an evening at home, and the average American must go out several nights a week to be contented. Not even the most rabid producer expects a fan to attend the theatre seven nights a week.

If people are staying home today it is due partly to economic reasons but mainly to lack of incentive engendered by the times. This lethargy must be dispelled if the movies are to prosper. The radio sales campaign will suggest how an evening may be spent entertainingly at no great expense at a theatre hearing and seeing Wheeler and Woolsey in "So This Is Africa." Instead of the radio being competition it is to be made the moving picture's loudest booster.

Fox Theatres in Operation Split Into 5 Divisions

Fox theatres, operated by the Skouras Brothers, will be broken down into five operating divisions, according to a new arrangement now completed. The five major cities, each to be the headquarters of a division, are New York, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Seattle and Los Angeles. Buying, booking and operating supervision, formerly handled from New York and Los Angeles, will fall into the hands of each division head. Spyros Skouras will continue to judge all steps of major import to the organization as a whole.

The individual operation, culminating a series of decentralization maneuvres, was decided in New York at conferences of Spyros, Charles and George Skouras, J. J. Sullivan, Al and Mike Rosenberg and the Chase National Bank. Charles Skouras and the Rosenberg brothers arrived in Seattle this week for negotiations. Spyros Skouras is understood to enjoy the full confidence of the New York financial interests involved. His contract to operate the theatres runs until 1937.

The realignment of operating supervision involves approximately 452 theatres in the aggregate. Under the arrangement George Skouras, in New York, will handle 83 houses in Greater New York and upstate New York; Elmer Rhoden, in Kansas City, 130 houses; Oscar Brachman, Tom and J. E. Saxe, in Milwaukee, 51 in Wisconsin; Frank L. Newman, Sr., Al and Mike Rosenberg, in Seattle, 28 theatres; Charles Skouras, in Los Angeles, 160 on the Coast.

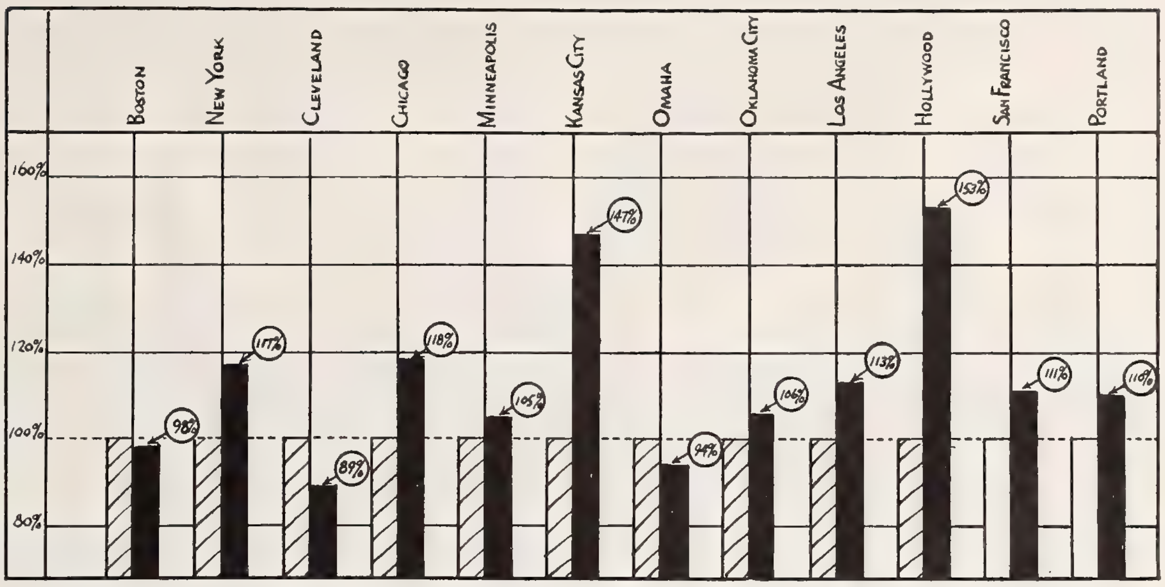
Montague Takes Rosenzweig Post

Charles Rosenzweig resigned this week as general sales manager of Columbia Pictures, effective March 11, when Abe Montague, manager of distribution, will take over the post.

Mr. Rosenzweig's move was not entirely unexpected. He had been with the corporation one year, and at the same time last year resigned an identical post at RKO to join Columbia. About six months ago disagreement arose after Mr. Montague, who formerly controlled the Columbia franchise with Joe McConville in New England, was named manager of distribution. The company insisted that the title, new to the corporation, had no bearing on and should not interfere with Mr. Rosenzweig's duties as general sales manager.

Skirball Appoints Six

Jack Skirball, Educational-World Wide sales manager, has appointed six district managers: John Scully, Boston; Jack Bachman, Philadelphia; Harry Skirball, Cleveland; Dave Dubin, Chicago; Joseph Kalinsky, Washington; George Blumenthal, San Francisco. Jim Sharkey has resigned as Pittsburgh manager and William Raynor has left Albany.



Theatre business done in twelve cities during the first four weeks of January of this year is compared with the receipts for the last four weeks of December, 1932, in the graph which is based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses. The shaded bar represents the 1932 figure and is taken as 100 per cent in each city, for the purposes of the comparison, while the solid black bar indicates the corresponding gross for the period in 1933.

Wurtzel Is Named Executive Producer

Sol M. Wurtzel has been appointed executive producer for Fox at the Western Avenue studio in Hollywood. He will supervise the production of 20 features as well as all the foreign productions on the Fox schedule for next season, to be made at the Western Avenue plant.

The company has explained Mr. Wurtzel's move from Movietone City as an effort toward greater efficiency of operating units. The Wurtzel unit will be independent in organization but will have access to all the facilities of the Movietone City plant, also utilizing the stages there, if necessary. The same talent and directors will be used at both studios. Mr. Wurtzel became general manager of the Fox studio 16 years ago.

New Warner Corporate Shift; Fox May Get Publix Theatres

A third step shifting the corporate structure of the Warner Theatre circuit finds incorporation of Warner Brothers circuit Settlement Corporation, designed, it is understood, to handle New Jersey houses. The move follows the individual incorporation of 41 Pennsylvania houses, and later the formation of Warner Brothers Circuit Management Corporation in New York. Warner denies any decentralization significance in the last move, as in the previous two actions.

Further decentralization of Publix in the Midwest is seen in the negotiations, now near completion in New York, whereby Fox Midwest would take over five Publix houses in Kansas City territory. Publix would then withdraw completely from the territory, having turned over three to the Dubinsky Brothers some time ago. Fox is reported to favor the deal now in work.

"King Kong" Premieres March 2

The Cooper-Schoedsack feature, "King Kong," will be premiered next Thursday, March 2, simultaneously at both Radio City theatres.

Fox Reorganizes Its Selling Staff

Reorganization of the Fox Film executive sales force this week resulted in the retention of E. C. Grainger as eastern divisional sales manager and W. J. Kupper as head of the western division. Mr. Grainger, however, will give up the southern territory to Harry C. Ballance, who will take charge of 11 states in addition to Canada.

The Detroit district, also under Mr. Grainger, will go to Clyde Eckhardt, who will also continue his Chicago divisional managership and take over Milwaukee and Minneapolis as well. Ward Scott, former Kansas City district manager, will take over the St. Louis territory from Mr. Eckhardt and will also handle Omaha and Des Moines. Edgar Moss continues in charge of Philadelphia, Washington and Pittsburgh, but will be succeeded as Philadelphia branch manager by Sam Moss, former assistant.

New appointments include Tom Bailey to the Boston, New Haven and Albany territories; George Roberts to Cleveland, Cincinnati, Buffalo and Indianapolis; Herman Wobber, assistant to Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, in supervision of West Coast activities, will maintain his control of Denver and Salt Lake territories west of the Pacific, and Clarence Hill, home office executive, will become Toronto branch manager, a newly created post.

Rogers Continues at Paramount

Option on Charles Rogers' contract was taken up this week by Paramount and he will make eight more features independently for release through Paramount. He will maintain the entire present organization.

Zanft Back from Katz Meeting

John Zanft returned to New York this week from Hollywood, where he conferred with Sam Katz regarding their new motion picture company.

PARAMOUNT AND RKO RECEIVERSHIP

tion, or liquidation and will be decided on the basis of greatest benefits to creditors.

Numerous independent Paramount stockholders' committees are soliciting certificates of deposit for the hearing March 17, at which will be decided whether the Paramount receivers should be made permanent. The deposit certificates were listed this week on the New York Stock Exchange. Commercial National Bank and Trust, of New York, is the depository.

In letters being sent to stock and bond holders by three of the committees, organized three weeks ago, it was said that Paramount Publix has $11,918,000 of 6 per cent bonds and $13,259,000 of 5½ per cent bonds outstanding. It also was said that Paramount owes banks $13,000,000.

The committee for the bonds of Paramount Broadway Corporation, of which Peter Grimm is chairman, pointed out in its letter that there is a possibility the receivers may seek to disaffirm the lease of the Paramount Building on Broadway. In any event, Paramount is understood to be negotiating for a reduction in rental for the Broadway key house. Rental totals $400,000 yearly.

Sam Dembow, Jr., Publix executive, left New York on a hurried trip to the midwest to inspect the situation there. Before leaving, Mr. Dembow indicated that a large number of theatres remaining open under Publix Enterprises, the bankrupt unit, are operating entirely out of admission receipts.

Publix theatres total about 900, of which 300 were said to be operated under the banner of Publix Enterprises, while subsidiaries handle the others.

Developments Elsewhere

Bankruptcy schedules for Publix-Nebraska Theatres, Inc., and A. H. Blank Theatres Corporation of Nebraska were scheduled to be filed in district court at Omaha Thursday.

The circuit filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy for its Mountain States Theatre subsidiary at Denver, and Wilbur Newton, financier and a member of the firm of Boettcher, Newton and Co., Denver, was named temporary receiver. The move was described as being necessary to adjust existing contracts covering theatre properties. Ten theatres are involved, two of which—the Denver and Paramount, at Denver—are owned by the Boettcher interests.

At Providence, Kirk Smith was named permanent receiver for another subsidiary, Rhode Island Theatres, Inc., which operates in four towns in that state. The properties will continue in operation.

Daniel Blumenthal, New York attorney and head of an independent stockholders' committee, charged that when Paramount Publix repurchased its own shares held by Great States Theatres, Kunsky Theatres and Columbia Broadcasting, it was not "strong" enough to handle the financial strain.

Henry C. Stickelmaier, Publix division manager at Chicago, with jurisdiction over the Indiana and Ohio territories, will operate all Ohio houses for Al. E. Reubens, who recently was appointed receiver at Toledo, Ohio, for Publix Ohio.

Harry LeBaron Sampson of Middleboro, Mass., and Samuel Pinanski of Brookline, Mass., are continued as temporary receivers of the Olympia Theatres, Inc., and the Olympia Operating Co., by Judge Stanley E. Qua of Suffolk superior court. A bill in equity was brought by New England Theatres, Inc., alleging the Olympia Companies owe it $350,000, and other claims filed since have increased the amount.

The Southern division of Publix intends booking road shows. The first to be booked is Eddie Cantor, who will play one night stands, in Houston, San Antonio, Dallas and Fort Worth. Publix has bought the Cantor Show outright, for the four cities.

In Dallas, Judge William H. Atwell, in U. S. district court refused to appoint an ancillary receiver to handle north Texas properties of Paramount Publix. The application, made by William Bole of New York, holder of a $1,000 bond, was dismissed on the grounds that "the untangling of the numerous holding companies and involved interests to determine where the control of various properties actually lies, properly belongs in the court of the parent jurisdiction, New York.

Judge Atwell said there was nothing to show that the Paramount-owned films now in Dallas, constituting property of the organization there, were not being rented locally under the direction of the New York receivers.

Permanent RKO Receiver Named

Street which he retains. Charles B. McDonald operates from 125th Street down, including Brooklyn.

Myron Robinson, former RKO real estate executive, is serving as executive secretary for the new national committee of landlords, an organization sponsored by Walter Reade, to represent interests of landlords who have theatres leased to RKO. Opposition to the RKO receivership has been indicated by the committee if such a course is found necessary to protect the interests of the landlords it represents.

Landlords have been asked to advise the committee of any lease negotiations instituted by RKO or of any defaults in rental. An attempt to determine the attitude of RKO toward its various theatre issues has been announced by the committee.

RKO is understood to be giving up three houses in St. Louis. These include the St. Louis, Orpheum and Grand Opera House. The Missouri, controlled jointly by RKO and Publix, probably will be retained.

Indefinite Time Limit

Coincidentally with refusal of U. S. District Judge William Atwell, Dallas, to appoint ancillary receivers for RKO and the RKO Southern Corporation properties in north Texas, the federal court at Wilmington granted an indefinite time limit to RKO Southern and RKO Western for the filing of schedules in bankruptcy. Judge Atwell, however, gave William Andress, Jr., attorney for the petitioners, permission to file an amended petition. The ancillary appointment was opposed by Irving Trust, receivers for the parent corporation in New York.

An amended petition for appointment of an ancillary receiver in Cincinnati for RKO Distributing and for RKO Midwest, a circuit subsidiary, will be heard early in March by Federal Judge Robert Nevin, of the Ohio district. The date for the hearing will be set at a meeting of all parties February 27.

The Irving Trust report filed with Judge Bondy shows that of RKO's largest aggregate assets, $72,945,544, or mostly all, is in accounts, notes and mortgages receivable from, and in investments in capital stocks of its subsidiary and affiliated companies. Current liabilities aggregate $555,749. Funded debt is $16,239,708 and consists of a ten year 6 per cent sinking fund gold debenture issue of $11,600,000, due Dec. 1, 1934, and secured as a lien on collateral pledged as security for payment of a six per cent gold note issue, which is 85 per cent owned by RCA. On January 1, this obligation was defaulted through failure to pay principal and interest due on the six per cent extended gold notes. Appointment of a receiver for RKO was given as another cause for defaultation.

The receiver's report also shows that by an agreement made on January 26 with RCA, and the Chemical Bank and Trust and Commercial Investment Trust, the default was remedied. This agreement called for an extension of the maturities on the 6 per cent gold notes to July 1, 1934, with monthly maturities thereafter until Jan. 1, 1935.

A payment of $2,465,122 by RCA to Chemical Bank and Trust and Commercial Investment was the consideration for this agreement. This sum represented RCA's payment for RKO stock and debenture subscriptions.

Additional Funded Indebtedness

The sum of $1,825,208 constitutes an additional funded indebtedness, according to the report. This amount was issued in 6 per cent gold notes and is due July 1, 1934 and monthly thereafter to Jan. 1, 1925, and is secured by collateral held by the Chemical Bank and Trust as trustee, on which the notes are a first lien. Extension on this issue was obtained through the payment of $200,000 on Jan. 26. A third issue of 6 per cent gold notes aggregating $2,814,500 calls for payment in installments due Jan. 1, 1933, July 1, 1933 and on January 1 of each year until 1936.

On the three gold note issues, $70,515,497 of RKO's total assets has been pledged as security.

Leases on the two Radio City theatres have been automatically cancelled by the receivership, the report says. The receiver has not exercised that authority, however, and it is expected this will not be done in view of the current business being done at both houses. Rent on the two theatres was paid to Dec. 31, 1932, but no rent for January and February has been paid as yet.

Future Financing Problematical

That an amended petition asking for the appointment of an ancillary receiver for RKO Distributing Corporation has been filed in federal district court for the southern district of Ohio, was revealed in the receiver's report. The RKO Distributing Corporation, as a subsidiary of RKO, has not been involved in receivership actions.

The receiver's report points out that the future financing of RKO and its subsidiaries is problematical. All former sources of financing, prior to the receivership, are no longer available, the report says. Bank loans, sale of securities, dividends on stocks of subsidiaries and interest on advances made to subsidiary corporations were included in these sources.

"No substantial amount of cash was held by RKO from which further loans may be made to subsidiaries on January 27," the report states.

The permanent receiver may find it necessary to give careful consideration to the operations of RKO subsidiaries "to the end that RKO's properties and business may be preserved as a corelated whole," the report adds.

Negotiations for the termination of the Radio City leases are now under way.

DEAR HERALD:

According to the number of dance, dinner and reception parties the picture folk in Hollywood are giving, as reported in "The Social Calendar" department in the Hollywood Herald (a magazine that seems to be growing in importance with age), one would suppose that all they do out there is to put on whoopee parties, but that's a mistaken idea. Occasionally they stop long enough to go down to Tijuana and take the rest cure. That magazine also makes mention of their giving a "Baby Shower" out there. Who ever heard of a "Baby Shower" in Hollywood? Back up, Leo, back up.

In a recent editorial in this magazine Mr. Ramsaye takes exception to our claim that a "Shannon spinner" is the proper lure for bass. He says: "The policy of this paper, once and for all, demands the use of the ducktail fly with a 'pork rind minnow' except where recourse must be taken to live frogs. This is positively final."

It is quite evident to us that Mr. Ramsaye's piscatorial experience has been limited to the narrow confines of Bull Creek and a willow pole and a cotton line with a "bobber" for catching carp and bullheads.

Izaak Walton would have looked upon a "bucktail fly with a pork rind minnow" for the taking of bass as being beneath the dignity of a piscatorial artist. We refuse to be classified in the carp and bullhead fishing class.

R. W. Hickman of the Lyric theatre at Greenville, Ill., says that business is so bad back there that he showed an old man a silver dollar and he didn't know what it was. Huh, that's nothing. Business is so tough out here that people have to eat their icicles without salt and pepper.

A man came up to Bradley's theatre the other night and laid down fifty cents and Walt fainted. Hickman is to be congratulated for having a dollar to show the old man.

We are informed that Mr. Colvin Brown, business manager for this magazine, has acquired a bit of terra firma between "Island Hearth," owned by Mr. Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief, and "Tinker's Green," owned by Mr. Terry Ramsaye, editor, all located on Greenwich Cove, in Connecticut. We hope Mr. Brown will give his location a more euphonious name, for there's a lot in a name.

If the boys will look up a nice shady spot for us to pitch our tent on, we will go down there this summer and dig clams and catch mackerel for 'em, provided Ernie will agree to edit this colyum for us, which we will betcha he won't do, he's so particular that way.

A fella told us the other day that those sobbing crooners were the highest paid talent on the radio. He said "talent," did you get that? If we were to hire a sobber we'd put him on some marsh up in Minnesota of nights and have him sob for the bullfrogs and tadpoles. With their super-intelligence they no doubt would appreciate it.

Whenever Valley Rudio
Starts sobbing on the radio
And all the saps begin to clap and shout,
It is then you bet we'll go
Right up to the radio
And grab the knob and turn the damthing out.

Last night it was 30 degrees below zero, with a wind sweeping down from the frozen plains of Alaska with hurricane violence, and now the weather man reports that tonight it will reach a minimum of 30 and a maximum of 45 below. There's no darn sense of a man predicting that kind of weather right on top of what we already have. There should be something done about this.

There have been over eleven hundred bills introduced in the Nebraska legislature so far this session. One thousand and ninety-six of 'em have about as much sense to 'em as a bullfrog. One brilliant Solon introduced a bill making it unlawful for a fisherman to have more than five fishrods in his possession at any one time. Can you beat that? We wouldn't be surprised if they should pass a resolution to join North Dakota and secede from the Union.

Several years ago one of our legislative members introduced a bill to appropriate $5,000 for a guy to make rain. We have tried for years to live that down and now this fishrod stuff comes up.

Outside of our legislature and other feebleminded institutions, this is a great state.

We haven't been able to stick our nose outside of this wigwam for ten days and our angelic disposition is beginning to jell. We are getting so doggone ugly that we heard our wife call up the agent this morning and ask him what the fare was to Reno. Help! Help!

It has always been a notion of ours that if we owed a man a hundred dollars we owed him a hundred dollars, and we never had the intestines to go to him and ask him to take ten cents on the dollar in settlement, as Europe is proposing that we do. If Europe wants to default let 'em go ahead and default and then we will know which side of the bullring they are on. It might be a good thing anyway, for it would teach a lot of saps to keep their money in this country instead of investing it in foreign securities. Some people have to be hit on the head with a sledge-hammer before they will wake up.

Harriet Menken, a syndicate writer, said in the press that Ruth Etting of stage and radio fame was becoming tired of the bright lights of Broadway and was longing to go back to the farm. She says: "Sixteen hundred acres in Nebraska is Ruth's corner on the great open spaces where she used to help her dear old dad milking the chickens when she was but a country girl."

"Milking the chickens." That's about what what one would expect from a New Yorker. Some of 'em think that milk comes from chickens and others that it comes from the milkweed. We milk cows out here.

Come on back, Ruth, out here is where you belong. Throw your rouge and lipsticks in the ashcan and come out here where the perpetual sunshine will put natural roses in your cheeks, and where you will forget all that froth and tinsel of Broadway, for it's nothing but bologna and hooey when you sum it all up. Out here is where women are women and you don't have to prove it to the men, but when you come back don't try to milk the chickens.

Arthur Brisbane says that the flag that Woodrow Wilson took to Europe with him sold recently in Paris for $96,000. He went on to say: "The price was too low for Europe. If Woodrow Wilson's flag had sold for half what it cost the United States to send him and the flag abroad it would have sold for FIFTY THOUSAND MILLION DOLLARS. Twice that would have been saved had he stayed at home." We presume to this Europe would say, as Wallace Beery did, "Well now, ain't that just too bad."

We saved their hides when they were on the rack
And now they start to holler,
And say they want to pay us back
With ten cents on the dollar.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Allied

COWBOY COUNSELOR: Hoot Gibson—Ran this with "Klondike" (Monogram) on a Saturday double bill and both pictures gave good satisfaction. Both pictures too good for this quantity show business. Played Feb. 4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and county patronage.

British

INIS CHIEF and THARK: Both Ralph Lynn. Quite funny to English speakers, but unintelligible to a "sez you" audience.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

Columbia

AMERICAN MADNESS: Walter Huston, Kay Johnson, Constance Cummings—Very good and exceptionally topical in this day of bank failures. Huston gives a bang performance as he always can be depended upon when they give him the roles. I don't understand why Johnson does not get more to do. She in her first picture with Charles Bickford was great, in "Dynamite" some two years ago, and then she faded out. This picture is strong meat and if you can get them in they will go for it strong and the chance for buildup the following days is good for they will talk about it.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

ATTORNEY FOR THE DEFENSE: Edmund Lowe—One of Columbia's old ones but it is worth while running in any theatre. It pleased and that is more than you can say for some of the newer product of any company. The acting is good. Good for any day of the week. Lowe as an attorney is fine. Played Jan. 22-23. Running time, 68 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

BITTER TEA OF GENERAL YEN: Barbara Stanwyck—This is perhaps the best picture we have had of the Chinese type. It's well produced. The acting is good and it's just an all-round good picture for any type house. But you will have to put a little push behind it to get them in, as the title seems to be a drawback at the box office. We fell below our average Sunday and Monday business, but had a good show for those who came. Played Feb. 5-6. Running time, 80 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

BLOND CAPTIVE: (Native Cast)—Advertising and picture will disappoint and hurt your house. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, about 55 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General.

CHILD OF MANHATTAN: Nancy Carroll, John Boles—Here is another mighty sweet one from Columbia. Carroll was never better in her palmiest days. Boles excellent too. Whole cast and direction is superb. A few ruff wisecracks in, but they liked 'em. What a shame Boles did not "toot" a sweet song, as he can "toot" 'em. There was one scene at the piano that would have been a natural for a song, but I guess his contract calls for no "tooting" without extra pay. Anyway it was a shame to have missed a song by Boles here. However, it's one dandy picture from the start to finish. Thanks Columbia and Eddie Buzzell.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Better made than the average western. A pleasing picture to fair business. Played Jan. 28-29.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLLYWOOD SPEAKS: Pat O'Brien—Just another picture. O'Brien much too good to be wasted with high hat Genevieve Tobin. Poor box office. Played Jan. 31.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HOLLYWOOD SPEAKS: Genevieve Tobin, Pat O'Brien—Just fair. Simple enough that my crowd wasn't sure but they thought they liked it. Just a filler in. If you have it bought you might as well play it. Played Dec. 16-17. Running time, 63 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT CLUB LADY: Adolph Menjou—Did fair at box office but not talked about much by patrons. Played Nov. 18-19. Running time, 70 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT MAYOR: Lee Tracy—That boy Tracy is the answer to the exhibitor's prayer. This one is just a program picture, but pleased and did fair at the box office. Critics might find some flaws, as I did, but who cares if they are entertained. My patrons were entertained. Territories vary, but I'd play it. Played Dec. 9-10. Running time, 61 minutes. —Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

PAGAN LADY: Evelyn Brent, Charles Bickford—Terrible. Ten years out of date.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt, Evalyn Knapp—Just another picture. If Columbia wants to keep Jack Holt on top, they had better put him in something worthy of his ability. Not good for Saturday. Played Jan. 20-21.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

THIS SPORTING AGE: Jack Holt—Good little show and will please 100 per cent. Columbia can sure put real sound in pictures. Played Jan. 23.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

VIRTUE: Carole Lombard, Pat O'Brien—Swell entertainment. The parts fitted both of them to perfection. Little bit hot for the kids. Good for Tuesday and Wednesday booking. Good business. Played Feb. 4. Running time, 64 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WAR CORRESPONDENT: Jack Holt, Ralph Graves—Lots of action. Story laid in China and timely as China is in the headlines right now. War story. Good for midweek or Saturday. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 78 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

First Anglo

THE RINGER: (British) Wallace thriller. Will get by. Quite a bit of action. Interest keeps up to finish.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

First Division

THE BIG DRIVE: (Official War Film)—Used here as tryout to biggest business house had done in months. Talk by producer A. L. Rule interesting and sound perfect. Played Oct. 27-28-29-30-31. Running time, 90 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

HOUND OF BASKERVILLES: (British) Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes. Draggy and they missed a good opportunity.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

First National

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—Many favorable comments on this one. Poor business account of bad weather, although drew better than we expected considering weather and condition of roads. Played Feb. 11-12. Running time, 78 minutes. —N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Michigan. Small town patronage.

CABIN IN THE COTTON: Richard Barthelmess—A wonderful picture and drew extra money with bad weather to contend with. Play the trailer by all means as it will bring them in. Played Dec. 8-9-10.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE CRASH. Ruth Chatterton—Terrible. Add plenty of shorts or don't play it. We double reels here and the whole feature goes nicely on two 2,000 foot reels. Business (?). Played Feb. 8-9-10. Running time, 52 minutes here.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

LIFE BEGINS: Loretta Young, Eric Linden—I considered this one of the best pictures I had seen in a long time. The entire story takes place in a maternity hospital. Certainly is different, but business dropped off two-thirds after the first day. I inquired and out of twenty-three people who had seen it I found two who liked it, thirteen who said they did not like it at all. The balance thought it just average. So the word of mouth advertising must have hurt it and also people do not want to see pictures like it. So here is hoping we do not have a plague of maternity ward pictures following the murder trail, the shockers and then the newspaper columnist pictures. Running time, 69 minutes. —M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General patronage.

LOVE IS A RACKET: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—A newspaper columnist type of story well done with twists and surprises that should please close to 100 per cent. In this you will see Lee Tracy in a supporting role, but from now on he will hardly be playing second fiddle to anyone. Drawing power for me below average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

THEY CALL IT SIN: Loretta Young, George Brent—This department proves its worth. I had this picture set for fifteen cents night but after seeing the reports of J. B. Weddle, Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Charles Lee of Pierre, S. D., I changed the date and set it for Saturday and Sunday. Result, it drew 30 per cent better than average business and gave perfect satisfaction and plenty of comments on this picture and it was good. There is nothing wrong with the picture but the title. It does not fit the picture but may help the box office draw a little. Played Feb. 4-5. Running time, 70 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THREE ON A MATCH: Joan Blondell—Blondell and Ann Dvorak hit that registered well with my Sunday afternoon patrons, for they talked about it the next day and that's the best advertising any theatre can get.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—A great picture for the men and boys and for the red-blooded ladies but some of them thought it pretty guesome. It's a picture out of the ordinary and deserves an extra amount of advertising. Did little below average for us at the box office, but pleased most of our patrons. Played Feb. 1-2. Running time, 79 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small patronage.

TIGER SHARK: Edward G. Robinson—Robinson always goes over here and he stepped on it in "Tiger Shark" and business grew the third night. Played Dec. 12-13-14.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: An extra good show and had strong drawing power at the box office. Farina and Brown make a great team for real laughs. Consider this as good as anything Brown has made to date. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 72 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

YOU SAID A MOUTHFUL: Joe E. Brown—Some liked it and some did not. Brown does not seem to draw here. Has several funny scenes, but the same old plot. Business fair. Played Feb. 5-6-7. Running time, 72 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

Fox

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow, Monroe Owsley—Clara is back, and the entire credit should go to little Clara. The story is good, but, well, it would not have been so good without Clara. A story with a little more comedy and a little less smut would have been much better for her. But this gal can act. She does it in this picture. Possibly they selected this story just to show folks what she can do. Now give us a dashing, humorous sort of story, Clara, with just a little nice naughtiness in it. Running time, 83 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow, Monroe Owsley—Satisfactory picture to better than average business. I think they could have picked a better story for her. She still has room to improve in her talking—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—A mighty entertaining picture. Star fine. Good story. Splendid cast. Gave 100 per cent satisfaction. Played Jan. 29. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—We did some extra advertising on this picture and did a little over average business. Opinions were varied. Played Jan. 31. Feb. 1-2.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

CALL HER SAVAGE: Clara Bow—Now, boys, here is a picture that brought them all in. The first real business I have done in six months. They came to see the return of Bow, and let me tell you they were not disappointed. Bow comes back with a bang. She has an opportunity to act and she knows how. She looks more beautiful than ever, and boy what a shape she's got. She's a lady, boys, and has she got looks. More power to you, Clara, and here is hoping you continue to make good pictures. Played Feb. 3.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Patrons pleased with showing. Played Jan. 14.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN: Edmund Lowe—Lowe can put most any picture over and they came back the second night to see him. We played "Hey Pop," Fatty Arbuckle's new two-reeler, and the kids ate it up, although it didn't register so well with the grownups, but those of us who remember Arbuckle got quite a kick out of his slapstick comedy and we need more of that type if we're to keep the kids coming.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

CONGORILLA: (Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson)—Very good picture but public is tiring of the animals. Didn't draw like "Bring 'Em Back Alive." Played Feb. 8-9. Running time, 72 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DANGEROUSLY YOURS: Warner Baxter, Miriam Jordan—Fairly entertaining picture, with Warner Baxter doing his usual good work. Would suggest only a one-day showing. Don't think it would build extra business the second night. Suitable for Sunday. Drew usual Saturday night crowd for me. Played Feb. 11. Running time, 72 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers, Irene Rich—Not Rogers' best, as far as comedy goes, but about the most human picture I have seen in many a day. Will tells them what he thinks, and minces no words. Above average business. Played Jan. 30-31.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

DOWN TO EARTH: Will Rogers—All we have to do here is advertise Rogers and they flock out to see him. They certainly ate up this picture as it seemed very timely at this season of "you know what." Rogers speaks the language these boys who toil under the ground like to hear and I could sell them a Rogers picture every month.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

THE GOLDEN WEST: George O'Brien, Janet Chandler—Very good Western. We can still pull them in with Zane Grey stories, although other Westerns fail. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 74 minutes.—N. E. Frank, Wayland Theatre, Wayland, Mich. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, "Boots" Mallory—A picture for the whole family. Good story, clean work and conversation. "Boots" is wholly charming in her role and the kids, Buster Phelps and George Ernest, nearly steal the show from the leads. Played Feb. 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn, "Boots" Mallory—Nice little program picture to fair business. Picture is slow to start. The two little boys put the picture over. If it wasn't for them it wouldn't be much.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Oklahoma. Small town patronage.

HANDLE WITH CARE: James Dunn and "Boots" Mallory—A splendid program picture. Pleased them all. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers, Ben Lyon—A clever picture with lots of smart wisecracks and a hot dance number in the night club. Not a big picture but plenty good and many laughs and that is what they want. Running time, 70 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

HAT CHECK GIRL: Sally Eilers—We could have done a real nice business if Jimmy Dunn had been teamed with Eilers, but they don't know Ben Lyon here. We couldn't sell him, but the Eiler fans flocked out and enjoyed the picture very much. Give us more Dunn-Eilers pictures and it will help. Played Jan. 29.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett and Spencer Tracy—They don't make any better entertaining program pictures than this one. Both stars and cast fine. Played it in the worst storm of the winter and the crowd was small but all were well pleased with the show. Played Feb. 9.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—Here is a fine little picture and one that will please all. Had more comments on this one than any picture for some time. With one exception the picture is fine. Why they had to have that drunken character in the show, I cannot see. If the director had cut this fellow's time on the screen in half it would have been too much. Why do they have to put such characters in a nice clean show? Ask me that. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 75 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—Both these Tracy boys are good and this picture is one of the cleverest that we have run. This Bennett girl has it all over her famous sister. She took a hard-boiled role and got away with it. Both these stars are well cast in a picture like this and they had able support in one of the funniest drunks that we have seen for some time. Your audience will go for this if they want laughs and a fast moving picture. Running time, 76 minutes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Spencer Tracy, Joan Bennett—Fox has handed us another knockout. Joan as a gum chewing waterfront restaurant cashier and Tracy as the flatfoot boy friend wisecrack their way through a story that proved just what my crowd wanted to see. Nothing elevating, nothing "artistic," but the laughs and the entertainment are present to make the patrons go out and send their friends in to see a good picture. Running time, 78 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

PASSPORT TO HELL: Elissa Landi—The best Landi picture to date. Why don't they give Landi some better stories. She is good and the people like her. She is a great actress, better then some others that are supposed to be big shots. Good for Saturday. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 72 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

RACKETY RAX: Victor McLaglan—McLaglen is plenty good in this picture and I heard several say it was above the average in screen entertainment. We played it Sunday afternoon and our short subjects failed to show up and we didn't have a squawk, so it must have pleased.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—Splendid performance. Brook gives satisfactory portrayal of his role. Played Feb. 4.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—A good detective story. However, I do wish the cast would have spoken American instead of movie English. Perhaps it would not have been artistic but I am sure it would have been more understandable.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—Conan Doyle story brought up to date. Well acted, interesting. Played Feb. 3-4.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SHERLOCK HOLMES: Clive Brook, Miriam Jordan—This picture did not have enough drawing power to bring them out into the cold. Our Sunday-Monday fell far short. Believe the picture was good enough. Played Feb. 5-6.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—A nice clean story just like we expect and want from this team. But I would like to see these two and El Brendel in a lighthearted, romantic sort of story again with a bunch of smiles and a few laughs—and so would my patrons.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor, Charles Farrell—I call this a mighty good picture. Both stars fine. Cast extra good. Story interesting. Gave good satisfaction in this town. Played Feb. 5.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers, Marian Nixon—Very good. Drew a bit better than average also--and it takes something to do that these days. Played Feb. 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S.D. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers, Marian Nixon—My regular Rogers fans did not like this picture as much as the majority of his former pictures. But the people who ordinarily do not like Rogers thought it great. Why? Because it has more of a story? Because it was not so funny? Because his remarks on politics and current events were curtailed? Search me; I don't know the answer. But I did check up and found that it did more, far more at the box office than any one of his three last pictures. Running time, 75 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

TOO BUSY TO WORK: Will Rogers—Our people liked this one better than the last ones. Business very poor but no fault of the picture. Fine entertainment for the country trade. Played Dec. 27-28-29. Running time, 88 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

WILD GIRL: Joan Bennett—The few who saw it advertised it plenty and we had a swell crowd on Monday night. Played Jan. 9.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Majestic

PHANTOM EXPRESS: Sally Blane, William Collier, Jr.—Very good for Saturdays. Has nice plot and keeps them guessing to the end. Sound very good. Business good.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

PHANTOM EXPRESS: Sally Blane, William Collier, Jr.—Fair picture. Children liked it. Not much drawing power due to zero weather. Played Feb. 8-9. Running time, 70 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

BUT THE FLESH IS WEAK: Robert Montgomery—Excellent society comedy. Chiefly interesting by introducing new lead, Nora Gregor, very attractive. Patrons all asking about her, so I hope we'll see her again.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

BLONDIE OF THE FOLLIES: Marion Davies—Well acted and directed. Back stage and a bit noisy. Hysterical ladies of the follies emoting and wearing their hearts on their sleeves. Business below normal. Comments adverse.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY: Lois Wilson, Jackie Cooper—Title is drawback as kid picture but really is swell picture for kids. Adults found it enjoyable. Running time, 78 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DOWNSTAIRS: John Gilbert—The best Gilbert but no drawing power. Rather over their heads. Poor business.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B.C., Can. General patronage.

FAITHLESS: Tallulah Bankhead, Robert Montgomery—Fine acting, but the story was terrible. Fair business. Played Feb. 2-3. Running time, 74 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—This one has it. Comedy, thrills and a little romance. Cliff Edwards all but steals the show. Pleased 100%. Played Feb. 1. Running time, 75 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. Mixed patronage.

GRAND HOTEL: Greta Garbo, John Barrymore, Joan Crawford—Did my best to get this one. Ran only one show each night so all would see it from the beginning. First night business okay and then a nose dive. Just not a small town picture.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

LETTY LYNTON: Joan Crawford—First half just like hundreds of other movies. When Crawford comes down to her mother it begins to get interesting and unusual and keeps it up. Good entertainment. Average box office.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

THE MASK OF FU MANCHU: Boris Karloff—Plenty of people told us how they disliked this one and hoped there would be no more like it. Played Jan. 29-30.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

PROSPERITY: Marie Dressler, Polly Moran—This pair means money for us. Splendid picture. Pleased young and old. Cold weather put the kink in it the third day. Played Feb. 6-7. Running time, 77 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

RED DUST: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow—As one school teacher said, very good entertainment, nothing out of the ordinary. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 86 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

RED DUST: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Much better picture than "Red Headed Woman." Not good for children.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

THE SECRETS OF MADAME BLANCHE: Irene Dunne—A very good picture. Will appeal to women. Good for Sunday. The first part of the picture has some good music. Played Feb. 12-13. Running time, 78 minutes.—Orris F. Collins. Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. Mixed patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March—Fine picture. Best Shearer has had in a long time. Did a good business on it. Running time, 100 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

SMILIN' THROUGH: Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard—This is the only good picture Metro gave me the entire season. It doubled my business. Exploit this and you will be more than pleased with the results. Even I could have picked out a better man than Leslie Howard for his part. Played Jan. 25-26.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark Gable—Can't tell how it would draw as I played it during a blizzard. As full of sex as a dog is fleas. No comparison with "Smilin' Through" as a picture. Not good for children.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Okla. Small town patronage.

STRANGE INTERLUDE: Norma Shearer, Clark

Gable—Distinctively a woman's picture. No doubt about its fine merit. Little draggy at times but the women set it up. In fact, over 75% of my audience were the "femmes." Shearer does herself proud especially in her character make-up of after years.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Una Merkel, Ernest Truex—A pretty good little picture, but lack of any well known stars will hurt its drawing power. Truex is good, but no one ever heard tell of him. Sort of a gang picture and not so hot for Sunday showing. Played Feb. 6-7. Running time, 72 minutes. R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—Step on this one. Has plenty of good comedy and a little mystery. Very clever story and Truex is very good. My patrons thoroughly enjoyed it. Played Feb. 9-10.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragoud, Ark. Mixed patronage.

AVENGING SEAS: Foreign cast—Couldn't figure out if it was a feature or a newsreel. Foreign cast. Never ran anything as bad. Had walkouts and plenty of comments on it. Take my advice, don't run it. Played Dec. 31. Running time, 61 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

Monogram

KLONDIKE: Thema Todd—Ran this with "Cowboy Counselor" (Allied) on a Saturday double bill and both pictures gave good satisfaction. Both pictures too good for this quantity show business. Played Feb. 4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KLONDIKE: Thelma Todd, Frank Hawks—The title in this refers to a girl's name, not a mining story as the title would indicate. In this you have the novelty of seeing Thelma Todd in a straight role. The picture is well done with thrills. Romance and suspense well blended and an unusual surprise twist at the end. Drawing power average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

Paramount

BILLION DOLLAR SCANDAL: Robert Armstrong—This picture will neither hurt nor help you. Cast has no drawing power here. Story too old to cause any draw at the box office. Just a picture, that's all.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

THE BLONDE VENUS: Marlene Dietrich—I did not think Dietrich could turn in as good a performance as this. Well directed and her best since "Blue Angel." Morbid subject. Box office better than normal.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—Another of Paramount's program pictures. Were afraid of it and played it on bargain night. It is one sweet little picture that has everything and is good enough for Sunday in towns with no competition. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 70 minutes. —L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

THE DEVIL IS DRIVING: Edmund Lowe, James Gleason—This is no percentage picture but no matter what they like they will like this one. I almost made some money on this one. Excellent climax when car plunges down an elevator shaft, with villain's cries being heard until the crash is heard. Moves a little slow until near the end, but it makes up for it then, and the patrons forget about the starting of it, and only tell about the climax. Played Jan. 27-28.—Running time, 73 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

EVENINGS FOR SALE: Herbert Marshall, Sari Maritza—Another program picture. No story. Had to stand at the door and explain the plot to them as they came out. But take it from me, this Maritza has got it all over Greta Garbo for looks. Use your own judgment on this one. Title might keep some of them away. Played Jan. 13-14. Running time, 70 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

A FAREWELL TO ARMS: Gary Cooper, Helen Hayes—Did not expect much as had heard so many say they did not want to see it. Some said they did not see how they could make a good picture out of it. Hayes excellent and never saw Cooper as good. It's not the type of story people want to see in these depressing times. Played Feb. 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FIGHTING CARAVANS: Gary Cooper, Lily Damita—As good as "The Covered Wagon." Fine picture, worth bringing back.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GUILTY AS HELL: Edmund Lowe—100% entertainment. Lowe is okay in anything. Would strongly advise you to play this. Played Feb. 2.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth—Very slow moving. It takes too long to get anywhere and it is dialogue all the way through and there is no action. The picture depends upon the story of two women bought for jobs.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

PROVING THE WORTH OF THE DEPARTMENT

It's an old story to veteran contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" but for the "cub reporters" there's gold in them thar words from Steve Farrar of the Orpheum at Harrisburg, Ill. Writes Steve of the Department:

"This department proves its worth. I had this picture ('They Call It Sin') set for a fifteen cent night. But after seeing the reports of J. B. Weddle, Lawrenceburg, Ind., and Charles Lee, Pierre, S. D., I changed the date and set it for Saturday and Sunday; it drew 30 per cent better than average business and gave perfect satisfaction. Had plenty of comment on this picture and it was all good."

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth, Susan Fleming—Real clever comedy drama. Plenty of clean fun engineered by Erwin and the veteran Alison Skipworth. Susan Fleming, the romance angle, looks like a comer too. Played Feb. 10-11.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HE LEARNED ABOUT WOMEN: Stuart Erwin, Alison Skipworth—I still can't figure out why they liked this one, but one never can tell. My patrons came out saying, "I think I can—I think I can," this was from Skipworth telling Erwin what the train said when it was climbing the hill. They liked it, and would have made money if I had charged more for it. Good crowd. Played Feb. 3-4. Running time, 73 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

HELLO EVERYBODY: Kate Smith—Lots of favorable comment on this one. Kate is a swell singer and also a good actress. You'll be surprised how many strange faces this picture will draw into your theatre. It's clean and entertaining, and that alone is the only way to get back lost patrons. My patrons absolutely refuse to go to "sex," "horror" and "gang" pictures. They are looking for clean, wholesome entertainment and "Hello Everybody" is just that type of picture. In spite of bad conditions this picture will draw extra business. Boost it, boys —and make a little extra money. Played Feb. 13-14. —R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—There must be something wrong with the audience; for this picture they gave the opinion for the most part that it was rotten. Some exhibitors said it rolled them out of their seats. Plenty walkouts on it and that hurts. The single saving grace was the chap that played the piano and that boy is good and more of him would have made a better picture. Why they did not like it except that they are not educated to this lunacy, is perhaps the reason. But the laughs were very few, and the business correspondingly off. Just too silly was the opinion of most of the audience.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

HORSE FEATHERS: Four Marx Brothers—Good as any of the Marx Brothers.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll—Carroll is not so hot here Saturday or any other day and what did come were not pleased. Play it up to your younger set and it may go over for it's that type of story. Played Jan. 12-13. Running time, 73 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

HOT SATURDAY: Nancy Carroll, Cary Grant—Another program picture that turned out better than intended. Didn't get hurt on this one and I believed they liked it. Title kept some of them away. I wouldn't be afraid to book it. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 61 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

IF I HAD A MILLION: 15 Star Cast—A very good picture. Sold it high, for it is nothing more than a program picture. But there isn't anyone that has seen it that wasn't satisfied. Did fair on this one, in spite of bad weather. Gave away wrist watch with one. Played Feb. 10-11. Running time, 83 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton, Richard Arlen—And they wonder why people have quit going to picture shows. This is positively the most horrible picture ever released. A few more of this type and what little business there is left would be absolutely ruined. It's nothing short of a crime to release a thing like this one. Played Feb. 1. Running time, 72 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Best Chevalier since "Love Parade." Mamoulian, directing, out-Lubitsched Lubitsch. Beautiful and clever. Above normal.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

LUXURY LINER: George Brent, Zita Johann—A finely acted. well directed and interesting picture. On the order of "Grand Hotel," only the entire story transpires on an ocean liner. Supporting cast very good. Picture will hold interest throughout. If you can get them in, they will enjoy it. Played Feb. 9-10. Running time, 63 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

MADAM BUTTERFLY: Sylvia Sidney—Sidney is wonderful. Portrays her part perfectly. Cary Grant and Charles Ruggles also good. Sets, sound and photography excellent and yet only 60% pleased with the picture. Everybody expected a musical, and of course were disappointed, as there is only one song. Paramount had an opportunity to make a great picture from this great play but failed. With song and music and a little color, this picture would have been a knockout. What a shame to neglect an opportunity of this kind for the sake of a little money. If the garden scenes were in color, and the cherry blossoms of Japan were only natural, with real songs and music of the original play, what a box office bang this would be. Played Feb. 5-6-7.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Warren Hymer, William Collier, Sr.—Good picture. Well liked. Made money on this one. Good sound. Played Dec. 1-2. Running time, 80 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN: Jack Oakie, Marion Nixon—Very ordinary program picture. Lots of action. but entire eight reels built around prize fighting. Rather boresome to ladies. If you don't interest the ladies it's not much of a show. Played Feb. 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR LEGS: Jack Oakie, C. W. Fields—Performance proved amusing to audience. A few thought it somewhat silly, however. Played Jan. 28.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

THE MIRACLE MAN: Chester Morris, Sylvia Sidney—Something fine about this, but they would not love or like it.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd, Constance Cummings—One of the best comedies ever shown here, but did about as much business as I expected. Set a new low for me and cost plenty. I have played my last Lloyd picture. We pay high for them but they don't click. He doesn't make enough pictures to have popularity. If you haven't played it just forget it. The only money this one will make is the guarantee film rental, and that only by the exchange. Played Nov. 28-29. Running time, 93 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT OF JUNE 13TH: Clive Brook, Frances Dee—This did not prove to be a good drawing card, but the performance was excellent. Favorable comments were received on all sides. Played Feb. 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

NO MAN OF HER OWN: Clark Gable, Carole Lombard—Gable jumped over the Metro fence and landed right in Paramount's lot and proceeded to make a mighty good picture. The picture drew just a fair crowd. Lombard very good in her part. The picture will appeal to your lady patrons especially.

Good for Sunday showing. Played Feb. 2-3. Running time, 80 minutes.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT: Jimmy Durante, Claudete Colbert, George M. Cohan—No business but a dandy picture. The kind of musical we have been wanting. Pretty hard to sell after election. If you get them in, they will be glad they came. Played Nov. 23-24. Running time, 73 minutes.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

UNDER COVER MAN: George Raft, Nancy Carroll—Very acceptable program picture. Better one day than two. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

RKO

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell—Very suggestive. Poor for the children, but the adults ate it up. Running time, 63 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THE AGE OF CONSENT: Richard Cromwell, Eric Linden—If you must play this, leave the kiddies at home. The grown-ups, after having seen it, wished they had stayed with the kids. This drew better than average business, but that is no achievement, as I felt like hiding in some dark corner, as the customers passed out the door. Plenty of adverse criticisms. Played Feb. 1-2.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

ANIMAL KINGDOM: Ann Harding, Leslie Howard—A wonderful picture and perfect acting, but did not draw. Played Jan. 29-30. Running time, 78 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. Mixed patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Joel McCrea, Dolores Del Rio—A beautiful picture, spoiled with one or two distasteful scenes. This did far above average business, and pleased nearly 100%. Music and settings are superb.—Edward L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio—A wonderful picture well done. Omitting the last scene where she sucks the lemon, the picture is perfect. Such scenes leave a bad taste and are uncalled for. The director must have just had a drink of ice water or what not to inject a scene like that in what otherwise is a wonderful picture. Played Jan. 20-21.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

BIRD OF PARADISE: Dolores Del Rio—As fine a picture as you want to see for settinggs and acting but for one scene, where Del Rio sucks an orange and then transfers the juice to Joel McCrea's mouth to give him a drink. It seemed very distasteful to everyone. They remarked about it. It was disgusting and spoiled the picture. The settings are fine and recording good. Step on it and bring them in as the small town don't know much about stooge hits of Broadway. Played Jan. 15-16-17. Running time, 81 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre. Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: Frank Buck—My patrons don't want to see silent pictures. Some very good photography, but no story; consequently people walked out in the middle of it. Don't advertise it as a talking picture. Less than average business. Played Jan. 27-28.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE: (Frank Buck)—Just another wild animal show. People are fed up on this kind of hokum. Those that saw it liked it but after the first night it took a nose dive and failed to come out of it. Played Jan. 8-9. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—An extra good western story. Full of action and fine acting for that type of show. Why can't they make some of these shows a little longer? Keene is the coming western star. Played Jan. 20-21. Running time, 54 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—Terrible. Comedy very forced.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

GIRL CRAZY: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—Book it. Then watch 'em smile when they come out. Their pictures please the majority. That is what counts nowadays. Good musical shows would be a good bet now. Let's have some.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—A little better story than their two previous ones. Drew as well as could be expected in these times and pleased 100%. Played Feb. 4-5.—Roy Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HOLD 'EM JAIL: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—A peach of a comedy. Plenty of laughs all the way through. Good for children as well as adults. Everyone pleased. Played Feb. 3-4.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

LADIES OF THE JURY: Edna May Oliver—Oliver in funniest comedy for years. A riot of fun. Recording poor.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, Buster Phelps—The children flocked in, about the same number of adults as usual. If we charged over 10c for the kiddies we would have cleaned up. Played Feb. 3-4.—Elaine S. Furlong, Star Theatre, Heppner, Oregon. Small town patronage.

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE: Mitzi Green, Buster Phelps—Drew the children and they seemed to like it. Adults stayed away.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

MEN ARE SUCH FOOLS: Leo Carrillo—Here is another of the kind of picture that causes low admission prices and double features. The acting is good, the story fair, but after all it's just another picture. Has no drawing power. We ran it for fifteen cents and did fair business. Better see this one before you decide what you are going to do with it. Played Feb. 3. Running time, 70 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea—It is my personal opinion that we would all be better off if they would stop making pictures of this type. We have had all of the shocker type of pictures that most of the patrons want. This is a fairly good picture of the type. It pleased most of those who came to see it. Business was off 50% when we ran it. Not suitable for Saturday or Sunday in my town. Running time, 78 minutes.—S. M. Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill. Small city patronage.

THE MOST DANGEROUS GAME: Joel McCrea—another one of those mystery horror pictures but somewhat different than the rest. Very good and will please. Action and thrills. Good for the end of the week. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 63 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

PHANTOM OF CRESTWOOD: Ricardo Cortez, Karen Morley—Very good mystery play and it should have done business due to the broadcasting of the story and the unsolved angle of it that they left on the air. If conditions had been normal, it deserved stand-out business as it holds suspense clear to the end. Morley is plenty good as the blackmailing vamp.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. Rural town patronage.

ROCKABYE: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea, Paul Lukas—Moderately entertaining. Acting good, but it lacks something to bring it above average. Program picture. Played Feb. 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SPORT PARADE: Joel McCrea, Marian Marsh—A very good program picture for any town. It will please the majority. Played Dec. 30-31. Running time, 65 minutes.—G. N. Turner, Family Theatre, Pine City, Minn. Small town patronage.

STATE ATTORNEY: John Barrymore—It pleased those who like this type of picture. Others did not care for it. Too much similarity to other court pictures shown. People want comedy, music and singing nowadays. Let's have more "Rio Rita," "Gold Diggers" and "Desert Songs." That is what the small town wants. Played Jan. 27-28.—Guy W. Johnson, Johnson Theatre, Bowman, N. D. General patronage.

SUNSHINE SUSIE: (British)—The best ever produced in England. Good anywhere. Tuneful and funny. Biggest business for two years.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

Tiffany

THE LAST MILE: All star—A great picture of prison horrors. Great acting. Business terrible but satisfied those that came. Played Feb. 2-3.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LENA RIVERS: Charlotte Henry—A picture any exhibitor can be proud to play. There is a tieup waiting for anyone who goes out and gets it. Give it a good send-off and the picture will do the rest. Played Dec. 28-29.—Edward L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

United Artists

ARROWSMITH: Ronald Colman—Well liked. Follows the book. Semi-special. Nothing very original about it. Worth 30% above average.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

CONGRESS DANCES: (Ufa) Lilian Harvey—Beautiful, light and amusing on a big scale. Same sort of thing as "Sunshine Susie." Little over their heads. Attendance above average.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

CONGRESS DANCES: Lilian Harvey—This was a very poor investment as it didn't gross enough to pay for film rental and had more walkouts than I have had in years. This picture may have knocked them cold in Europe, but it left them cold in Mason, where we are not interested in what happened in Vienna a hundred years ago, and where the idea of being an Emperor's temporary mistress is not considered the proper answer to a maiden's prayer. The dialogue is hard to get and the story is impossible to follow. The only comments were, "Why did you show this thing?" and "Wotinell is it all about?" Played Feb. 7-8.—Roy Adams, Mason Theatre. Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MAGIC NIGHT: Jack Buchanan—Vienna musical setting. A sort of feeble "Congress Dances." If they let Buchanan dance more and sing it were better.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

RAIN: Joan Crawford—No good for small town. Censorship ruined the end. Played Jan. 26.—Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Canada. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Man, man, but the producers are certainly putting entertainment into their pictures these days—and this one received more than its share. It proved just what was needed to make the old box office think the Democrats had kept their promises. Crashes, stunts, daredeviltry, cocksureness, romance, humor, adventure, romance, just a little naughtiness, entertainment. Just try to find something that a good picture needs that this picture doesn't have. Running time, 83 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—Here is a picture of epic proportions. It is in the big league class in every way. One scene mars an almost perfect picture, the screams of the burning pilot and shooting him to get him out of his agony. The picture did not need this touch of horror, as it is packed with all kinds of punches and thrills. Luckily this scene is in the early part of the picture. Drawing power good. It drew extra attendance both Sunday and Monday.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. General patronage.

AIR MAIL: Pat O'Brien, Ralph Bellamy—A knockout Saturday picture. Teeming with action, suspense and romance. Ralph Bellamy and Gloria Stuart are surely making a name for themselves. Let us see more of this cute little Lillian Bond. Just another reason why every small town exhibitor should buy Universal product.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—Best picture of its kind yet made. I played it since football season and, of course, failed to get business it would have if played sooner. Did not draw as well as Paramount's "70,000 Witnesses." Running time, 78 minutes.—Howard B. Schuessler, La Fayette Theatre, La Fayette, Ala. Small town patronage.

THE ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen, Gloria Stuart—Very good picture. Gloria Stuart should have had a better part, though. My patrons don't know enough about football. Drew average business.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOURTH HORSEMAN: Tom Mix—Good picture. Mix is good drawing card. Every one of our patrons likes him. Played Feb. 2-3. Running time, 57 minutes.—Alyce Cornell, Galewood Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

LAUGHTER IN HELL: Pat O'Brien, Gloria Stuart—Only another picture. A chain gang story. Women didn't like it.—C. M. Hartman, Liberty Theatre, Carnegie, Oklahoma. Small town patronage.

THE OLD DARK HOUSE: Boris Karloff—This star surely has a name for himself, and with Universal behind him, he will continue to make A-1 pictures. Played this one New Year's Eve and 75% of the audience of the regular performance came back to see it at the midnight show. Great little picture. Played Dec. 31 midnight.—Edward L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONCE IN A LIFETIME: Jack Oakie—This picture did a great first night business, but flopped on the second night. I gave it all I had, but it just wasn't worthy of the name of the play. Played Dec. 26-27. —Edward L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky. Small town patronage.

TEXAS BAD MAN: Tom Mix—Mix, as usual, our best drawing card on Saturday nights. This was our best night since the middle of November. Played Jan. 21.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

TOM BROWN OF CULVER: Tom Brown—A very good picture of what a military academy does for a young fellow. No mushy love story and nobody missed it. I tied up with the high school on this and it is a perfect picture for that purpose. Played Jan. 26-27.—Roy Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Warner

BIG CITY BLUES: Joan Blondell—A very good program picture. Story a little rough but that seems to be what they want. Gave general satisfaction. Played Feb. 7.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy, Mary Brian—This picture went over big. Fast and snappy. Plenty of humor, action and entertainment. But it is very regrettable that a title more descriptive of the type of story was not selected. A large number of my folks thought it was another "Life Begins" type of story.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

BLESSED EVENT: Lee Tracy—Very good picture and will please everyone. Hard to get them in. Needs good advance campaign and would suggest you use Warner trailer as the title will be misleading and not mean much in small towns. Played Jan. 11. Running time, 84 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

HARD TO HANDLE: James Cagney—you can readily see why this chap Cagney is hard to handle. He's full of pep and ambition and thinks he's the whole show. This picture is nothing to rave about. Just a little program picture that will please a one-night audience. Not for extended engagement. Played Feb. 4.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

I AM A FUGITIVE FROM A CHAIN GANG: Paul Muni—A natural if you exploit it properly. Pleased everyone and did best business in weeks. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1. Running time, 90 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

LAWYER MAN: William Powell—A very pleasing Powell picture keeping up with the Vitaphone Brothers' nice average for the season. I am keeping a close check on each producer's average and this company thus far is on top and in addition, has had fewer "crows" than any other producer.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. Mixed patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—In spite of the panning it has received and also in spite of the fact that both stars die on us, my crowd thought this picture pretty good entertainment. There is not much story, what little there is takes place on a liner, and there is a supernatural twist on the end that a good many of my folks missed. And had it not been for the comedy supplied by Frank McHugh and Aline MacMahon, it would have been a dud. These two folks supplied the entertainment and Powell and Francis gave it a box office pull.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY: George Arliss—Clean as a whistle, excellent humor, wonderful acting, pleasing and a picture that could offend no one. It is a shame that Arliss pictures cannot be made profitable here. Running time, 72 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. Small town patronage.

WINNER TAKE ALL: James Cagney—Good fight story with a perfect role for Cagney. He shows up well in the ring with clever footwork and a classy uppercut. Played Jan. 31-Feb. 1.—Roy Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

World Wide

BETWEEN FIGHTING MEN: Ken Maynard—Always up to good quality. This one has plenty of good comedy thrown in and your western crowd will like it. Played Jan. 27-28. Running time, 62 minutes. —L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

THE CROOKED CIRCLE: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Here's one that will make you money if you have any Gleason or Pitts fans. Has lots of laughs and just another mystery. Everyone satisfied and Sunday business grand. Played Dec. 4-5-6-7. Running time, 70 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

THE DEATH KISS: Adrienne Ames, David Manners, Bela Lugosi—A very entertaining story that holds interest. However, very bad mistake of showing projection room film fire. Does not have a good effect on patrons. Business good. Running time, 75 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

DYNAMITE RANCH: Ken Maynard—Satisfactory to western fans. Fair crowd despite stormy weather. Played Jan. 7.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Mixed patronage.

HYPNOTIZED: Charlie Mack, George Moran—Not many laughs for a Mack Sennett special. Disappointed many of our patrons inasmuch as you have only one black crow after the start of the second reel. Held up well first day, but look out for the others if you play it more than one. Played Jan. 29-30-31. Running time, 70 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

WHISTLIN' DAN: Ken Maynard—Very good western. Played Jan. 6-7. Running time, 60 minutes.—L. V. Gucker, Dawn Theatre, Hartford City, Ind. General patronage.

TORCHY'S BUSY DAY: Ray Cooke—A good Torchy comedy. Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenwich, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MGM

ALUM AND EVE: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—Very funny but not their best by any means. Two reels.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

ANY OLD PORT: Laurel & Hardy—a good comedy which got plenty of laughs. Print bad. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala.

FITZPATRICK TRAVELOGUES: Good, but spoilt for our audience owing to announcer mispronouncing every word it's possible to.—G. G. Baiss, Capitol Theatre, Duncan, B. C., Can. General patronage.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champions—One reel of real circus performing. None better. Very interesting.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich.

TAXI FOR TWO: Taxi Boys—Leave it to these boys to get the laughs, and they sure got them here. A very good comedy. Running time, 2 reels.—Cecil Ward, Roxy Theatre, Martinsville, Va.

WILD PEOPLE: Nice two-act musical in color. Pleasing to the eye and tuneful music and nifty dancing. They like these.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

YOUNG IRONSIDES: Charlie Chase—Just fair. Too silly. Comedy ideas are running low.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

Paramount

BETTY BOOP BIZZY BEE: Betty Boop Cartoon —Good cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paraground, Ark. Mixed patronage.

BLUE OF THE NIGHT: Bing Crosby—An excellent two-reel subject with Crosby. A good story and excellent singing by Bing. Good for your best nights.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

DOUBLING IN THE QUICKIES: Lloyd Hamilton—The general public already regards the picture industry as "squirrely" enough without having the inside dope thrust upon them, as they do in this "expose" of studio's tactics.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House Theatre, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

DOWN AMONG THE SUGAR CANE: Lillian Roth—A very good number, of the "Bouncing Ball" series. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

FIGHTING FINS: Very good as are all sport shorts —Lew Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small-town patronage.

LION AND THE HOUSE: A very satisfactory short. We have had Jackie the lion in so many films lately, I am afraid they will wear him out, but at that he is a relief after seeing so many would-be comedians strut their stuff.—E. D. Hilsinger, Liberty Opera House Theatre, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

PICTORIALS: Another fine series from Paramount. —Lee Brewerton, Capitol Theatre, Raymond, Alberta, Can. Small town patronage.

THE ROOKIE: Tom Howard—Very poor one-reel comedy. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala.

STOPPING THE SHOW: Betty Boop—A very clever cartoon. Running time, 8 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

RKO

BRIDE'S BEREAVEMENT: Everybody will enjoy this foolishness.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

JITTERS THE BUTLER: Bobby Clark, Paul McCullough—If a kick in the pants is funny then this is a comedy. Unfortunately it takes more than that to amuse some people. There is such a thing as humor without dirt, but the producers haven't found that out yet.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House Theatre, Marathon, N. Y. Small town and country patronage.

PIANO TOONERS: Tom and Jerry cartoon—Good on any day or any feature.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

SPANISH TWIST: (Cartoon)—Tom and Jerry cartoon always good. Running time, 8 minutes.—Orris F. Collins, Capitol Theatre, Paragould, Ark. Mixed patronage.

TAKE 'EM AND SHAKE 'EM: Gay Girls—Be sure you get an uncensored print of this, as you want the full effects to make it go over. Very good. Running time, 2 reels.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Thenon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky.

United Artists

BABES IN THE WOODS: Silly Symphony cartoon—A beautiful one-reel subject. Never saw any better.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BABES IN THE WOODS: (Cartoon)—A colored Silly Symphony. These are in a class by themselves. The children just eat them up.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TOUCHDOWN MICKEY: (Cartoon)—Messrs. Disney and Mickey Mouse are in a class by themselves. This one brought down the house.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

BOYS WILL BE BOYS: Frank Albertson—Just ordinary.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

DOCTOR'S ORDERS: Franklyn Pangborn—Better than average comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, State Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

RADIO STAR REELS: Morton Downey, Vincent Lopez—Another peach of a two-act musical. Novel story and fine sets, lots of comedy and Lopez music, and Downey's singing, a real treat. However, recording could be better. A little tin-panny.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill.

SEA SOLDIERS' SWEETIES: Slim Summerville—This is one grand comedy. A laugh from start to finish. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. O. Smith, Dixie Theatre, Lineville, Ala.

Warner Vitaphone

BROADWAY BREVITIES: The best two-reelers I have ever seen. I believe they please more people than comedies do.—Edith Fordyce, Princess Theatre, Selma, La. General patronage.

BY-GONES: Ruth Etting—A very nice short with Ruth doing some good song numbers.—E. D. Hilsinger, Library Opera House, Marathon, New York.

HEY HEY WESTERNER: Another color musical act. No better shorts made than these.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

LEASE BREAKERS: Another Warner band act with Aunt Jemina singing. Pleased all.—Charles Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

TIP, TAP, TOE AND C'EST PAREE: These shorts are good and a good change from the comedies.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kansas.

TIP TAP TOE: Hal Leroy, Mitzi Mayfair—Another Vitaphone hit with Leroy, who can certainly dance, and my patrons like it very much. Running time, 18 minutes.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town patronage.

Serials

RKO

THE LAST FRONTIER: Creighton Chaney—Twelve chapters. The first six or seven episodes of this were fair, but after that it grew rapidly worse and it was a relief when it was ended.—Roy Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

Universal

AIL MAIL MYSTERY: Jas. Flavin, Lucille Browne—This serial and all the rest of the Universal line-up should not be passed up by any small town exhibitor. It has surely put our Saturday business in the "black." We played "Heroes of the West" and are just finishing "Jungle Mystery." They sure are business builders, and deserve close attention. Twelve chapters.—Edw. L. Ornstein, Vernon Theatre, Mount Vernon, Ky.

HEROES OF THE WEST: Noah Beery, Jr.—Twelve chapters. The worst I have ever shown. Patrons left when feature ended. Refused to see it. Didn't blame them. Sound terrible. No story. No quarrel with Universal. Nothing to be gained by playing it. Twelve weeks of nothing. Running time, 19 minutes each chapter.—Charles S. Edwards, Queen Theatre, Pilot Point, Texas. General patronage.

Court Denies Application For Consent Decree Change

Application of the Torquay Corporation, a stockholders' organization of RCA, that the United States district court of Delaware modify certain provisions of the consent decree of last November, which was supposed to have dissolved the socalled radio patent trust, has been denied in an opinion handed down by Judge John P. Nields at Wilmington, Del.

"The public and the United States can have no interest in any controversy of RCA stockholders and creditors against General Electric and Westinghouse companies," Judge Nields said in his opinion. Other questions raised by the Torquay Company are reserved for further consideration.

MUSIC IN PICTURES AND THE THEATRE

Up and Down the Alley . . .

I've been given to understand that the first words spoken by the new pride and joy of the Sam Serwer (Witmark's) family were: "Where the devil is Ed Dawson's column?" . . . All I can answer is, "Here 'tis, youngster, and here's your first press notice":

"Born January 26, 1933, at 6 p. m. sharp. Weight, 6 lbs., 9 oz. Baby Serwer came into the world yelping his head off. Mother and baby doing great, but you should see the old man!"

Jesse Crawford, the Poet of the Organ, recently turned in his resignation to Boris Morros, but from an important source we hear that it was not accepted. . . . Jesse and Mrs. Crawford are at present being featured at the Chicago theatre, Chicago, and doing their broadcasting from dear old Chi. . . . It is also rumored that Jesse and Helen will return at an early date to "the Crossroads of the World."

Dick Leibert has the distinction of having been featured in both the Music Hall and the RKO Roxy. Everything is done on such a large (shall we say, colossal) scale at the Music Hall that to me it is a welcome relief to hear those notes of the organ as played by Radio City's chief organist.

A few weeks ago it was reported that Warner's and Paramount had come to a working agreement whereby Milton Charles (Warner's ace organist) was to go into the Brooklyn Paramount. So far nothing has come of it and Elsie Thompson, who has been the regular house organist since the house opened, four years ago, continues as a great favorite of the customers.

Arlo Hults, formerly of the RKO circuit here in New York, has been featured at the Paramount in Glens Falls, New York, for the past two or three months and is doing so well that he now has a commercial and is broadcasting over the new Columbia system station there. . . . It is station WGLC. . . .

The largest organ west of New York (the one at station KMO, in the Winthrop Hotel, Seattle) is featuring Arnold Leverenz, former theatre organist, in a daily program. . . . So far as I know Arnold and Clarence Leverenz, organists at the State, Kalamazoo, Mich., are not related. . . . Incidentally, Clarence is on the air now, too, and from all reports is making new friends, fast and happily.

ED DAWSON

Laemmle Predicts Musical's Success

Musical pictures, with numerous songs unobtrusively introduced into the action, and with a complementary minimum of dialogue, will be increasingly popular and find a wide range of markets during 1933, in the opinion of Carl Laemmle, Jr., in charge of production at the Universal Coast studio.

Mr. Laemmle bases his belief on the fact that music speaks a universal language, internationally understood. "For years," he said, "we have been listening to and loving opera in foreign language. The words made little difference to us, because we understood the moods of the music. Today American pictures are fighting for world markets. The moods of American songs will be understood all over the world, if the words are not." Mr. Lammle pointed out the broadened market possible through the diminution of the amount of dialogue in films, "expressing the action in pantomime."

Universal is releasing "Be Mine Tonight," a foreign musical, and plans production, in the near future, of an American musical picture, "Women, Inc.," based on "Lilies of Broadway," by John Murray Anderson.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 161.—(A) Give us your views as to just what constitutes a good film splice. (B) Tell us, using as many words as may seem necessary, just how you would yourself proceed to make a perfect film splice. I shall ask nothing more this time, as it is quite possible it may be found desirable to publish more than one answer.

Answer to Question No. 155

Bluebook School Question No. 155 was: (A) To what is the increase or decrease of resistance in electric conductors proportional? (B) What is meant by "normal temperature," and for what is it used? (C) Just what does a watt represent? How is its value ascertained by calculation? (D) Describe the following terms: Cycle, frequency, alternation. (E) Is there any difference between the terms potential and polarity?

Because of a comment received from New Zealand, and an occasional one from other points, I should like to take this occasion to explain that this "school" is not intended for engineers. It is intended to be of help to practical projectionists and to beginners. We do not split hairs down to the ten-thousandths of an inch, or deal in scientific hieroglyphics. Chemical symbols, for example, mean just exactly nothing at all to the average projectionist, nor will he take time to examine into their meaning. There is no good reason why he should. In this school, as in my books, exactness is often sacrificed to clarity. If the scientifically correct answer were always given, it very often would be just about totally incomprehensible. The answers given (save for an always possible error which is almost certain to be checked up and reported) are quite nearly enough right to serve all practical purposes, and they are so worded that even the layman cannot err very much in understanding them.

That this "school" has done an enormous amount of good there is evidence in plenty. It is not perfect! Few things in this world are.

With three exceptions, all those usually sending in correct answers made good. W. D. Pendrill, A. L. Britten and D. O. Nicolson, R. Harvey, T. F. Butterfield, N. H. Saprys and S. C. Barber are additional students replying correctly to No. 155. We will let Kanneth Dowling answer Section A. He says:

"Resistance in electrical conductors is proportional to (1) material of conductor—copper, silver are best conductors; (2) diameter of conductor—larger, less resistance, smaller, more resistance, metallic content and temperature same in both cases; (3) length of conductor—longer, more resistance; shorter, less resistance; (4) temperature—colder, less resistance; warmer, more resistance (except carbon). This is illustrated by lighting a powerful light, such as a 1,000-watt lamp used in stereos; when turned on the sudden rush of current momentarily dims other lights on the same circuit until the operating temperature is reached raising the resistance to normal.

"Some might remark that amount of current flowing should be added, but a moment of reflection will show that this is automatically taken care of in item 4.

(B) We will listen to the excellent reply of Rau and Evans to this one. They say: "Normal temperature is 75 degrees Fahrenheit, or 24 degrees Centigrade. It is used as a base from which to calculate increase or decrease in resistance of a metallic conductor due to increase or decrease in temperature. Resistance of different metals does not vary in the same proportion with temperature changes. The better the conductivity of a metal, the less the proportion of increase in resistance due to rise in temperature. For example, heat iron to 100 degrees Centigrade and it will have lost 39 per cent of its conductivity as measured at normal temperature. Heat silver to the same degree and it will be found to have lost only about 23 per cent.

"Thus, to calculate the difference in resistance in various metals due to temperature changes, the 'temperature coefficient' is employed. The coefficient (obtainable from standard text books) of the metal under examination is multiplied by the number of degrees change in temperature from normal (75 degrees Fahr.) and the result added to the resistance at normal temperature. In the case of carbon and certain other materials having less resistance when hot than when cold, the result would be subtracted instead of added."

(C) We will let Rayner answer this one. He says: "Recommended by the Chicago International Electrical Congress of 1893, and passed by Congress July 12, 1894, the legal units of electrical measures to be used in the United States shall be:

"The watt is practically equivalent to work done at the rate of one joule per second. [Exact rate is 10^7 ergs per second. Power produced by one ampere flowing under a pressure of one volt. Approximately equal to 1/746 of one horse power.—One volt-ampere. Derives its name from James Watt.—F. H. R.] In practical calculations volts times amperes equals watts if the current be d.c. In a.c., watts equals volts times amperes times power factor, though on single-phase a.c., with resistance load only, the power factor would be unity, in which case we would have watts equals volts times amperes."

(D) Brother Danielson will advise us as to this one. He says: "The cycle is one complete series of operations comprising two alternations, a new cycle starting as the one next preceding it is completed. The first alternation begins with e.m.f. at zero, but rising gradually (the term gradually is used relatively, the operation is very fast, of course) to maximum pressure, whereupon it again sinks gradually to zero. Instantly the e.m.f. again rises to maximum, but with direction of current flow reversed. Again it drops to zero, thus completing the two alternations which comprise one cycle. During this cycle it is observed that the e.m.f. has twice risen to maximum from zero, and that the direction of current flow has been reversed. This procedure, of course, repeats itself, a certain number of times each second of time, usually 60 in commercial current, though this may vary widely in different power plants. In fact it does vary from 25 to 60. In earlier days it varied from 25 to 140 cycles per second. The term 'frequency' is employed to designate the number of cycles per second. Sixty-cycle current means there are 60 cyles per second. The alternation I have already described."

(E) Concerning potential and polarity, W. Ostrum says: "There is no practical difference between the two. They both mean affinity (desire) of the positive and negative of the same power source for each other. It is by the proper connection of these two that through the operation of polarity or potential we are able to obtain heat, light or power."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

GREETINGS: PUBLIX-NORTHWEST!

THE IDEA OF DEVOTING an entire section of the Round Table Club pages to any one division or group of theatres is not a brand new idea at all. Several years ago we sponsored two Canadian sections in which we invited the east and west divisions of the original Famous Players-Canadian Theatres to vie with each other in making such special sections outstanding in many ways.

But in the interim we had been so busy trying to keep pace wtih the constantly mounting contributions from all over the world that we had little or no time at all to think about encouraging the idea among the different groups operating as units in various sections of the country. Not that we did not relish the idea. On the contrary, there is nothing we would like better than to feature material of this sort from time to time, providing the manpower and executives of the various groups would cooperate and get back of the idea and see it through.

WHEN CHARLIE WINCHELL FIRST advanced the thought we answered him so fast that we rather feel he found himself snapped up much too quickly; but Charlie was equal to the task and immediately set about to find out whether his own enthusiasm was reflected in the feelings of his superiors and all those others who go to make up this fine division of some seventy theatres located in thirty-one different towns and cities. This week's pages are the answer.

In these times of receiverships, economy moves, and what have you, the discontinuance of home office house organs sort of isolates the many men spread out all over the map. Although the house organ idea had its good points, it must be admitted that the audience was very, very limited. Limited to a sort of family affair, if you get our point. It might be compared to the average business man who came home to dinner and his family every night to hear his praises sung. One soon gets tired of hearing one's family tell him how good—or bad—he is.

By incorporating the activities of ALL theatre men where they belong in a section devoted and dedicated to theatremen, it gains for them an audience of world-wide proportions. If they succeed in doing something just a wee bit better than their brother showmen, this is where such activity should be recorded and reported.

UPON THIS PREMISE WE HAVE the Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald. Here, week by week, showmen from all over the world sit around the table and talk shop. Talk it in a language they all understand, and here they get new ideas for themselves and their theatres.

Although gathered in the shortest possible space of time, those who helped get it together have made a swell job of it, and as you go through these pages we feel you will appreciate how fine an organization J. J. Friedl and L. J. Ludwig have perfected. An organization which even in these tough times keeps out of the red and refuses to let Dame Rumor interfere with its proper administration. This alone speaks volumes for those who are responsible for the operation of so large a group of theatres.

We are hopeful that the special-section idea will spread, and we would welcome the opportunity of designating future issues from time to time to this same excellent idea. The thought need not be confined to a circuit group of houses. For example, if the showmen of a particular state would get together and decide to furnish us with the material for such a section dedicated to their own group we would afford them the same consideration and assistance as we did in this instance.

SHOWBUSINESS IS AN INDUSTRY of ideas. Whether those ideas are strictly original or just dressed up in new clothes is of minor importance. The primary purpose and our mission in the industry is to take all ideas and present them to our many members and readers so as to give them the benefit of each others experience.

Watching this section develop became a most absorbing incident in our daily task, and we sincerely trust that the contents will be found as timely and as interesting to others as it was to us.

Our grateful appreciation is extended to every man in the Publix-Northwest Division who helped make it possible.

"CHICK"

PUBLIX, IN THE NORTHWEST!

JOHN J. FRIEDL

JUST in case you don't know about this interesting theatre executive, we would have you know that he was born in Sioux City on December 6th, 1887. Left an orphan while still a youngster, he always managed to support himself and when old enough secured a position in a neighborhood theatre operating what was then called by the flattering name of "projector."

As near as one can ascertain, he remained identified with theatre operation ever since, having managed the Rialto in Lincoln, Neb., while under the voting age and under the watchful eye of City Manager Joe Garman. In addition to his managerial work he started working out orchestral overture prologues and several other novel presentation ideas which were later to become an important part of de luxe theatre operation.

Not long after he was appointed city manager of Hastings, Neb., where he remained until he joined the Hostettlers. From then on he moved forward rapidly, always storing up that most valuable asset, experience, and it was the wide experience in his earlier training that equipped him so well for executive work, not alone in the field, but in the home office.

His exploitation background—and incidentally Mr. Friedl is a great believer in good merchandising and exploitation—was gleaned in no small measure while working under Claude Saunders and the original group of Paramount Exploiteers.

Because of the wide experience he has had, Friedl is one of the best known and respected showmen in the country. His knowledge and understanding of projection, general theatre operation, plus a real insider's appreciation for merchandising, advertising and exploitation has won for him the admiration and respect of every man he comes in contact with.

Like most other capable theatre executives, he loves to talk about showbusiness whenever he gets the chance. His favorite outside sports and interests are football, swimming and his two boys. All in all, we should say that John J. Friedl possesses all of those qualities that go to make up a real human executive and one any man would like to work with. Our own contact with many of the boys in this division has convinced us that we are not rating him too highly.

Fine Organization Spirit Under Capable Leadership Accounts For This Division Being a Profit Maker!

IF the contents of this special edition are at all outstanding, interesting or helpful, it must not be considered so because of any one man in this fine organization. On the contrary, it is an achievement of the outfit as a whole. Working together in perfect harmony; cooperating where cooperation is needed; with eyes focused on the all-important box office gross, here is an unusually large group who is showing the rest of the country that "it can be done," and are doing it.

Wherever you find a successfully operated outfit you are certain to find a high morale, capable and understanding leadership and, in every instance, a complete lack of browbeating. If the present economic crisis did nothing else, it proved that high-pressure methods and worrying the manager to death was the sure road to ruin. That this division stands out as a profit-maker despite existing conditions is the greatest tribute one can pay to every man in the organization from its divisional directors right on down to the smallest salaried employee.

The wide variety of ideas contained in the show-selling activities set forth in the following pages is one of its best points. Instead of the hackneyed repetition of the same old thing, these boys manage to inject enough individuality to make their various exploitation differ somewhat from each others. This is chiefly due to the "hands-off" policy of the divisional office.

In the short space of time in which this section was prepared we could hardly accumulate only outstanding material, but since all merchandising can be made just as big, or as small, as the man who is engineering it, we consider the contents of this issue to be as good as any section we have published in the past five years.

CHARLES WINCHELL

Here is the man who first suggested the idea of a special Publix-Northwest edition and then proved that he could meet the emergency by working far into the night for over a week getting the material together and preparing it for our use.

Charlie, to those not connected with this division, is the advertising and publicity chief for the outfit and as such can appreciate the value of a special section such as this, insofar as it would affect the general morale of the entire organization.

We are extremely grateful to Winchell not alone for making the suggestion for this edition but for the way he came through with everything we asked for to make our task as easy as possible.

LESTER J. LUDWIG

BEFORE embarking as co-divisional director of the Publix-Northwest theatres, "L. J." had ten solid years of experience to take along with him. Few men in showbusiness are better qualified to handle the money or business end of any group of theatres than this graduate from the University of Illinois and the College of Experience.

In 1921 he was associated with the Ascher Brothers and their chain of some thirty odd theatres. This connection came about shortly after his return from France with the A. E. F. After six years with Ascher Bros. he joined up with the Lubliner and Trinz organization when they were taken over by Balaban and Katz.

It was with the latter outfit that his intimate knowledge and experience as a certified public accountant, finance, management and industrial economics came into play. So much so, that in 1926 he was called into Publix home office as Chief Assistant to Fred Metzler, comptroller for that rapidly growing organization.

Some years later Sam Dembow organized the Coast Control Committee and chose "L. J." for his right hand man to take care of cutting unnecessary expenditures and adding profits to the theatres. Not long after, Marty Mullins was transferred to New England and Mr. Ludwig was assigned his post.

Few man outside of the Publix organization have a really intimate knowledge about this thorough, business executive, but those who do, know him to be a reasonable man who never did try to tell the whole industry that he knows it all. Ever ready and willing to help with unbiased opinions and suggestions, he soon cultivates one's confidence and makes them his friends.

A modest, unassuming and warmly sympathetic character, it did not take him long to get every man in the Publix-Northwest Division working along with him a hundred per cent; which accounts in no small measure for the excellence of the entire organization whereby one man looks after the physical operation of the houses while the other devotes his time, experience and energies to the financial and business portion of the division.

Truly, a perfect combination, this Friedl-Ludwig team, and delivering the goods, too.

ST. PAUL SHOWMEN PUT NEWSBOY PARTY ON BUSINESS BASIS

The fellows out in the Publix organization in St. Paul, Minn., have placed the newsboy theatre party racket on a strictly business-like basis as regards advertising space, instead of the old deal of receiving in return from the paper a story covering the event.

Now they have a deal with a paper with a circulation of 80,000 which gives the theatre a specified amount of space in return for each party. This space may be used at the convenience of the theatre, the copy is written by the theatre ad department and pertains solely to the theatre attraction. Ordinarily, the space averages 3 x 10 and the newspaper often uses a publicity story on the party in addition to granting space for the ad. As proof of this, we have one at hand run by E. E. Seibel, manager of the Riviera Theatre, St. Paul, which covered 10 inches deep on three columns.

The St. Paul ad staff appears to have worked out a mighty good deal, considering they still get their story in addition to an ad written solely for the theatre in question. Maybe some of the other Round Tablers will take a crack at the same idea.

GREENBERG PROMOTED FINE DOUBLE TRUCK ON 'PROSPERITY' FILM

While the medals are being pinned on other managers for distinguished service in the matter of promoting double trucks on "Prosperity," let's be sure to see that Harry Greenberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Brainerd, Minn., steps up to receive his award.

For that's just what Harry did, even though merchants are not falling so very easily for this sort of stunt these days. At any rate, it turned out to be a corking spread and well supported by a variety of concerns. The missing letter gag of scattering letters spelling "Prosperity Is Here" among the several ads featured this co-op.

Not every one knows just the amount of advertising pressure being brought to bear on merchants, what with solicitation from schools, churches, lodges, benefit programs, etc., and we're beginning to believe that promotion of a double truck these days is a feat worthy of mention. Congratulations to Greenberg for his work.

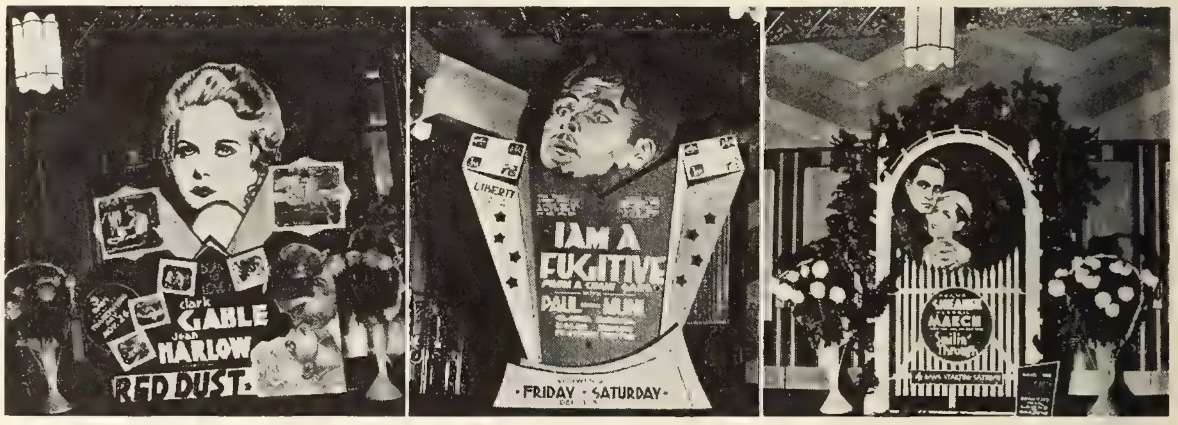
SEIBEL PROMOTED SHOPPING GUIDE TO BOOST BOX OFFICE

Here is a plan E. E. Seibel, manager of the Riviera Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., used this last Xmas season for extracting free space from two local newspapers. File it away for the next time Santa Claus comes 'round (if he ever does) or use it now, for it's one which could be adapted to most any cooperative drive among theatres, merchants and newspaper.

Large-sized ads appeared in both papers tying up a box on the classified page and the current attraction at the theatre and directed the reader how to obtain awards and guest tickets by turning to the designated page. The stunt was called a Xmas Guide Contest, or it might be termed just plain Shopping Guide if used during another season. The box on the classified page contained among other information ten questions such as the following: 1. "Where Can You Check Your Parcels and Relax?" 2. "What Shop Is Advertising Dresses at $4.50?" 3. "Who Is Offering Thrifty Luncheons to Thrifty Shoppers?" 4. "Where Can You Have a $1.50 Photo Taken Free?" Question number 10 asked readers to describe in as few words as possible what was considered the most interesting results produced by a Want Ad.

So there's the gag and you can frame your own questions to suit the occasion. Readers will naturally check the ads to find the answers and that's what the newspaper is shooting at. Seibel got his reward in a lot of valuable free space.

BURR CLINE'S NOVEL DISPLAYS!



BUT on the plains of South Dakota stands the town of Mitchell, famous as the home of the world's one and only Corn Palace and Burr Cline, manager of the Paramount Theatre.

One of Burr's keenest delights and, to a considerable degree, responsible for the excellent business enjoyed by the Paramount, is his flair for creation of new and novel lobby and front displays. We've picked out a trio of the sharpest snapshots for reproduction and will attempt a description of the balance.

On the extreme left is the display he made for "Red Dust," consisting of cutouts, stills, and flanked with baskets of flowers; in the middle the dominant note is the head of the "Fugitive," enhanced by stills and hand lettering, and at the right a reproduction of the well known gate scene in "Smilin' Through."

Other snaps at hand show that he used the reclining cutout figure of Will Rogers on the curb for "Too Busy to Work"; attractive frames adapted to changes of programs; large cutout parrot holding blown up scene still from "Trouble in Paradise"; life-size cutouts of leading characters on top of marquee for "Grand Hotel," and what must have been a most striking front for "Bring 'Em Back Alive." The latter is very dark, but we can see that the jungle effect was even carried out to the extent of strewing a carpet of grass on the sidewalk in front of theatre entrance.

Before we pull down the curtain on this act on Burr Cline, let us not overlook the fact that he is turning out big town work in a town of only 10,000 population and on a relatively small advertising budget. More credit to him, and we'll hope to report again on his activities.

"DELUXE," APPLIED TO METHOD OF OPERATION, NOT PATRONAGE!

This Nationally Known Divisional Director Sets Forth His Views on This Much-Discussed Phase of Operation!

by JOHN J. FRIEDL

We consider ourselves very fortunate in securing the article from one so well qualified to write upon this particular subject. John J. Friedl's name is so well known in theatre operation, both among the circuits and the independents, that we consider any further comment about him would be quite superfluous. We merely urge you to get the real "low-down" about what is and what is not "de luxe" theatre operating.

Be Guided by This Advice, Proffered by One Whose Job It Is to Keep a Watchful Eye on Efficiency and Expense!

THE superlative "deluxe" has probably been a much abused term in the motion picture business. In connection with theatre operation, it refers, and is justly applicable to a policy which has been a very definite factor in the industry. Properly defined, it means a policy of stage, screen and orchestral entertainment—personal and refined, high-class atmosphere, and surrounded with a maximum of unobtrusive, individual service. It represents the ultimate in the modern idea of diversified entertainment in the motion picture theatre.

Contrary to some impression, the deluxe motion picture theatre is not limited in its appeal to the so-called "class" patronage. Properly construed and operated from the right viewpoint, it represents mass entertainment, for several very definite reasons. The very nature of the diversified units presented in a modern, deluxe motion picture theatre emphasizes the mass appeal of this policy. It reaches out in an effort to attract the attention and arouse the curiosity of many classes of people who may enjoy different types of entertainment.

For example, the deluxe type of theatre appeals first to motion picture patrons. In addition, it appeals to the class of people who like the refined type of stage presentation. Likewise, and depending upon the ingenuity of the advertising, it can make its appeal successfully to that element of the public who likes vaudeville. Again depending upon the ingenuity and the construction of the show, it can interest that portion of the public who enjoy the more classical character of music, and at the same time, directly sell tickets to the large mass who enjoys all types of modern music. These points emphasize the mass appeal of the deluxe motion picture policy, although to successfully reach the masses, infinite care must obviously be taken in the character and construction of the show as well as its merchandising.

Considerable discussion has taken place within our own business as to what constitutes the most important unit in the program plot of a deluxe theatre. We can, however, at this point, look back and determine with a great degree of certainty that the most important unit in the program of this type of theatre is unquestionably the picture. Box office records, more than anything else, will prove this, indicating definitely that a fine stage show plus a strong supporting front show has seldom put over a bad picture, whereas a good picture has rarely failed to pull along with it successfully a stage show of questionable entertainment quality.

Today, probably more than at any time in the past, we are confronted with the problem of what must be done to insure the success of this type of policy. Were anyone capable of answering this question definitely, he would be hailed as a "miracle man" and experience has proved pretty clearly that there are no "miracle men" in our business. There are, however, certain elements which must be given careful consideration in this type of theatre operation, and failing in the proper consideration of these factors, such a policy is doomed to failure before it starts. Many of these elements must, of course, be given consideration in any type of theatre operation, while some of them, of course, apply only to a deluxe policy.

Admission Prices

First, the admission price must be such as to enable the policy to successfully sell tickets to all of the different classifications touched upon in the earlier portion of this article. There is always the pitfall in solving this problem of the tendency to reach a decision which enables only the better class of people to patronize such a theatre. Consideration must be given to the fact that the policy caters to picture lovers who can see the picture in an all-sound operation at a minimum admission price. Therefore, somewhere in the admission schedule of a deluxe theatre, there must be a price to compare favorably with that of an all-sound operation. The same applies to those patrons who enjoy vaudeville and the general admission schedule of a vaudeville operation must be considered. Before a decision is reached, each factor must be carefully gone over in the relation of admission prices to the mass appeal of the policy, and the character of the population in every section from which the theatre must draw its patronage must be studied.

Operating Cost

Another matter which requires most careful thought is the subject of operating cost. This, of course, is a tremendous factor in every phase of theatre operation, but in a deluxe type of policy there is always a tendency to become unduly extravagant. The very nature of this character of theatre operation makes this pitfall one to be most cautiously avoided. In setting up cost control sheets for the deluxe house, the possibilities of the community in which the operation is located must be carefully studied and the total expense kept definitely and consistently within the realm of such possibilities.

Breaking down into the operating expense, the deluxe house is confronted with costs which most other types of theatre operation, with the exception of vaudeville, do not encounter. Talent is perhaps the first consideration. Acts and entertainers must be bought with the same careful thought and consideration as is accorded the expenditures made for film rental, house service and other items of expense which are given the benefit of most definite control. In addition such contracts must be made to cover whatever additional performances for Saturday, Sunday and holiday shows as the house policy dictates. Frequently expenses run up into an unreasonable figure for this item because of the necessity of paying pro-rata for extra shows.

Next item to be considered is the cost of music. Contracts must be negotiated which do not anticipate overtime. In other words, the operator of such a policy must know his job sufficiently well to take into consideration, when making contracts, all of the unusual factors which in the past have contributed to exorbitant overtime. This covers the length of periods in which the orchestra is required to work, the rehearsal time necessary to insure a good musical performance, and the extra shows required because of the house policy. Instances have developed frequently in the past where theatres of this type have definite contracts for twenty-eight shows based on a four a day, when it has been perfectly obvious that five shows are required on Saturday and Sunday, bringing the week's total up to 30. The cost of these two extra shows frequently contributes substantially to the difference between profit and loss.

Next and very important, comes the subject of stage hands. Here again the house policy must be given careful thought. Contracts should be negotiated which not only cover working the show, but likewise cover the time necessary to take in the show and take it out. There are many possibilities of running into overtime, in this particular phase of operation, all of which again contribute in a measure to the ultimate success or failure of the policy.

Good Presentation of Shows

Frequently the policy of deluxe theatre operation has failed because too much importance was placed upon the inauguration of the policy, and too little attention paid to the careful supervision of it after it has started, particularly as it pertains to the tremendously important factor of making every show a good show. Deluxe theatre operation cannot be successful by just opening a new program and letting it go at that. Every single performance must be checked. The talent must be impressed with the importance of giving the best possible performance whether the house is packed at the peak hour or whether there is only a mere handful of people in the audience at one of the "off" shows. Lighting plots and cues must be followed up most carefully, because the proper lighting of deluxe stage entertainment is one of the most important contributing factors to its success. Flawless musical support must be accorded each entertainer at every performance and the

A special window herald reading "Congress Says No Beer by Christmas, but you can still have 'Prosperity,'" etc., was placed in 11 Winona store windows by Smith right after the first beer bill failed to pass the House.

And consider the cooperative newspaper advertising put over by Al. Two ads on "Trouble in Paradise," one on the "Devil Is Driving" and a double truck on "Prosperity." Certainly this is merchandising in a big way. Just as a sample of the kind of work he's turning out, we're reproducing one of the co-ops he promoted through a tie-up with Firestone. KRAUSS NEVER LETS OPPORTUNITY SLIP TO GRAB OFF SPACE

It pays to become reminiscent at times, as witness what befell Ed Krauss, city manager for Publix theatres in Fargo, N. D., a short time ago when he recalled he had played a comedy role in "Tess of Storm Country" during his younger days in show-business.

Seeking out a hungry reporter while thought of the good old days of three-dimension drama still coursed through his head, Ed unburdened himself of a few facts concerning the tour of "Tess" in the old days and what motion pictures were like in 1915. Result: A boxed head story on page one of the local newspaper.

It also appears that Ed knows his way 'round to an insurance outfit in town, judging from the looks of a novelty herald he promoted to exploit "Rain." It was a "Rain Insurance Policy," by which the Fargo Theatre agreed to insure "patron and definitely guarantee that he or she would be the beneficiary of a downpour of entertainment and a storm of passion that would reach the saturation point" upon witnessing the attraction. The back cover of the folder-herald carried in red the name of the insurance firm, which leads us to believe that Krauss didn't pay a nickel for stock, printing or distribution.

So it pays to remember the old days and to associate insurance with "Rain," we believe all will agree. The Club will be looking for more news of Ed Krauss' activities out in Fargo and will hope to publish it in forthcoming issues.

DELUXE THEATRE OPERATION

featured numbers rendered by the band or orchestra must be given similar supervision.

Altogether, every show must be as nearly perfect as possible. This one point has done more to make or break policies of this character than probably anything else. Slipshod performances must not be tolerated.

Selling

After these points have been covered and all of the other contributing factors in the operation of such a policy have been satisfactorily taken care of, the deluxe theatre can then, and only then, approach its selling problem. Based on a solid foundation of sensible admissions, strict cost control and perfect presentation, the theatre goes into its merchandising plan with a definite knowledge that nothing must be left undone to reach a maximum number of people to which this policy appeals.

In connection with its merchandising, the deluxe theatre more than any other type of operation must definitely realize that the house is confronted with a new and individual selling problem every time the program changes. Every member of the staff and the manager must definitely feel and understand this thought. Next in importance comes the necessity of selling a big show every week. No deluxe theatre can be permanently successful by concentrating on any one of its units to the neglect of the others. If the picture is big and outstanding, the stage show likewise must be made to look big. For proper emphasis, the various acts, instrumental numbers and band specialties in the stage show can and should be billed individually. Carrying the idea further, in event the band works on the stage, then the overture in the pit becomes an added unit, and without saying so when selling it, properly done, the idea of two separate and distinct musical organizations is conveyed vividly to the public. The surrounding screen features such as news weeklies and cartoons, are likewise given individual emphasis.

Every medium of advertising and publicity must convey the idea that the show is big, fast, and as up-to-the-minute as tomorrow's newspaper. Volumes could and perhaps should be written by the capable minds in our business on the subject of successfully merchandising this type of policy. Space here only permits emphasis on the fact that the selling should be unified, enthusiastic, and so directed as to reach all of the various types of people to whom this policy can sell tickets, and likewise to be so developed in a sectional way as to enable the theatre to talk to its varied types of patronage in a language which each of them understand.

Future of This Policy

What is the future of the deluxe policy of theatre operation? This question is most difficult. It is reasonable to assume, however, that the public today wants better shows and bigger shows than ever before. Therefore, if all of the factors involved in the operation of a deluxe theatre can pass through the necessary readjustment to bring the cost factor down to earth, it seems reasonable to believe that this character of theatre has a most definite place in the general scheme of things.

BUCHANAN IS RATED AS SPACE-GRABBER OVER IN NORTHWEST

An enviable reputation for space-grabbing and publicity and merchandising campaigns has been gained in the Northwest Division of Publix by Harvey Buchanan, manager-partner of the Palace Theatre, Superior, Wis., and his able assistant, Gus Carlson, with the result that Superior has earned the distinction of being one of the "blackest" spots in the section.

Among this team's recent activities was the promotion of an auto give-away which netted the theatre many inches of free space, free tickets, heralds and other advertising matter. The car, in the medium price class, was awarded in the usual fashion.

Other newspaper tear sheets at hand show a corking double truck promoted in behalf of "Prosperity," which featured guests tickets for the proper assembling of the letters among the several ads spelling the slogan "Prosperity Is Here"; a large four-column ad tied-up with the newspaper for "If I Had a Million," based upon readers' search through the paper for costliest items advertised, for which guest tickets were given for best lists; and other tie-up with the newspaper for a special Xmas show for the youngsters, which netted the theatre better than one-quarter of a page of free space. The accompanying photo shows a window display obtained by a tie-up with a music store on "Big Broadcast."

SUPERIOR
SIC CO.
MARTIN

The above just covers a small portion of the regular routine work carried out by Buchanan and Carlson, but it will convey a fair idea of what this team has been doing to keep down advertising overhead. More power to them both; we'll be telling you more about this pair in the future.

HARRY BILLINGS HAS EARNED LOT OF GOOD WILL FOR HIS HOUSE

The value of good will and civic contacts is no better demonstrated than in the Garrick theatre, Virginia, Minn., where Harry Billings, grand old daddy of show business in this country, successfully fights a condition that would have licked the average manager months ago.

The city of Virginia is in the heart of the great Minnesota iron mining country. Mills, factories and mines have been at a standstill for the past two years. Yet Billings is rated as one of the most successful theatre operators in the Northwest Division.

Why? Because he has kept Virginia theatre conscious. He has sold natives the idea that entertainment is a necessary part of their lives and one of the surest ways of forgetting their troubles.

His excellent public and civic contacts have made this possible. And through the above, Harry has sold his newspaper on the value of his theatre to the community, thus insuring constant publicity breaks.

Proof of his standing around at the newspaper office is shown in several tear sheets we have at hand of much free space he promoted in behalf of "If I Had a Million." He convinced the advertising department that it would be a great gag for readers to grab a pencil and search through all ads for the most costly items, jot them down and participate in the award of guest tickets. Large two-column ads in several issues resulted from his good salesmanship.

THE MANAGER'S INFLUENCE!

Man at the Helm Can Exert Great Influence on Entire Staff If He Sets Example!

by AL ANSON

Northern District Manager

I WONDER if a theatre manager appreciates the fact that he is the barometer by which his personnel goes. The average theatre employee is much younger in years and experience than the average manager and looks upon a manager as one who has attained a certain pinnacle in show business.

Does a manager realize that his actions, not only in the theatre, but in the town in which he works and lives, have a direct influence on his employees? Does he realize that if, when in the lobby, he is able to call patrons by their names, he rises several points in the estimation of his employees? Does he realize that if he is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, or any other civic organization, and is able to call the prominent business men of the town by their first name that he, himself, will be classified as a solid business man by his employees and respected as such? The average theatre employee notices these things and regards his "boss" accordingly; and the average employee will try to follow what his "boss" is doing.

Be Careful of Your Remarks!

Does the average manager realize that his actions and comment at previews of pictures have a tremendous bearing on what the employees think and say about that attraction? Oftentimes a manager will sit in a theatre after the last show at night and preview the next attraction, after he has spent a probably tough day on the job. Sitting in the theatre at the same time are probably the cashiers, the ushers, the janitor, the relief operator, and perhaps a few friends who have been invited to preview this attraction. Previewing an attraction at night lacks the same atmosphere as is present when it is being presented before an audience, and the manager gives full expression to his thoughts of the picture as a whole, the cast, and probably the direction. He doesn't like it and says, "It's a damn shame that this picture has to play an 'A' house." "So and So is rotten in his part. " "This story has been done over and over again" and "I know we are going to take an awful brodie on this." The theatre employees sitting round watching the picture hear all these remarks and take it for granted that a theatre manager should know what he is talking about or he wouldn't be a theatre manager . . . they take for granted all he says is gospel.

The preview is over and everybody goes home. Before this attraction opens there is no doubt but that several of the employees have been asked by their friends, "How is the picture you are going to play tomorrow?" Nine times out of 10 the employee will give expression to remarks made by the manager. Quite often the manager has made no expression verbally, but has shown by his actions that he doesn't think much of the attraction. Those actions have registered just as solidly with his employees as if he had given full vent to his thoughts. The result is that the picture is almost licked before it opens. The picture opens and neither the cashiers, doorman, or any of the personnel show any signs of enthusiasm, but by their demeanor practically tell the customer that the show is "not so good." That atmosphere seems to pervade the entire theatre and the customer feels before he sits down that he is not going to enjoy himself.

Spreading Enthusiasm!

I remember the Olden Golden Days of the roadshow. The advance man at the head of the show would come into town, greet the theatre manager, and start selling his show to the theatre manager immediately after shaking his hand. He sold the show as a whole. He sold every person in the show. He sold the costumes. He sold the scenery. He told of the wonderful business they were doing everywhere along the line and made the manager believe that he had the greatest show in the world coming to his theatre. That's all the advance man ever talked about. If you sat down to lunch with him, he talked about his show. If you took a walk with him, he talked about his show. In other words, he lived his job, thought he had the best job in the world, and the show he was playing was the greatest show in the world.

I remember in the Olden Golden Days the manager of a company watched every performance of his show. He sat in the back of the auditorium and led the applause. How many of the present-day theatre managers do this today?

Those Olden Golden Days can be brought back and the theatre manager is an integral factor in doing this. If he lives his job, if he enjoys his job, and speaks well of his job, he is going to have a REAL job.

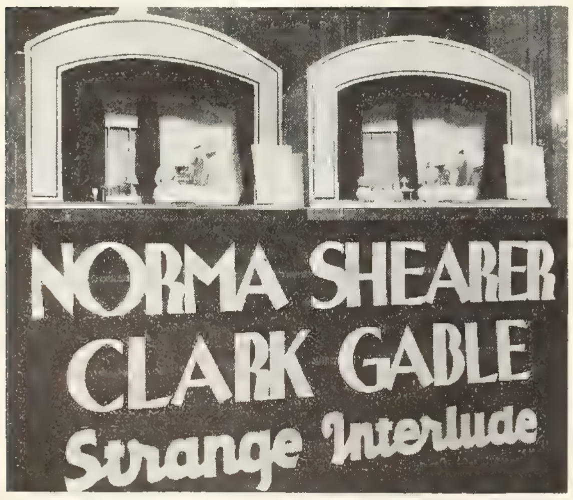
GEORGE IRWIN AND EARL LONG'S STUNT EXPLAINED PICTURE

The novel lobby display pictured here on "Strange Interlude" was engineered by Geo. D. Irwin, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, Minn., and Advertising Manager Earl Long and was largely instrumental in overcoming any confusion among patrons as to the "asides" in the picture.

They tied up with the teacher of the local High School Dramatic Class to have her pupils, in conjunction with the Manual Training Class, turn out to miniature stages about three feet square. Stills from the picture were furnished the pupils so that the sets would be exact duplicates of sets in the film. Toy furniture, rugs, drapes, etc., were used to dress the set, with even a French window of cellophane and glimpse of a garden. Small footlight troughs were fashioned by the tin-making department of the Manual Training Class and little standees made from 8 x 10 stills were used for characters, all of which stood out quite lifelike.



The two duplicate sets were placed side by side in the lobby 10 days in advance, one stage representing what the characters were actually saying by means of little cartoon balloons wired from above and showing the words coming from the mouths of the players. The second stage represented what the characters were actually thinking, with cartoon balloons and proper copy again employed to illustrate the thoughts.

As the photo shows, the entire display was mounted on a platform draped with velour, placed at eye-level with silver metallic cut-out letters of stars, title and playdate on front of platform. During playdates the display was planted in prominent windows in the downtown section, which was accomplished in view of the school tie-up.

We quite agree that the question of the "asides" in the picturization of the O'Neill drama was neatly explained by use of the above display and Irwin and Long ought to be in line for congratulations for their ingenuity and good salesmanship in connection with selling the idea to the local school authorities. The idea appears to be a corking one to pass along the line and we feel sure that many Club members will take advantage of this means to exploit the picture. Incidentally, book-marks with excerpts from reviews of the picture made by important newspaper film critics were widely distributed in the Public Library and a number of book stores.

EARL LONG TIED-UP WITH NEWSPAPER ON COMIC STRIP STUNT

Herewith is a reproduction of what Earl Long, advertising manager for Publix theatres in Duluth, Minn., terms two "office ads," which, we take it, means that the paper wrote several inches of free space on the cuff for the enterprising Earl. You can see for yourselves that the deal was put over on a tie-up between the picture "Little Orphan Annie" and the cartoon strip in the paper by the same name. It looks as though the Lyric Theatre received an excellent break on copy and extent of space.

Another tear sheet at hand shows a front page break that Earl also put over for the Lyric. It was a two-column cut and caption describing a kiddie revue arranged in connection with a special holiday program. Copy not only boosted the revue but mentioned the current attraction, "Little Orphan Annie," again tying in with the comic strip in the same paper.

Earl Long's name will be very familiar to many Club members, for reason that we have published other contributions from him from time to time. PUBLIX EXPLOITEERS IN ST. PAUL MADE A GOOD DEAL ON SPACE

Publix exploiteers out in St. Paul, Minn., recently hit upon an effective little gag to grab off additional free space in a big daily paper with a circulation of 80,000 by making a tie-up with a local artist to present weekly a series of sketches featuring stars of the three leading attractions opening each week. The entire cost to the theatre is the proportionate expense of the cut, as the artist donates his time and the paper features the sketch in the news section.

M. P. Kelly is the advertising head of Publix theatres in St. Paul, so we'll assume that he can be credited with at least a share of the honors attached to the above. Although he was fortunate in being able to contact an artist who was anxious to crash the local movie limelight, it's also quite possible that other towns have other artists in the same frame of mind; hence, we're passing along the idea for the benefit of all Club members.

BARNUM WAS RIGHT!

At some time or other nearly every advertising man in the business has broken into print with an article on newspaper advertising. And those articles have certainly covered the subject.

Each of us knows that white space, not too many imaginary margins, careful selection of type faces, and eye-compelling illustrations are necessary to make a good ad.

But just how much thought is given to sales copy? You might say a great deal; but if you stop and think, you will realize that nine times out of ten we follow press book copy or steal copy from some other fellow's ad. If you're honest, you'll admit this to be the truth.

And then what happens? Your ads are stiff unappealing to local readers—in fact, might be termed anything but "homespun ads". And in these times "homespun ads" that will get right down into the hearts of local patrons are just the thing to shock this show business of ours out of the rut into which it has fallen.

The best proof we can offer for the above statement is our own State Theatre in Minneapolis. For almost a year it slipped and slid, regardless of attraction. And nowhere did any theatre have "prettier" ads than those turned out by the State advertising staff.

So we turned to "bombastic" institutional copy featured in "homespun ads"—ads that were localized in copy and appeal. Naturally, before shooting this "bombastic" claim copy, we made sure that bookings warranted such treatment.

Results were amazing. People began to discuss the big programs offered at the State week after week. And we capitalized on that fact in every ad. Before long, the State, managed by Frank Steffy, was rated as the ace theatre of the division.

With the knowledge gained in this campaign at the State, we turned out a "bombastic" caption campaign for use in the entire territory. Each theatre worked claim copy into advertising on all major attractions with excellent results.

All of which might be summed up by saying "Barnum was right." If you've got something to sell, for heaven's sake sell it. Announcement advertising has no place in show business.

CHARLES WINCHELL,
Division Advertising Manager

BUCHANAN AND MIKE WAINSTOCK DID GOOD WORK ON 'FUGITIVE'

Quick to take advantage of a great news event, Managers Harvey Buchanan of the Palace theatre, Superior, Wis., and Mike Wainstock of the Lyric theatre, Watertown, S. D., put "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang" over to sensational business.

Both operations had just completed booking arrangements for the showing of this picture when Burns was recaptured in New Jersey. Each rushed editors of their local papers and bought an extra thousand copies of the edition carrying a front-page story of the capture.

Over the face of each front page in red ink was printed a glaring message to readers that the picture could be seen at local theatres.

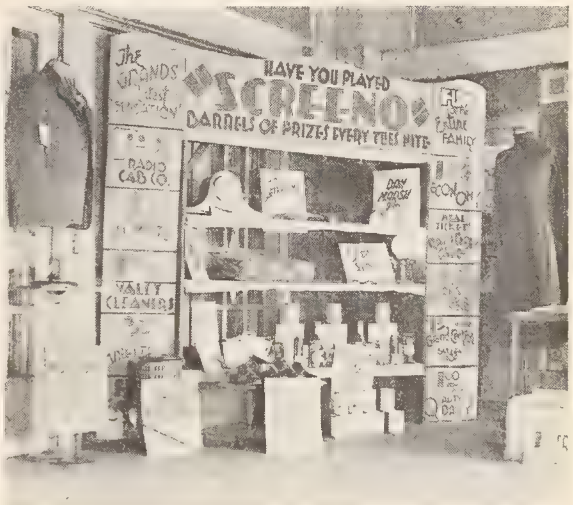
In addition to this scoop both theatres plastered their fronts with front pages of Northwest papers reporting the capture of Burns. Publicity stories within the newspapers featured the picture.

Through this clever bit of exploitation both theatres did capacity business.

ESCHELMAN BOOSTED AN OFF NIGHT WITH A GIVE-AWAY GAME

The accompanying photo is not a shot of a corner in a "general store," despite its close resemblance to one, but a portion of the lobby that was put to work by Jimmy Eschelman, manager of the Grand Theatre, St. Cloud, Minn., to plug his "Screeno" night.

There's no need to go into detail about the game of "Screeno" at this stage for the promoters have taken pains to explain the attraction to practically every exhibitor in the country. At any rate, the exhibit consists of articles ranging from groceries to suits of clothing for both men and women which were awarded during the "Screeno" game every Tuesday night. Leading merchants were represented among the different credit cards.



While young in years, Jimmy is classed as a veteran in showbusiness and one who realizes that the proper effort must be put behind every sales campaign; hence the lobby space and special advertising devoted to his Tuesday box office booster. We are informed that the stunt transformed an off night into s. r. o. We will look forward to hearing more news from Eschelman.

AYRES, HARRIS AND DUFFUS USED PHOTO OF STAR FOR SPACE

Some movie fan up in the Northwest dug up an old photo of Warren William Krech (Warren William) when he played the position of fullback on a high school football team, forwarded it to Harry Billings at the Garrick Theatre, Virginia, Minn., who, in turn, shot it along to Manager Ralph Ayres, of the Century Theatre, Minneapolis, where the "Match King," a William vehicle, was current.

Aided by Publicity Manager Jimmy Harriss and Carlton Duffus, Ayres obtained a four-column head in an exclusive Minneapolis newspaper, which featured the photo and a long, signed story covering William's early life and his subsequent theatrical career. The material was later sent out to every newspaper in the Northwest Division, where it fared equally well.

The above certainly was a break and it looks as though honors will have to be divided between Billings and the Minneapolis crew for being right on the job to take full advantage of a great opportunity to grab off a lot of valuable free publicity. Congratulations to them all.

PICTURE INSPIRED MANAGER SEIBEL TO TURN TECHNOCRATIC

The much discussed subject of technocracy was tied up with newspaper and other advertising efforts made on "Fast Life" by E. E. Seibel, manager of the Riviera Theatre, St. Paul, Minn. In other words, technocracy, the machine age and the title all signified Speed, so excerpts from a couple of his ads read as follows:

"Technocracy or Fast Life? . . . Technocracy claims energy and speed have been multiplied 75 times since the year 1800—'Fast Life' proves it in 3,600 split seconds of dare-devil romance and record-breaking action that smashes all records for speed, laughs and thrills.

"But . . . Technocracy hints mankind has been outdistanced by multiplied energy and speed. So . . . Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had to make a picture that proves our fast-stepping youngsters of today know how to handle this speeded-up world!" . . .

Another ad was headed: "Open your eyes, Citizens of St. Paul! Read This!! . . . What does Technocracy have to do with 'Fast Life'? . . . How Fast Is Life? (There followed in smaller type speed records of fastest horse, auto, plane, etc.) . . . And Now a World's Record for 'Fast Living' . . . etc."

We'll gamble that the technocracy gag made 'em read his ads.

BYRON McELLIGOTT STOLE LOT OF SPACE ON CLASSIFIED GAG

A newspaper tie-up which featured the well known classified and guest ticket gag netted 153 inches of free space for Byron McElligott, manager of the Huron Theatre, Huron, S. D., and helped him put "Prosperity" over to one of the biggest week-end grosses of the year.

Readers will recall that the idea is to have classified advertisers in the paper insert an ad over a certain period and get a pair of tickets free of charge. The swap ad scheme, another gag familiar to most Club members, has also been worked along the same lines.

The accompanying photo shows a real airplane that McElligott had placed in front of his theatre for a street display on "Air Mail." Hats off to him for making friends with the boys at the local airport.

KIRKBERG WAS FIRST TO CRASH NORTHWEST FOR 'PROSPERITY' AD

Distinction of crashing through for the first double truck on "Prosperity" in the Northwest Division of Publix is hereby chalked up to the credit of L. O. Kirkberg, manager of the State Theatre, Mankato, Minn., a piece of promotion which helped him ring up very satisfactory returns on the engagement.

Owing to depressed business conditions, promotion of co-ops had been well nigh impossible in Mankato for some time, but Kirkberg, a former newspaperman, made personal calls on all the leading merchants and convinced them that they'd missed one of the greatest opportunities in their lives by not climbing aboard the "Prosperity" band wagon. The double-truck was the result. The misspelled word "gag" was featured among the ads.

That wasn't the end of the deal, however. Because of Kirkberg's activities on the above, mats were passed on to other towns in the Northwest Division and several other managers were able to repeat on the idea.

That it's getting tougher and tougher to put over single and double truck cooperative ads is brought to the attention of the Club from time to time in reports from various points. What was a comparatively easy matter to promote several months ago now becomes a real feat and a feather for the cap of the man who can now go out among the merchants and put a page or two over. Congratulations to Kirkberg for his effective salesmanship. We'll hope to publish further accounts of his able showmanship in future issues.

SPAETH CONSTRUCTED ATMOSPHERIC FRONT TO SELL 'CABIN' FILM

Another live-wire showman in the city of Duluth, Minn., is G. D. Spaeth, manager of the Lyric Theatre, and we're showing here a very attractive front he engineered for the showing of "Cabin in the Cotton." It will be noted that a structure resembling an old cabin was built entirely around the box office and that baskets and plants of cotton helped carry out the general scheme. The picture was played around the Xmas week-end and materially boosted up receipts during the holiday slump.

Another snap-shot at hand gives us an idea of the flash marquee display he made for "Last Mile" at very small outlay of money, the only expenditure being for wire. The sign was constructed out of old beaverboard and some old sockets were pressed into service. The huge title was visible for several blocks and helped attract trade over the holidays.

On another occasion Spaeth used 24-sheet pictorial to cover one entire end of the lobby and produced a flash distinctly out of the ordinary. A snap-shot, too faint for reproduction, shows that this effort was made in behalf of "Rockabye."

Apparently Spaeth also has the N. W. Division habit of crashing the front page for free newspaper publicity, judging from a tear sheet at hand that carried a four-column cut and caption plug for "You Said a Mouthful." It showed Joe Brown and a bevy of Hollywood beauties and mentioned the picture and theatre.

We'll hope to tell readers a lot more about Spaeth's work in forthcoming issues of the HERALD and, in the meantime, wish him continued success with his work.

YOU CAN USE LOGAN'S STYLE REVUE STUNTS TO PLUG SPRING TRADE

Although the following successful Style Revue was staged during the month of December by E. R. Logan, manager of the Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., spring will soon be with us and fashion shows will again engage the attention of a host of showmen in all parts of the country. With the thought that it will serve as a reminder that this stunt can then be turned into a profitable cooperative enterprise, we're presenting a resume of his campaign.

His tie-up was a three-cornered one between the theatre, a leading local merchant and a local weekly newspaper. The merchant furnished all clothing for the revue; lined up local girls to act as models, some of whom were professionals; supplied the theatre with a ladies' dress to be given away at the door; presented an attractive window display which tied-in the sponsors of the show and where and when it would be held, and gave prominent mention to show and playdates of both revue and current film attraction.

The newspaper plugged the show for three weeks in advance by giving for the first time in its history front-page mention to an attraction of its kind. The paper also allowed the theatre free space so as to tie-in the sponsors of the show. Screen attractions were given prominent billing in a 2x6, which broke 1 day in advance, and in a 3x8 which broke three days in advance. A well known girl's singing team was furnished by the paper to act as an added attraction between changes during the show. Their accompanist supplied music as the model displayed each dress.

In conclusion let us mention that Logan's campaign was conducted at no cost whatever to his theatre and that newspaper space, salaries for models, singing team, give-aways, etc., would have run into considerable money if he had charged it to overhead. Many successful Fashion Revues have been staged by other members of this organization and plans of campaigns outlined in this department. So there is really no lack of material.

REGAINING GOODWILL

Friedl and Ludwig Executed Xmas Show Campaign in Twin Cities That Produced Results

SENSING that the Publix theatres in the Twin Cities had lost a certain amount of good will through National operation, Division Directors John J. Friedl and L. J. Ludwig set about to recapture this as one of their first moves in the Publix plan of decentralized operation.

The first detail of this drive was to present to the two Twin City leading papers, The "Journal" in Minneapolis and the "St. Paul Dispatch-Pioneer Press," a plan whereby the newspapers would sponsor in all Twin City Publix theatres Christmas benefit shows.

Thus on the morning of December 17 any one and every one in the Twin Cities was admitted to any Publix theatre for one article of clothing, one can of food or one usable toy.

The "Minneapolis Journal" and the "St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press" went the limit in ballyhooing the shows. Front-page stories for 10 days, boxes scattered throughout the paper, and numerous photographs made the affair a huge success.

Trucks were held in readiness at each theatre the morning of the show to carry "receipts" to charitable organizations attending to distribution. And enough supplies were received to care for many a family throughout the entire winter.

Reaction to these shows was excellent. In one sweeping stroke the Twin City theatres reaped enough goodwill with citizens, newspapers, charitable organizations and churches to insure the repetition of this idea each year.

And now, because of this goodwill, the Minneapolis newspapers are carrying daily amusement columns—the first to appear in these ultra-conservative papers for years.

Glancing through a heap of tear sheets from the several newspapers that sponsored the Xmas Shows, only a blind person could fail to be strongly impressed with the hundreds of inches of front-page and otherwise publicity cheerfully handed out by the publishers in support of the occasion, which is all the proof any one needs of the good work done by Messrs. Friedl, Ludwig and their St. Paul associates in the Publix organization. There can be no question that they accomplished what they set out to do.

MANY GAGS USED BY WILLIAM KEATING TO PUT OVER HIS SHOWS

A glance at some show-selling data at hand concerning recent activities of Wm. E. Keating, manager of the Loring Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., discloses that this member of the Northwest Division has been employing a number of gags to intrigue the picture fans in his neighborhood.

Taking advantage of the present craze for jig-saw puzzles, he carved a mat from "Pack Up Your Troubles" into enough pieces to satisfy the puzzle complex of most any fan. These were grouped and reproduced on a herald and guest tickets were offered for correct solutions.

In Keating's district of the city is published a neighborhood newspaper which he is using to distinct advantage, according to a copy at hand. It's a four-page tab-size affair and if this issue is any criterion for others, we'll say he is getting away with a whale of a lot of free space. Front page and two others carry two-column stories, cuts and ads of current and coming attractions at the Loring, all gratis space.

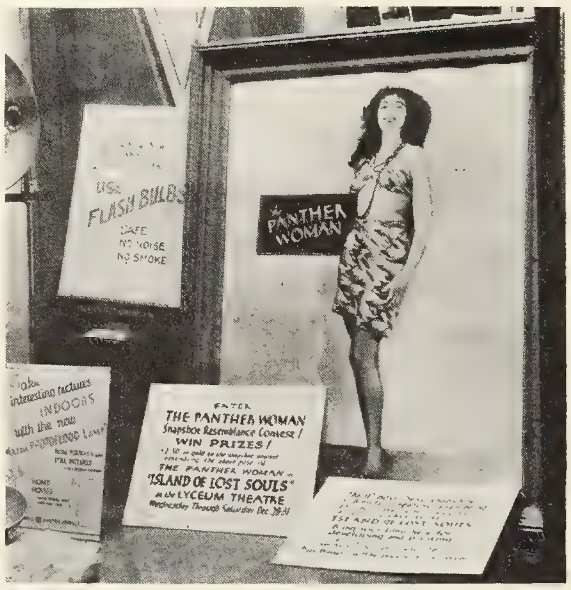
Apparently he also believes in the novelty envelope as means of exploiting his films, such as the "For Men Only" gag; or, "An Important Message for Every Voter"; or "Wives and Sweethearts Beware of the 'Red Headed Woman,'" and another on "Red Dust," which contained a card and some red powder for the bearer to "save, hoard, sleep on it," etc.

In addition to the above, Keating is using various other advertising stunts, most of which are not costing him a cent. We'll be glad to present these in more detail in the future, or as soon as he sends along further news of his activities. In the meantime, continued good luck to you, Bill.

IRWIN IS ANOTHER BIG SPACE HOUND OF THE NORTHWEST

Some newspaper tear sheets at hand disclose that George D. Irwin, aided and abetted no doubt by advertising manager Earl Long, has been getting away with considerable free space in behalf of the Lyceum Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

One batch shows he made a tie-up with the paper that carries Will Rogers' comments for a number of generous sized free ads when playing "Too Busy to Work." Each ad featured a mat from the picture and copy was equally divided between theatre and publication.



Another lot shows that the sports editor of the paper was duly impressed with the importance of the picture, which featured a recent football game between Notre Dame and Southern California, and among mention in various parts of the sports section stated: "So far as we know this is the first time a complete football game has been reproduced on the screen. That's why the Lyceum gets this little spiel. It's not advertising—it's news."

Additional proof that Irwin knows his way 'round newspaper offices is found on the front page of another Duluth paper, which played up a two-column cut and caption of "The Panther Woman." The accompanying photo shows evidence of the "Panther Woman" Resemblance Contest he conducted just previous to playdate on "Island of Lost Souls." In other words, snap-shots submitted which nearest resembled the lady entitled the sender to participate in the offered award and guest tickets.

The other photo shows the Mayor of Duluth receiving the huge post card purported to have been sent this official by no less than the great and only Marie Dressler, who took this way of letting His Honor know that he was welcome to be present at the opening of "Prosperity." Needless to mention, the gag received its usual effective publicity in the papers and otherwise.

AM AVAILING MYSELF OF THIS FAST SERVICE TO INVITE YOU TO BE MY GUEST AT THE OPENING OF PROSPERITY AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE TODAY.

MARIE DRESSLER

Irwin trained his guns on women's clubs, lodges and other organizations when exploiting "Farewell to Arms" by sending out telegrams especially prepared for this group. The wires read: "The screen adaptation of Ernest Hemingway's famous novel, 'Farewell to Arms' with Helen Hayes and Gary Cooper comes to the Lyceum Theatre for four days starting (dates). 'Farewell to Arms' is the greatest love story of the decade and we believe it will be of especial interest to every woman in Duluth. Will you please advise members of your organization accordingly." These wires were addressed to the membership of each organization and arrangements were made with Western Union to have them delivered while meetings were in progress. Information as to meeting time was secured from the society editor of a local newspaper. The cost of $0.29 per wire was quite small considering the large number of people the messages reached.

Other tear sheets at hand show that more free space was obtained by Irwin by using the swap-ad gag, of which most Club members are by this time familiar. Guest tickets were given to those inserting swap-ads in the paper as a plug for "Prosperity." On another sheet we note a three column cut and caption, showing Al Hanson, Col. W. F. Henry (newspaper editor) and George Irwin, and stating that these three would play host to an orphanage during the Xmas season. More valuable free space for Manager Irwin.

All of which brings us to a close as far as the Lyceum and George Irwin are concerned right now. More about him, we hope, in future issues. Apparently he's another one of the space-grabbers of the Great Northwest.

HERE'S HOW STROUD PACKED 'EM IN FOR HIS ELECTION SHOW

It's a little late to be reporting the "Election Night Jamboree" staged last national election by J. C. Stroud, manager of the Park Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., but the way he handled the occasion packed the theatre to overflowing and his plan can be filed away for future reference.

His first step was to tie-up with his weekly newspaper and obtain two front-page stories and a three-quarter page gratis ad. Awards, added attractions and facilities for reporting the returns were also promoted. The newspaper also furnished an adding machine, three stenographers, with typewriters, and 10 boys to station in telephone booths in the neighborhood to get returns not available to the general public for several hours later.

Newspaper Tie-up!

In order not to interfere with the screening of an outstanding film booked for the evening a special screen was installed to flash election returns, in addition to a special blackboard with spot for local flashes. The editor of the newspaper at one time tabulated returns for one of the big Twin City papers and graciously arranged to have on hand complete equipment and charts to expedite results broadcast from the radio. To keep a more accurate check on returns three radios, all promoted, were installed in different parts of the theatre so that girls could obtain and compare figures from three different stations. Before flashing the figures on the screen a final check was made in Stroud's office.

The audience was in a receptive mood for the show and the vaudeville, picture, returns and awards were enthusiastically received. An extra show with added short subjects was run to take care of the late crowd. Business was excellent.

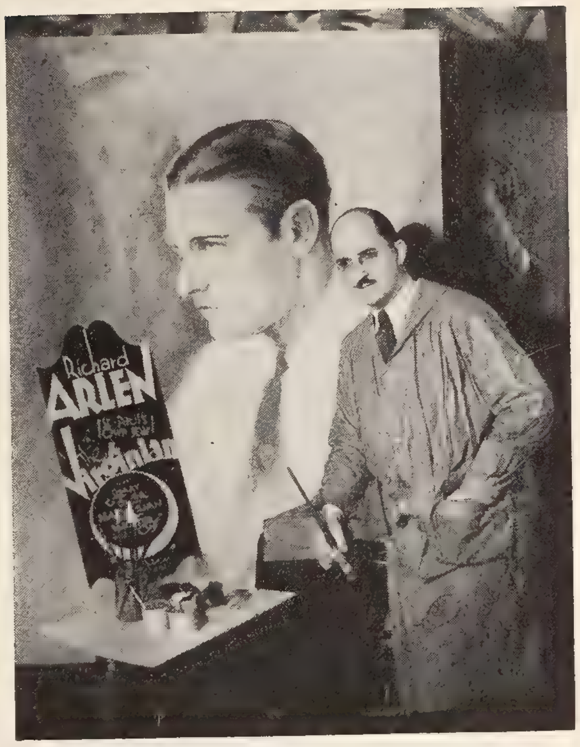
Novel Giveaway Gag!

It's also a bit late to report on "Red-Headed Woman," but we're doing so in order to bring out the effectiveness of a piece of novelty advertising and an oft-used little line which appeared at the bottom of a card enclosed in an envelope. Copy on envelope read: "Wives and Sweethearts Beware of the Red Headed Woman." Inside it read: "The Picture Every Married Woman Should See" and other copy on film, theatre and playdate. At the bottom in small type appeared: "This Picture Will Not Be of Interest to Children. Please Do Not Bring Them."

He exploited "Fugitive" with a three-sheet panel of all the newspaper write-ups and small title card in the center, with each write-up outlined in red. Pink and green "extra" copies gave additional color to the display, which occasioned considerable comment from patrons.

At the time we received this report Stroud was working on a Style Revue and Personality Hair-Dress combination, of which we'll tell you more when details arrive. He planned to use nine models in a tie-up with a beauty salon and other merchants, all expenses to be paid for by the several concerns. He also has other important merchandising angles in mind and we hope he'll send along full details of the entire campaign next time we hear from him.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!



Looking after the poster-art needs of a division as widespread and large as the Publix-Northwest Division is by no means a small task, yet Gene Hundredmark holds down that spot and does himself credit, too.

We were fortunate in digging up the photo illustrated here, which gives us the opportunity of showing you not only Gene himself, but one of the impressive, seat-selling posters which are a regular occurrence in Minneapolis.

In the past when the various house managers of this division contributed their individual showmanship activities we had many occasions of admiring the fine poster-art work being used, especially in the Minneapolis-St. Paul sections, but we did not know who was the creater of their art work. This special edition brings to light the information we long desired.

We are hopeful that this edition will mark the first step in regular contributions of art work from Gene Hundredmark. Since he is so well known among other theatre artists we feel sure that they will welcome the opportunity of seeing his art work regularly. Come on, Gene, catch some of that "All For One and One For All" spirit; it will bring you the recognition you so well deserve for your fine work.

LOBBY NOVELTY WAS BIG AID TO KAPLAN WHEN SELLING 'RAIN'

A small lobby novelty, so different and compelling that it obtained newspaper publicity on "Rain," was turned out by Manager Harry Kaplan and his staff at the Paramount Theatre, St. Paul, Minn.

The display consisted of a reproduction of one of the sets in "Rain" constructed of odds and ends promoted from a local floral shop.

Water running from a fountain spray set behind the advertising copy just above the display created the effect of real rain falling on the cottage. Even a small parrot within a cage in the cottage was complete in all detail.

Needless to say, the display sold people on the fact that Joan Crawford in "Rain" would soon be shown at the Paramount.

McCREARY HAS PAPER ALL STEAMED UP ON INSTITUTIONAL IDEA

One of the best ways we know of to give you a line on Billy McCreary, city manager for Publix in Hibbing, Minn., is to comment on the newspaper editorial mention his theatres receive from time to time as to their value as public institutions.

One of two editorials before us rated the lead and dwelt extensively upon the moral a forthcoming film, "Prosperity," could convey to audiences. Another was headed "Hotels and Theatres" and pointed out that both institutions meant a great deal more to cities than mere commercial enterprises, mentioning a leading hotel and the two theatres in charge of McCreary. It further recommended that citizens patronize both.

When his friends up in the Northwest discuss Billy they openly compare his qualifications as a theatre man with the importance of Hibbing's open pit iron mine, which is considered the greatest of its kind in the world. Likewise, they think McCreary is the biggest little showman in the world.

He might be termed a member of the old vaudeville school, although he's just turned his thirtieth year. Be that as it may, he was trained by old-timers who believed that to be a showman one must act and live like one. And they tell us that's just what Mack does; so successfully, in fact, that his houses radiate personality, and personality is a great tonic for the box office. But don't get us wrong. It isn't himself that he's stressing; it's his theatres, first and foremost, as evidenced by results at the box office.

CLUB MEDAL TO ABE SONOSKY FOR SPACE ON CLASSIFIED GAGS

When it comes to using classified page tie-ups for the promotion of free space one of the Club's special Croix de Guerres will have to be handed to Abe Sonosky, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D. There's no telling off hand just how much space Abe promoted in the past six months without getting out our rule, but it must have amounted to hundreds of inches. Following are a few of the gags he used to make his fine showing:

For one he used the gag of scattering citizens' names among the different ads, with a large box calling attention to award of guest tickets and mention of current attraction. Another consisted of a "Whoozit" contest, conducted along practically the same lines as the Xmas Shopping Guide promoted by E. V. Siebel at the Capitol Theatre in St. Paul. This tie-up featured a questionnaire box in which readers were asked "where they could buy" certain advertised articles. It was necessary, of course, to comb through the page in order to dig out the answers. Guest tickets and other awards were offered for best solutions.

For a stunt to sell "As You Desire Me" he scattered among the many ads on the page 10 which carried portions of a synopsis of the picture. The gag was to find and assemble them in proper order and participate in the awards. Others consisted of scattering the letters spelling "Horsefeathers" among the different ads; a reproduction of a jig-saw puzzle scene from "Tess of Storm Country," and a large display ad secured through a tie-up with an electric refrigerator dealer, arranged by giving display space for one of the machines in the theatre lobby.

VARIETY OF STUNTS USED BY CHAS. ZINN TO SELL THE UPTOWN

Among District Manager Mike Mayen's skippers of downtown and suburban theatre operation in St. Paul and Minneapolis is Charles Zinn, manager of the Uptown Theatre and another live wire of the Publix Northwest Division whose show-selling activities will certainly be of interest to all his fellow showmen in this organization.

Starting at the top of the list, we note that the Uptown's Boys and Girls Club is in a flourishing condition and apparently kept that way by regular Saturday meetings at the theatre. Awards are promoted for members, shows are made possible by talent within the ranks and picnics and races are held during the proper seasons of the year. At Xmas time the promotion of two "Lionel" electric trains for give-aways proved a most popular stunt. Zinn uses the conventional Club card to gain his membership.

Another annual give-away stunt and one which is generally put over in the spring is the award of a fine saddle horse, particularly popular out in the Twin Cities because of local interest in riding. In addition to having a rider parade the streets, contest for naming the horse, etc., there are many angles here for exploitation. The local riding academy furnishes the horse gratis in lieu of advertising and interest aroused in the sport. This stunt, we understand, has turned out to be one of the most profitable ones ever used in Zinn's town.

Other activities include the promotion of an oil burner through a tie-up with a local concern which furnished a sound truck and a fine display of the apparatus; a photograph gag, in which a panorama shot is taken of children in front of the theatre and portions later shown on the screen in order to award guest tickets to those appearing in the shot, and the added attraction of a band act for "High School Week" during the football season.

Kiddie Revues and Style Shows also claim Zinn's attention and both of these stunts were successfully staged a short time ago. The Kiddie Revue is another annual attraction and is generally held during Xmas week at no expense to the theatre. His Style Show was also cost-free and particularly successful this last season because of choosing girls from sororities to act as models and "most beautiful girls on campus."

It's easy to conclude that Zinn and his staff are very much on the job when it comes to promoting cost-free attractions for their house and we'll hope to pass along a lot more information concerning the Uptown in the weeks to come. We have his word to Charlie Winchell that he'll send along more dope if the Club needs it.

JUST IN CASE——!

Every possible effort was made to use all material contributed for this special edition, but it is just possible (even if we hope not), that some little bit may have been lost in the shuffle. In which case we crave your indulgence and hope you will believe us when we say it was not done deliberately.

There have been few special sections that we enjoyed working on more than this because the material was unusually fine for our department. If those who contributed will continue to send in their activities in the future we will know that our pages will be worth reading more than ever before.

FLYING D. M.!

"Speed" French!

That nickname, tied to District Manager Harry French of the Southern Minnesota territory of the Minnesota Amusement Company some months ago, has proved a boomerang on the boys who pinned it on Harry.

For the current issue of one of the aviation magazines lists the name of Harry B. French as a full fledged airplane pilot with several hundred hours of time to his credit.

A close investigation by your reporter proves that for the past year Harry has been sneaking to the Mankato airport every moment that a district manager has to spare, to put in solo time in his Curtiss Robin. And about two months ago, District Manager French won his wings, thus becoming the only flying D. M. we know of.

French is a veteran of Northwest show business, first operating his own theatre in Mankato, Minn.; then joining the old F. & R. territory as district manager, a post he has held continuously through all managements of that division.

AL SMITH ON TOUR!

On To Havana!

No, not the Al you think but Al Smith of Winona, Minn., manager of the State Theatre there. He, Ray Niles and Harry French planned to take a vacation in Havana this year but, owing to tough times, a payless vacation, etc., the trio was held to the antique hack pictured above. Instead of basking along the Prado, Al went out and posted bills.

KELLY AND KAPLAN SOLD 'LIVE MUSIC' WITH BIG CAMPAIGN

When M. P. Kelly and Harold Kaplan, respectively publicity manager and manager of the Paramount Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., completed plans for the building up of an indefinite engagement of Lou Breese and his orchestra at the theatre, they launched a campaign which would have done credit to even a more elaborate program.

Local editors, merchants and civic organizations were all sold the idea that the return of a band to the theatre would mean much to all concerned and efforts in this direction were greeted with a veritable landslide of cooperation.

The newspaper devoted editorial space to the importance of employing "live" musicians in a time when mechanical devices threatened to wreck the livelihoods of those engaged in orchestra work and front-page mention was made of St. Paul officials attending the opening program, together with a statement that theatre parties would be arranged by many local merchants.

Several papers devoted columns of free space to the move, carried cartoons featuring the orchestra leader and published photos of him and other members from time to time. A visit of Breese and his band to the State Hospital for Crippled Children was good for another two-column story and photo. A German language paper also carried generous publicity on the event.

A flock of newspaper tear sheets at hand offer additional evidence of cooperation among many merchants. All ads ranging up to a page in size carried lines at the top to plug the new attraction, such as "Welcome Back Lou Breeze; Let's All Turn Out to Greet Lou Breeze," etc.

We have good authority for stating that the above was one of the largest publicity campaigns ever given a band leader in the Northwest and it offers evidence of what can be done in this direction when a couple of energetic showmen decide to let the whole town know a new attraction is on the way. They picked out their strongest selling points, chose the best mediums of expression and then went to work.

CONSTRUCTING THE PROGRAM!

by BARRY BURKE, Twin City District Manager

VARIETY, speed and balance must be worked into every program presented in a sound theatre. If one of the elements above is lacking the program as a whole will be flat. Patrons may not realize what is wrong with the show, but they will leave the theatre feeling that they have not been properly entertained.

For instance, a simple rule in program construction often overlooked by the average manager, is that in the majority of instances it is smartest to send patrons out of the theatre with happy thoughts in their minds. That is why, when we play heavy screen tragedies, with tragic endings we often close our shows with a cartoon or novelty.

My procedure in program construction usually works along the following lines: First, I decide upon my feature picture (which, after all, must be the backbone of the entertainment), and I then try to select the short subjects to fit around the feature, keeping in mind contrast—color—speed. Generally, it is impossible to see your newsreel before your program is to open; therefore, we have to assume that we will be able to have in the newsreel a novelty, a thrill, humor and items of news interest. Assuming that the newsreel contains the above, and that the feature picture is light drama, I would then try to select a cartoon (similar to a Betty Boop, Mickey Mouse, Krazy Kat, or Bosko) for my second unit on the program. For the third unit, I would try to select a subject in color, preferably a band act, or a subject with plenty of song and music in it. For the fourth unit, I would try to select a comedy (as an example, a Laurel & Hardy, or a Pitts & Todd), to be followed immediately by the feature picture.

I am sure you can appreciate how difficult it is to try to put in an article all the points that are necessary to consider in good program construction. Nevertheless, I feel you will gather that, in my opinion, it is necessary to have speed, contrast, color, humor, romance, music, in the proper construction of the straight sound picture program.

STEADY ADVERTISING EFFORT RESPONSIBLE FOR NILES' GROSSES

Constant merchandising and advertising effort are responsible to a large extent for the satisfactory grosses turned in at the Lawler Theatre, Rochester, Minn., by Ray Niles, city manager, and his able assistants, Don Frederickson and Harry Salisbury.

Perhaps in no other city in the country is it so necessary to watch advertising and merchandising details so closely. Yet Niles and assistants are able to capitalize on every major stunt offered by the industry as a whole. The best proof of this is the fact that on "Prosperity" Niles prepared a special page of cooperative advertising that brought in over 1,200 replies.

More than 10 per cent of the population. That's getting results! The accompanying photo (Ray doesn't know this is in circulation) shows Niles himself, seated before his desk with the answers mentioned above. The lettering at the left is Charlie Winchell's.

AIL OF INE IS ETTING
OO BIG:
W'S YOURS?

Another stunt of interest was a clever bit of publicity obtained on "The Island of Lost Souls." One of the Rochester entrants, Miss Catherine Witte, received a letter from Kathleen Burke, winner. Niles had the girl hold this letter until just before the picture played his theatre, then sold the newspaper the idea of reproducing it as a local feature.

Niles and his staff constitute another important link in the Publix Northwest Division and we'll join with the rest in wishing him continued success with his job. We'll be looking for further word from Ray.

BERRESON PROMOTED VALUABLE PUBLICITY FOR FOOTBALL FILM

Much valuable newspaper publicity was secured on "All American" by H. F. Berreson, manager of the Strand Theatre, Minot, S. D., by sponsoring a meeting to decide what players on the several local football teams have rendered the most effective services during the past season.

He timed his guest party at the theatre for the leading squads on the night following a dinner given the players by the principal of the local high school, during which plaques were presented to those chosen by the appointed committees. As the result of this publicity the picture played to two packed houses on off nights.
